"SMACKING STRONGLY"

THE querulous New Republic has been out looking at newsreels, resulting in a finding that the "five standard brands" are made up with militaristic scenes covering 10.4 percent of all items shown and only "ten shots, 3.3 percent of all that could be construed as pacifist in effect."

It is too much to expect that the New Republic would understand that pacifism does not photograph, whereas armies and navies and the pageantry of war machines present great pictorial punch.

If the pallid pundits of that esteemed publication were to engage in really exhaustive research into the evidences of the newsreels from the beginning, their percentage tables would tend to show that chief activity of public figures has all down the years been the laying of corner stones, that the dominant public spectacle pastime of the people has been fires, and that ships are built mainly to be launched. They would find that the principal result of child welfare movements has been to supply baby parades, and likely they would also deduce that the bathing suit is worn practically always everywhere by all pretty girls south of Charleston and west of the Rockies.

The New Republic's notions about the motion picture carry about the same authenticity as a two volume work on prehistoric man based on the evidences of the handle of a busted clay water jug.

It appears that we are indebted for this, and much other current attention of a kindred nature, to the excitements inspired, created and promoted by "The March of Time" journal of the screen, sometimes called a newsreel. The New Republic finds that "its fifth newsreel edition suddenly went off in a strange and ominous direction, smacking strongly of fascist propaganda. . . ."

Two words in that line of comment are correct: "smacking strongly." Time's screen efforts are colored and controlled by exactly the same tastes and motivations as the printed pages of Time and its gaudy vanity-book-of-business supplement, Fortune. "Smacking strongly," at or least smacking as strongly as they can, is the dominant characteristic of their output. They are just natural-born strong smackers, exponents of teleological development of the wise-crack.

The "March of Time" smacks much more strongly of an effort to sell some film than it does of an effort to sell fascism or any other ism.

It has been inevitable that the impact of the Time idea on the screen would be accompanied by some degree of disturbance. If it had not achieved disturbance it would have been automatic failure and several smart young fellows would have been chagrined extremely.

It is now fairly apparent that Time, the magazine, Time the radio and Time the movie, are all expressions of the same fresh exploring spirit, emboldened by success with the printed page, piqued perhaps by discovery that radio success is but an advertising decoration representing attainment of the order of a pretty leg serving a hosiery vendor, and anticipating new conquest on the screen.

The very pretty consequence is that both the screen, anxious to steer a pleasantly profitable and undisputed course of comfort, and the critics of the screen with its current identification with the status quo ante of American business, should be excited by this invasion of Time.

Newsreels and their neutrality on the one hand, or their service to friendly special causes or personages, on the other, for years have been at times a subject of concern to the industry's public relations department. Now with "The March of Time" leading a trend toward the presentation of screen material of viewpoint, if not opinion, a whole set of problems looms. The problem is not what the pictures may stand for, but that they may stand for anything.

The motion picture theatre as the servant of the millions has never been able to afford opinion, attitude, ideas—anything but sheer entertainment pabulum. If product of opinion is produced with sufficient persistence and skill it may make a theatre for itself. That has little to do with the immediate now—which is the precise period about which the motion picture industry persists in being most concerned.

TOO PROMISING

SOME ambitious forecasting concerning the art of the screen is being done, mostly by laymen, and some of it exuded the other day at the Washington meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, with promises of stereoscopic screen images, along with color. It is to be observed that engineers and scientists never seriously consider stereoscopic pictures, without the intervention of a viewing device, any more than they do perpetual motion—for the same sort of reason.

After these many years, Mr. William Randolph Hearst, what with submitting to interviews and taking his pen in hand to write a few lines to editors, seems in a fair way toward getting a bit of publicity.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

Trial or Law

The Government's anti-trust suit against the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and the Music Publishers Protective Association may never be brought to trial. A high spokesman for the organized music interests bases that conclusion on the fact that the Government seeks to regulate the societies. Only Congress has the power of regulation, and it is predicted in film circles that such regulation will come.

Postponement of the trial from this week to January 7 means that the case will be continued indefinitely and eventually dismissed, he said.

Meanwhile film companies are strengthening their music company holdings by new acquisitions. And there are other developments in the music situation, as told in the story starting on page 13.

A Moratorium

A moratorium on films which "portray the activities of American gangsters in violent conflict with the law" has been declared by the producers at the request of Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, says an official MPPDA announcement.

The objective in adding such a prohibition to the Production Code was to prevent pictures showing violent gang warfare "from becoming disproportionate in number or over-emphasized in treatment," explains the MPPDA.

It is also related that Mr. Hays has been strongly commended for his request to avoid "the glamorous use of liquor" in films, and an explanation is given for the change in title of "Snatched" to "Show Them No Mercy," a Darryl Zanuck production for Twentieth Century-Fox. See page 27.

Up to Distributors

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America suddenly placed on the shoulders of distributors the responsibility for enacting a mutual plan to correct trade abuses, and extended its move for obtaining home rule to adjudicate disputes, controversies, irritations and friction in motion picture trade relations, by advancing to the distributors either one of two courses: (1) taking voluntary action to alleviate a troublesome situation; or, (2) refusing to work out a solution and taking the consequences of possible Government control.

And while the MPTOA was broadcasting from headquarters in New York a plea for immediate action, members of state exhibitor organizations were meeting to work out their own immediate problems in Indiana, Wisconsin, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, California and Washington.

Exhibitor organization activities of the week were quite pronounced, and are detailed on page 17.

Echoes

William Randolph Hearst's announcement of last week that California's "confiscatory" income taxes are compelling him to move to New York was not without repercussions in Hollywood, where it was freely predicted that motion picture executives and stars in the higher income brackets would follow him.

Too, invitations started pouring into the production capital from eastern states to bring their studios to their doors.

Hearst sympathizers were more numerous than those native California sons whose booster spirit was aroused, but the Hearst sympathizers were not nearly so vociferous.

The situation that has been created by Mr. Hearst's decision is described on page 41.

Campus Radicals

Students at several colleges are mixing agitation with intellectual pursuits in campaigning against "Red Salute," which they claim ridicules campus anti-war and radical movements. There was high excitement at the University of Kansas, and at Yale, Penn State and Tulane University certain groups join the protest.

The Reds are demanding freedom of the screen for Soviet propaganda films while at the same time they would deny the privilege to American films which they dislike. See page 16.

A Frankenstein

Word from New England that double features in that section, their cradle, are generally disliked by exhibitors, came this week at the same time that Edward L. Golden, Republic's sales manager, was estimating that the practice is growing, especially in small towns, to the points where today there are no less than 8,000 theatres operating under such a policy. These and other double bill developments are reported on page 42.

Showing Profit

There was a cheerier atmosphere hovering around the executive floor of Warner Brothers home office near New York's film row, as the corporation determined that operations for 1934-35 will show a profit, as against a loss of $2,530,000 in 1933-34.

Too, a minority stockholders suit has been settled and plans layed for holding a stockholders' meeting on December 9th, at which the management is to be elected to majority control of the board of directors. See page 34.

Paramount's official family, east and west, jubilant over the reaction to "Hands Across the Table," first production in which the clever hand of Ernst Lubitsch has been stretched across the studio from purchase to finished product, see in this motion picture a pace-setter for new quarter production. Mr. Gus McCarthy, whose "showman's review" appeared in the HERALD issue of October 19, said at that time that "the show is potentially promising of exploding into a box-office surprise," a view in which the preview audience concurred. It's only seven months ago that Mr. Lubitsch was chosen to be the company's managing director of production.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Two Theatres in One

Two theatres in one auditorium is the feature of the new Bexley theatre, a neighborhood house recently opened in Columbus, Ohio. A wall has been built running down the center of the building, splitting the screen into two halves which are both served from the same projection room in the rear.

The projection equipment and sound, invented by Theodore Lindenberg, is the result of fifteen years of experiment. No acoustical material is used in the theatre and one or both of the auditoriums can be used as required.

Bert Williams, head of a Columbus radio broadcasting station, is president of the company operating the house.

Meeting Quota

American companies in England are stepping forward actively to meet the production demands that the new rigid quota provisions are prompting. Universal, first to act, has plans for studio expansion entailing an expenditure of $650,000.

General Theatres Equipment, following a sharp write-off under its reorganization plan, shows a substantial profit in its latest financial statement.

Other news from Bruce Allan, the HERALD'S London correspondent, appears on page 68.

Schaefer Move?

George J. Schaefer, vice-president and a director of Paramount Pictures in charge of distribution, may relinquish his present duties in the near future to take over operation of a Paramount theatre circuit, MOTION PICTURE DAILY said Thursday. That Mr. Schaefer has been considering such a move was stated on good authority to be a fact, although no definite arrangements or agreement has been arrived at as yet.

A report which, however lacks confirmation, has Mr. Schaefer assuming operating charge of Paramount theatres in New England, where the company's principal theatre unit is the Mullin and Pinansky circuit, which might be augmented later under Mr. Schaefer's direction by the Olympia circuit, following its reorganization. Credence is added to this report by the fact that Mr. Schaefer obtained his early experience in the industry in the New England area and has maintained his contacts there since.

Another report, likewise unconfirmed, has Mr. Schaefer taking over operation of the Paramount Northwest Theatres, of which the principal unit is the former Finkelstein and Rubin circuit, with headquarters in St. Paul. The Paramount partnership with Hamm and Charles under which this circuit was operated formerly was ended September 28th, and since then L. J. Ludwig and John J. Friedl have been operating the unit under home office supervision.

Mr. Schaefer's attitude is authoritatively said to be favorable toward a theatre operating arrangement, and if an agreement such as is now in prospect materializes, he would resign from his present offices, it is said, but would continue his relations in the Paramount family. Mr. Schaefer is now in St. Louis at the trial of the federal conspiracy action against Warners, Paramount and RKO.

Stage Source Wanes

Eighteen Hollywood producers in September purchased some 91 stories for 1935-36 production, closely approaching the all-time April record of 100 purchases.

Many of the new purchases were outstanding contributions of producers and publishers at the beginning, last Labor Day, of the new show and book publishing season. A complete list of all acquisitions starts on page 39.

May Drop Suit

The action of Eva Fox and the All-Continent Corporation charging officers and directors fo the Fox Film Corporation with dissipation of the company's assets through the merger with Twentieth Century may be abandoned, it was indicated over last weekend by attorneys for the plaintiffs.

Mrs. Fox, the wife of William Fox and reputedly owner of a controlling interest in All-Continent, an investment corporation holding Fox securities, was granted leave some time ago to conduct an examination of the principal defendants in advance of trial of her action. The defendants include Sidney R. Kent, W. C. Michel, former Senator David O. Hastings and officers of the Chase National Bank. No move has been made as yet to begin these examinations and it was stated at the offices of Hirsch, Newman, Reass and Becker, attorneys for William Fox, that not only have no definite plans been made to summon the defendants for questioning, but that it was not unlikely that the entire action might be permitted to lapse. It was added that, among other reasons, the condition of Mr. Fox, who is undergoing treatment in a Toronto hospital, was a factor contributing to this possibility.

Commended

Typical of the commendation expressed by the financial press for the cutting down of the $3,239,828 bill presented by lawyers and committees in the Paramount receivership case was the observation of the Scripps-Howard newspapers that Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe's order "struck a blow in favor of those exploited persons" known as security holders.

The Hearst newspapers, too, warmly praised Judge Coxe's action, declaring that, "If other courts follow the lead of Judge Coxe, a new day has arrived for security holders in bankrupt concerns."

These and other Paramount developments are reported on page 28.

Defense Innings

Counsel for Warner Brothers, Paramount and RKO, this week were presenting their defense arguments against the Government charge of conspiracy in the trial at St. Louis.

The court refused to direct the jury to return a verdict of not guilty after days of argumentation on the defense attorneys' petitions.

Details of the progress of the trial appear on page 47 and following pages.

Brazilian Merger

Merger of the exhibition forces of Luiz Severiano Ribeiro and the Companhia Brasileira in Brazil has raised a critical problem among the smaller exhibitors, writes the HERALD correspondent at Rio de Janeiro. Independent theatremen are unable to get the better product, he says, and must pay high prices for what they can obtain.

There are only six first-run theatres for Rio de Janeiro's population of two millions, and these six, with less than 10,000 seating capacity, according to the correspondent, are inadequate in the light of American theatre standards. The story is on page 69.

Gain in Germany

Despite sharp competition from the studios in England, American pictures are retaining their lead in the German market, writes J. K. Rutenberg, the HERALD'S correspondent in Berlin.

Increased attendance at the theatres is noted as the new season gathers steam, and the studios also are showing greater activity. Mr. Rutenberg's resume is on page 67.

This Week in Pictures

REACHING. Are Carole Lombard and Fred MacMurray in, mayhap, a demonstration of their aspirations toward love and riches in their current Paramount picture, "Hands Across the Table," which was selected to head this week's new bill at the New York Paramount.

SOME FUN, EH, KIDS? Bringing their own sound effects, these youngsters out-ganged Our Gang at their opening of Hal Roach's MGM comedy, "Our Gang Follies of 1936" at the Capitol in New York. Paternalistically participating is Victor Moore, stage star.

ACTION! CAMERA! And it took an alert still photographer and a pretty fast shutter to catch Anita Louise in full flight toward an oncoming tennis ball. Result: A fascinating bit of portraiture showing the Warner featured player at play on the studio courts. "Enemy of Man" is her current picture.

LEADING A DOG'S LIFE. Isn't so bad if you're Buck, who, following his success in "Call of the Wild," has been given a five-year contract by 20th Century-Fox. He is shown here "lunching" with a fellow contract player, Alice Faye, at the studio. "The Country Beyond" is Buck's next picture.

MAKING UP THE DIFFERENCE. Joan Barrie is enough like her sister to be Mona's stand-in. But one deficiency: Six inches too short. The solution? Easy—a pair of balsam wood sandals six inches thick. Here's Joan strapping 'em on at 20th Century-Fox for a scene in "Kid Burlesque," with Mona's moral assistance.

HEAD OF THE UNSEEN CAST. An interestingly posed and composed camera portrait in which a Universal still photographer realizes many of the dramatic values of two crafts—his own and that of his subject, a director. It is a study of Edward Sutherland, whose recent work for Universal includes "Diamond Jim" and "Song of Joy."

EXPERT INSTRUCTION. Was arranged for June Travis in preparation for her role in Warners' "Ceiling Zero," and this without calling on the opposite sex, Amelia Earhart being engaged. Here teacher is shown telling June something about the law of gravity.

BRITISH DISTRIBUTORS CONVENE. Delegates to the convention of First National Film Distributors, Ltd., as they met at Blackpool, England, to discuss organization and general trade problems. Illness prevented the presence of D. E. Griffiths, managing director.

WORTH LOOKING INTO. Those eyes of Margaret Lindsay, Warner player, which brighten this study by Ferenc. She's now making "Personal Maid's Secret."

A THIRD BEERY. Son of Noah, nephew of Wallace. Noah, Jr., is he, whose role of a waif in Universal's "Stormy" is winning current attention from reviewers.

ANOTHER RAY. Being the 18-year-old sister of Charles Ray, star of many silent pictures. She is shown with Henry Hathaway, director of Paramount's "Peter Ibbetson," in which, with a small role, Miss Ray will make her screen debut.

FROM ENGLAND. Mrs. Mark Ostrer, wife of the chairman of Gaumont British, arriving in New York for the premiere of GB's "Transatlantic Tunnel" at the Roxy.

U. S. PLAN TO DROP SUIT SEEN BY MUSIC INDUSTRY

Delaying of Trial to January 7th Called Indication That Government Does Not Intend to Resume Action

Expectation of Legislation at Next Session Discourages Increased Royalty Charges; MGM Buys L. Feist Company

Postponement of the Government antitrust suit against the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and the Music Publishers Protective Association from November 4 to January 7 was cited as positive proof by organized music interests in New York that the Government is not sure of its ground and never expects to bring the case to trial.

A high executive of the defendant music industry revealed this week that at a conference between counsel for ASCAP, the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, the Department of Justice and Federal Judge Henry W. Goddard, who heard the start of the trial last June, there were brought out certain definite indications pointing strongly that the Government does not intend to resume the proceedings which had been cut short last summer and scheduled to resume November 4th.

Even before the trial was begun last summer serious doubt was expressed by Judge Goddard that a United States district court was the proper agency to accomplish the Government's aims. At the outset of the trial, Andrew Bennett, special assistant United States attorney general (now definitely out of the case), informed the court that the government did not seek dissolution of the Society but that it wanted to bring about regulation, especially with regards to the fees. Judge Goddard at that time pointed out that the courts had no power to regulate but agreed to proceed with the case to develop further information on what the Government was attempting to achieve.

See Legislative Move

Film company attorneys also recently pointed out that the Government was on the wrong track in seeking regulation through the courts since that power was vested only in Congress. Their view is, however, that federal regulation of music is sure to come and that legislation to this effect may be introduced in the next session of Congress. (HERALD, October 12.)

The Government's prosecution was chiefly at the instance of broadcasting companies whose fee for performing rights was increased by ASCAP last fall from 3 per cent of the gross revenue from commercial programs to 5 per cent. It also resulted partly from the pressure brought to bear on Congressmen by exhibitors who felt they were being oppressed by ASCAP or who had been sued for infringement of copyright.

25 PER CENT INCREASE IN MUSICIANS' JOBS

Employment of musicians in the motion picture theatres in the United States has increased 25 per cent this year over 1934, the New England Conference of the American Federation of Musicians was told this week at Hartford, Conn.

Fred W. Birnbach of New York, assistant to Joseph N. Weber, international president of the Federation, made this disclosure.

At the same time, he said, total attendance at film theatres which have no stage entertainment has dropped 25 per cent, patronage being lost to night clubs which feature floor shows. He did not explain the basis for his figures.

These same forces, it is predicted by attorneys for motion picture companies, will bring about federal regulation, with the legislation recently enacted in several states merely a forerunner to action to be taken in Washington.

The date of January 7 set for resumption of the trial in the United States district court in New York is merely tentative, and is subject to a conference between opposing counsel with the judge two weeks in advance. A factor in the postponement was the overcrowded condition of the court calendar, it was said, and the same reason may force another continuance.

This explanation is in contrast to earlier word from Washington that no postponement of the trial would be acceptable to the Government and that the issue is considered of such importance as to make a quick decision most desirable. The broadcasters, theatre owners and music users generally are also eager for an early decision.

The view of the music interests, as expressed in high quarters, is that the postponement is merely a face-saving gesture, and that several avenues are open to the Government by which a trial can be avoided. For one thing, the case can be delayed indefinitely until it dies of inanition, finally to be dismissed altogether.

The purpose of the original postponement was to give counsel for the opposing sides time in which to agree on stipulations which would speed up the trial. However, the government only recently submitted the stipulations it wants the music societies to accept, and considerable time will be required before an agreement can be reached. The stipulation has no relation to a decision or a consent decree, but is simply a report of certain facts to which both sides agree. The effect is to place these facts in the court record—as facts—without the necessity of calling witnesses to prove them.

While the primary purpose of a stipulation is thus to place the court quickly in possession of pertinent facts, it frequently happens that the way is cleared for the negotiation of a consent decree, through affirmation in the stipulation of the Government's charges. However, the defendants are objecting to many of the Government's stipulations on which a consent decree might conceivably be based.

Meanwhile the existence of the case on the docket and the threat of legislation are proving effective discouragement to any thoughts of ASCAP to increase the royalties to users of music. While E. C. Mills, general manager of ASCAP, said this week he favored an increase in rates to exhibitors, radio stations and others, intimating that additional revenue would solve many of the Society's internal problems, at the same time he said there were no plans underway for an increase. New contracts are being negotiated with broadcasters for a five-year period beginning January 1, on the existing schedule of fees. This process has been slow because the broadcasters had been awaiting a decision in the antitrust action.

"Tin Pan Alley" Vanishing

While ASCAP looks with considerable trepidation on the acquisition of music publishing concerns by motion picture companies, which already control some of the most important properties in the field, American film companies are on the way to almost complete domination of "tin pan alley," as the industry embracing the composing and publishing of music is known.

Purchase of substantially the entire capital stock of Leo Feist, Inc., by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, announced this week, is further indication of the trend, and caused New York music circles to wonder whether MGM, in adding to its holdings, is seeking to rival Warner in the extent of its music properties. While the purchase price was not announced, it is generally credited as between $400,000 and $450,000.

At the same time developments were awaited within the music industry itself as a result of a members' meeting of the Society at the Astor hotel in New York on Thursday, when the Government's action, Warner's demand for more revenue and its threat to withdraw from ASCAP, a proposed new classification system and other important matters were expected to be debated.

New Income Distribution Plan

The publishers' classification committee of ASCAP on Tuesday reported a plan which it presumes will meet Warner's objections to the present method of distributing income from collections of royalty fees. The plan provides largely for basing the income participation on the number of times a publisher's compositions are played, rather than the present arbitrary system. Other points such as seniority, availability of catalogue for performance and standing of the members would, however, be retained, it is understood. Louis Bernstein, vice-president of ASCAP and chairman of the committee, said he believed the proposed method would remove Warner's opposition, but that it is merely tentative.

A directors' meeting of the Society was held on Wednesday in advance of the semi-annual members' meeting the following day.

Commenting on the trend pointing to eventual control of the music industry by motion picture interests, Edgar F. Bitner, president of Leo Feist, Inc., who announced the sale to MGM, said:

"We felt very strongly that in the absence of film material it is very difficult to make both ends meet. In fact, it is impossible to exist without a motion picture tieup. I can say that now, frankly, but would have insisted otherwise before the deal was consummated."

Originally, it is pointed out, the large film companies initiated the series of music company acquisitions to avoid paying excessive prices for the use of music in recording. Later they added other properties to consolidate their holdings and also because they found it profitable to do so. Today Warner, MGM, Paramount and Fox control among them the bulk of the more important music firms.

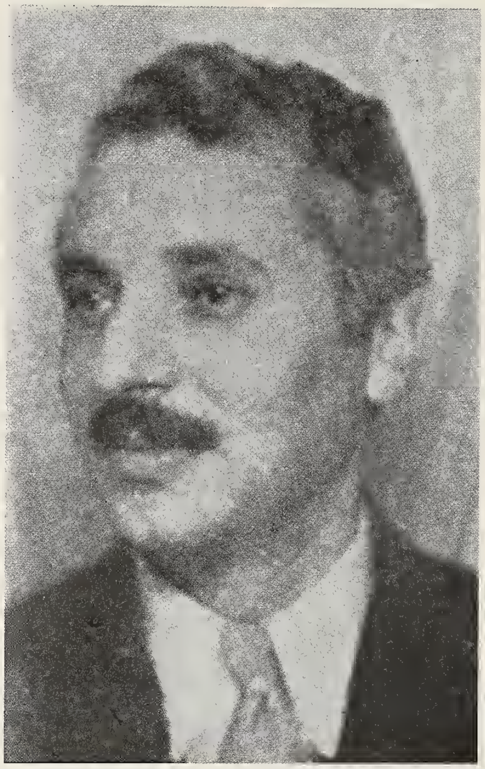
Obviously, a film-controlled publishing house is in a position to exploit its compositions on the screen and in other ways than an independent does not possess, and the competition to independent publishers has proved so strong that such large "outside" firms as Mills Music, Inc., and Crawford Music Corporation for months have been seeking a purchaser in the motion picture industry.

Large Revenues Cited

Another reason for the large purchases is indicated in the revenues. The three major Warner holdings—Harms, Inc., M. Witmark & Sons and Remick Music Corporation—representing a purchase investment, according to Warner, of $9,000,000, last year received from ASCAP alone $330,000, not to speak of fees from film and phonograph recording. In addition, the sale of sheet music is still no inconsiderate item, especially in the case of a picture which produces a hit tune.

MGM's original investment of $75,000 in Robbins Music Corporation, for a 51 per cent interest, has netted several times that amount in earnings in the last five years, according to reliable report.

Hollywood Manager



BOONE MANCALL, of the New York office of Quigley Publications, has been appointed to succeed Victor M. Shapiro, resigned, as manager of the Hollywood Bureau of Quigley Publications as of November 2nd.

The chief reason, however, is said to be not so much the matter of revenue as the building up of a catalogue for film production without having to resort to outside music wells.

MGM's purchase of Leo Feist, Inc., is one of the largest deals of its kind in recent years, bringing to the film company 10,000 compositions, 5,000 of which are susceptible to ASCAP performing rights. During its 38 years the company brought a wealth of outside acquisitions to its own repertoire.

Controlling interest was purchased from the estate of Leo Feist, the founder, from the widow and from employees who had been presented with blocks of stock by Mr. Feist. Felix Feist, general sales manager for MGM, a brother of the founder of the music company, was a member of the firm some 25 years ago and was in addition a song writer. Some of his numbers are still in demand.

The trend has continued almost without interruption toward the acquisition of publishing companies, one of the few exceptions being that Warner at one time disposed of DeSylva, Brown and Henderson to the Crawford firm.

Among the larger holdings are Paramount's Famous Music Corporation and Popular Melodies, Inc., a recently formed company operated in conjunction with Famous; Twentieth Century-Fox's Movietone Music Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary, and Sam Fox Publishing Company, and Warner's Music Publishing Holding Company. Warner by far has the largest music division, and now MGM gives promise of becoming a strong competitor. Universal, too, has music connections.

Broadening of Remick Music Corporation's activities was indicated with the appointment this week of Rocco Vocco as general manager. The company formerly was supervised by Edwin H. Morris, general manager of Warner's music division, and Art Schwartz, his assistant. Well-known in the professional branch of the music publishing business, Mr. Vocco was for 20 years with Leo Feist, Inc., in charge of the Chicago branch and later directing professional activities in New York. Subsequently he joined DeSylva, Brown and Henderson and recently was vice-president and general manager of Crawford Music Company.

Mr. Rocco also believes that film company control of music publishing is almost complete, and that a company not affiliated with a motion picture producing company has little likelihood of achieving a first-class rating.

Suits Continue

ASCAP continues to move against alleged infringements of its copyrights by reproducing its music without paying the royalty. The Society, through Gene Buck, its president, has filed suit for $2,500 damages at Wichita, Kan., against H. E. Campbell of the Nomar and O. F. Sullivan of the West in that city. The cases are scheduled for hearing in the federal court in the term starting this week.

ASCAP has obtained judgments of $250 against the Coral Gables Country Club in Miami, Fla., on each of three songs played without a license. A restaurant in Miami was ordered to pay a judgment of $250.

George Skouras Takes Over Four from U.A.

Because of the pressure of his new duties at the United Artists Distributing Corporation, Harry D. Buckley, vice-president and general manager of the United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., has relinquished some of his activities in the theatre field. Joseph M. Schenck, president of the company, has named George Skouras to represent the United Artists interests with full charge of operation of the Rivoli theatre on Broadway in New York and the three United Artists theatres that are situated in Detroit, Portland and Chicago.

Diversion Along the Beaten Path In Music of "Metropolitan"

Bravura Exposition of Tibbettian Talent but Oft-Told Story, Says O'Sullivan

by JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

THE romance of the ambitious opera singer is still with us and shows no immediate signs of abating.

Lawrence Tibbett brings his vibrant voice and prepossessing personality to the screen in "Metropolitan," the latest of the film musicals founded on the formula that has proved so remunerative when applied to stories build around gifted vocalists who leap from obscurity to fame on an operatic aria.

Mr. Tibbett accomplishes the feat with much enthusiasm and self-confidence, bounding from aria to aria in a crescendo of triumph that leaves no doubt of his ability to surmount any vocal hazards he may encounter. So apparent is his extraordinary gift for vocalizing that one wonders why he was ever relegated (in the story) to the chorus of the opera company.

From the very beginning when he takes you "On the Road to Mandalay" in high adventure, then detours to "De Glory Road" with the vocal clutch wide open, you feel certain that Tommy Renwick (Tibbett) will "knock 'em dead" if he ever gets his chance in the big opera. In fact, you wonder at the obtuseness of any impresario who wouldn't give him a starring role.

When Tommy Renwick resigns in high dudgeon from the chorus, telling the impresario right to his face that he will be sorry he rescinded his announcement to have Tommy sing Amonasro in "Aida," you know that Tommy will soon make good his threat. You know, too, that before his public triumph in the final scene there will be provided some choice scenes from operas in which the baritone will have the center of the stage.

In pursuing this charted course the producers have utilized three of the most popular and effective baritone arias in the operatic repertoire, the Largo al Factotum from "The Barber of Seville," the Toreador Song from "Carmen," and the Prologue from "Pagliacci," all of which Mr. Tibbett renders with much wealth of tone and artistic gusto.

FIGARO
la la la la la la la la

THE LARGO AL FACTOTUM, from Rossini's "The Barber of Seville", is another famous aria sung by Mr. Tibbett.

ESCAMILLO
Con voi ber af-fè mi fi-a ca- ro, coi
ESCAMILLO
mi-li-tar trat-tar da paro a par

THE TOREADOR SONG, from Bizet's "Carmen", is sung by Lawrence Tibbett in Twentieth Century-Fox's "Metropolitan."

The dramatic reason for introducing these famous arias concerns itself with the temperamental fits of a would-be prima donna, the eccentricities of an old maestro who is endeavoring to make a comeback with the baton, and the vagaries of two fellow members of the opera company who are enthusiastic boosters for the aspiring young baritone. The romantic interest is centered in a young lady of the company whose personality intrigues the ambitious Tommy and whose vocal gifts drive the cattish prima donna into spasms of rage and chagrin.

All this makes for a diverting form of entertainment, although tailored in a mode that is becoming stereotyped. It is also rapidly utilizing the melodic cream of the great lyric dramas to make a movie melange that, while delectable, is somewhat too rich for nutritive consumption. It is analogous to eating all the frosting off the cake and spoiling the appetite for the more substantial portion.

It would be gratifying to report that with such a superb artist as Mr. Tibbett and such colorful atmosphere as the vicissitudes of grand opera afford, the producers of "Metropolitan" had succeeded in making something a little farther removed from the routine type of movie-musical that has come to be accepted as the proper vehicle for some of our most gifted songbirds.

But "Metropolitan" brings to the screen nothing of significance in the advancement of musical-photoplay media. It provides settings for the bravura exposition of the talents of Mr. Tibbett while telling an oft-told story that supplies the background for operatic excerpts in which our most famous American operatic baritone proves he is just that. It gives the very gifted Miss Alice Brady the opportunity to demonstrate what a certain facetious philosopher meant when he defined "temperamental" as "ninety per cent temper and 10 per cent mental." It affords that fine actor, George Marion, Sr., a character role that might have stepped right out of the Thirty-ninth Street entrance of the Metropolitan; and it provides Luis Alberni with as volatile and entertaining a role as that he essayed in "One Night of Love."

From this latest of the major film musicals, it is evident that the producers and their songbirds must run the gamut of the favorite lyric gems of opera before we may reasonably expect something important to be done in the matter of musical photoplays.

Mr. Tibbett in a by-line article on "The Opera in Pictures," expresses some opinions that are far-fetched, so say the least. "Through the medium of the motion picture screen," he asserts, "our country is rapidly being made opera-conscious. Such pictures as 'Metropolitan' must inevitably have the effect of winning the confidence and interest of the public, and of familiarizing audiences with the stories on which operas are based."

How anyone can become familiar with the stories on which operas are based from such fragments and arias as those in "Metropolitan" and its predecessors of similar formula, is somewhat mystifying.

But when Mr. Tibbett, in the same article, says that in order to survive "opera must present its librettos in English, sung by artists who have learned to enunciate the English language simply and naturally," and that "in adapting it to the screen . . . the liberties of motion picture technique will be necessary," adding that "the main plot and music may be retained, but the action and background should be expanded in the same manner that scenario writers now adapt stage plays," he is on safe ground, and, incidentally, in accordance with views expressed by the writer in extenso in articles published in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD during the past four years.

REDS EXTEND DEMANDS FOR FREE SCREEN AS COLLEGES TAKE UP FIGHT

Campuses of Four Universities Echo Student Groups' Protest Against 'Red Salute' While Demanding Screen 'Freedom'

Radicals Seek National Issue of the Court's Refusal at Detroit to Enjoin Censor's Ban on "Youth of Maxim"

The intellectual atmosphere of several college campuses this week was spreading the agitation over "Red Salute," United Artists-Reliance picture which is being protested by Red-tinged and outright Red organizations as a satire on Communist activity in the halls of learning.

It also appeared that the Reds accepted the court action in Detroit upholding the censor's ban on "The Youth of Maxim" as a national issue and were rallying support for the Cinema Guild, whose permit to exhibit the Soviet-manufactured film was revoked after objection on the ground of Communistic propaganda was registered by civic and patriotic organizations and religious leaders.

The campaign this week against "Red Salute" first moved on to Penn State at State College, Pa., where the management of a local theatre is reported to have cancelled the film on demand of a petition signed by 500 students and 100 faculty members. A number of students volunteered to picket the theatre.

The cancellation forestalled a campaign planned by the Collegian, student newspaper, calling on students to boycott the picture.

Handbills at Kansas "U"

In Lawrence, Kan., the campus of the University of Kansas was thrown into a state of high excitement when handbills were distributed exhorting the student body to refrain from seeing "Red Salute," scheduled for the Dickinson theatre. The students' Peace Action Committee, representing the YMCA and other organizations, previously had conferred with Glen W. Dickinson, operator of the house, and entered their protests. A private screening later failed to change their disapproval.

After the circulars appeared, a delegation again called on Mr. Dickinson. He disclaimed responsibility for the broadside but, according to a report in the University Daily Kansan, admitted it was a "good publicity stunt." The campus newspaper quoted Mr. Dickinson as saying that he had conducted a thorough-going investigation and was convinced the idea was the concoction of some student or some competitor.

Former Employee Blamed

An investigation by the students and the police apparently cleared up the mystery, and Chief of Police Will Johns announced a former employee of the Dickinson circuit had the circulars printed and distributed, and that he would be arrested for passing out handbills without a permit in violation of the city ordinance.

The campus groups were considerably disturbed that the handbills had "stolen their thunder" and made it appear as though the liberal students were responsible for them, said the student paper.

COMPULSORY QUOTA LOOMS IN JAPAN

Cables received in New York over last weekend from Tokyo shed more light on the report current last week that restrictions against foreign pictures were on the way in Japan. It was learned that the police board in Tokyo was drawing up regulations making it compulsory for theatres there to show a percentage of Japanese-made pictures on each program.

Mr. Dickinson agreed to run a slide following "Red Salute" saying that the organizations at the University were in no way to be construed as the ones portrayed in the film. The incident gave rise to much local newspaper comment and some unfavorable reaction among the student leaders.

Among those protesting the film was Lyman Field, president of the Men's Student Council. After the mystery of the circulars had been soved, he issued a statement saying: "The use of such an underhanded method to promote a show is worse than a cheap publicity stunt. It is a disgrace to the community and an insult to the intelligence of the university students." Other published expressions were in similar vein.

Yale Students Try Boycott

Some attempt to organize a boycott against "Red Salute" at Warner's Roger Sherman theatre in New Haven was made by the National Students' League of Yale University. The local branch of the American League Against War and Fascism was active on the telephone, urging people not to attend. Despite this activity, business on the picture was excellent, it was reported.

"Red Salute" is going begging for a showing in New Orleans because exhibitors in the Louisiana metropolis have been threatened by the Reds. The Young Peoples Socialist League and some students at Tulane University are among the groups serving notice that a boycott would be instituted.

The American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars have offered to patrol any theatre showing "Red Salute," and it has been suggested that the veterans sponsor the exhibition in the Municipal auditorium.

Press Opinion Divided

Because of the alleged controversial character of "Red Salute," it has evoked wide comment in the press, including religious publications. While some critics have condemned the film on the ground that propaganda, even if anti-Communist, has no place on the screen, the consensus has been that the picture contains nothing that could offer offense except to Reds and their sympathizers. Other commentators believe it is not very effective satire of campus radicalism. The Christian Century does not approve of "Red Salute."

A Hollywood dispatch to the New York Times summarized give West Coast reaction as follows: "The Hays group always has frowned upon propaganda films and has kept the screen fairly clear of 'messages.' Therefore, the agitation that greeted 'Red Salute' came somewhat as a surprise to the town. While Hollywood regarded the film as a bit heavy-handed in spots, nothing really wrong was seen in it. . . . Red-bating being a popular occupation. In spite of the picketing, in all probability nothing will come of it within the industry."

In New York a spokesman for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America said that no complaints had been received from the public on "Red Salute." It has been the industry's consistent policy to shun propaganda, said this spokesman, and while films of both martial and anti-war themes have been made, they have been entirely devoid of propaganda.

Detroit a Battleground

The Reds consider Detroit their battleground in the fight of the Detroit Cinema Guild to obtain a reversal of the circuit court's decision refusing to enjoin the police censor from banning "The Youth of Maxim" on the ground that it is Communistic propaganda.

Nathaniel H. Goldstick, assistant corporation counsel, said: "This film is pure Communistic propaganda, sponsored, fostered and encouraged by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics contrary to the specific agreement between the commissar of foreign affairs of the Soviets and the President of the United States of America," at the time the United States recognized Russia.

A strongly worded protest against barring "The Youth of Maxim" was sent to Mayor Frank Couzens of Detroit by national headquarters in New York of the American Civil Liberties Union and its affiliate, the National Council on Freedom from Censorship, both avowedly Red in sympathy. Among those signing the telegram were Dr. Harry F. Ward, chairman, and Roger N. Baldwin, director, for the Union.

Dr. Ward is also president of the American League Against War and Fascism, which has been leading the Communist-inspired agitation against such films as "Red Salute," Hearst Metrotone News and "March of Time."

While in New York police and court action has quited the agitation, it is breaking out elsewhere. The Maryland branch of the American League Against War and Fascism is threatening boycott against Loew theatres in Baltimore for showing Hearst Metrotone News.

INDUSTRY REGULATION IS NOW UP TO DISTRIBUTOR

MPTOA Places Before Companies the Alternative of Definite Action on Trade Practices or Invite Federal Control

Free Shows Protested; Indiana Associated Exhibitors Indorse Pettengill Bill; Wisconsin Independents Join Allied States

Exhibitors this week arbitrarily placed upon the shoulders of distributors the task of solving the nationally important problem of arriving at a mutually favorable plan for voluntarily controlling, restraining or self-regulating unfair competition and trade practices in the industry.

Extending its plea for home rule to adjudicate disputes, controversies, irritations and friction in motion picture trade relations between theatre owners and exchanges, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America placed the problem of preventing any further internal trade injustices up to the large companies and advanced one of two courses for them to pursue:

1. Take definite action for the voluntary self-regulation of unfair competition and trade practices through organized effort, or

2. Stand "pat" and stubbornly defend to the bitter end the present trade practices against any and all attacks in the courts, the legislatures and Congress, thereby definitely inviting and risking thoroughgoing Governmental control and regulation of their commercial operations.

That such a fixed policy and attitude as set forth in the second course would provide a fertile filed for scheming lawyers always eager to promote damage suits on behalf of ignorant or unscrupulous clients "is perfectly obvious" to the MPTOA, which feels that "there should be somewhere in the business responsible executives in distribution with enough vision and foresight to see the advantages of fair self-regulation and self-control for our own trade practices." Or, they added, "maybe the distributors just don't give a damn."

That distributing corporation managements in November will receive from the MPTOA, after a field survey by President Edward L. Kuykendall, the first tangible plan since the NRA for establishing machinery in the field to adjudicate disputes, was learned last week. (Motion Picture Herald, October 26th, page 13.)

Field Organizations Active

And while the national executive staff of the MPTOA was extending efforts to crystalize local courts for ruling exhibitor-distributor relations, several state organizations of theatre owners, affiliated either with the MPTOA or with Allied States, were deep in discussions of their own immediate problems.

Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana elected R. R. Bair president and A. C. Zaring vice-president, and voted support of the Pettengill Senate bill to control the industry through federal legislation.

Wisconsin's Independent Theatres Protective Association elected Andy Gutenberg president and F. J. McWilliams vice-president, and voted to affiliate with Allied.

The MPTO of Connecticut moved to correct a print shortage problem.

New Jersey Allied set December 7th as the date for its convention.

The Western MPTO convened at Pittsburgh.

MPTO affiliates in California and Washington met to hear Mr. Kuykendall.

Nor did the MPTOA stop this week with the furtherance of its move to force the establishment of an industry judicial system for adjusting disputes, sounding, as it did, a "war" call against the growing unfair competition to theatres offered by traveling shows sponsored by national advertisers. At the same time it warned of the inconsistency of the exhibitor who complains the loudest against such outside unfair competition the while that exhibitor stoutly defends his own privilege to engage in unfair competitive practices within the industry.

"Free Show" Complaints Pouring In

"We have been flooded with complaints from exhibitors of unfair competition in the form of free stage and screen shows sponsored by advertisers, and all sorts of non-theatrical exhibitions of motion pictures," the MPTOA advised. And, they added, "in several instances a formal protest to the advertiser explaining the damage wrought on the established theatres has brought about a prompt withdrawal or modification of such projects.

"However, a number of the complaints seem to be rather fantastic and not based on any genuine grounds for a protest. The free showing of a non-dramatic advertising film in a salesroom to demonstrate the performance of a new automobile can hardly be considered unfair competition, just because it involves the use of a projector and film."

"Lawsuits between exhibitors and distributors over grievances, both fancied and real, and unfair trade practices are rapidly increasing all over.

"But it is becoming increasingly apparent that the courts are in no position to either administer, regulate or even define trade practices in this business.

"During the next six months, or until the legislatures get under way, with no restraint, control or regulation of unfair competition and of abuses in so vast and complex a business, it is possible, if not probable," said the MPTOA, "that unfair trade practices in exhibition and distribution will create so much friction and irritation that it will result in an overwhelming demand from both within and without the industry for rigid Governmental control, strict and inflexible regulation by-laws with severe penalties for infractions, and expensive political investigations of the industry motivated by ulterior and mixed purposes."

In putting the problem up to the distributors, the MPTOA believes that in any plan or plans for the voluntary control, restraint or self-regulation of unfair competition and trade practices in exhibition and distribution, the cooperation of the producers and distributors is absolutely essential. "No plan can succeed in a major way without it," they added.

Principal problems of major importance that require such joint effort were set forth as follows: Overbuying complaints, clearance and zoning, local hearings, conciliation and arbitration of disputes, designated playdates, non-theatricals and cut-rate competition, double features and premiums.

Compulsory block booking, a simplified, fair and understandable standard exhibition contract, forcing shorts and trailers with features and the score charges were cited by the MPTOA as matters almost entirely up to the distributors for voluntary self-regulation to remove recognized abuses and unfair advantages taken of the smaller exhibitors.

It was pointed out, however, that no progressive steps to improve trade relations and sales methods, to establish and administer standards of fair competition, have been taken and none is seriously proposed by any distributor at the moment. Therefore, the MPTOA felt the matter now rests squarely with the distributors to decide on their own responsibility which course they will pursue.

Home Rule Again Demanded

Because most of the disputes are local in nature, the MPTOA reiterated its advocacy of home rule in adjudicating these matters, saying: "We firmly believe that specific disputes can only be fairly heard, conciliated and decided at home, that any useful or practical plan for removing abuses and preventing injustices should provide for local hearings before boards composed of local people actually engaged in the business."

In this connection the organization has concluded that the branch managers of distributors in the field should be vested with more authority to work out local disputes, that they should be allowed to exercise their own judgment, based on personal knowledge of local conditions, in serving on such local boards, that the work of these local joint boards should not be nullified and discredited by constant appeals to uninformed appeal boards in New York, and that local autonomy and home rule should prevail as far as possible in all matters of unfair competition.

EXHIBITOR UNITS TACKLE PROBLEMS

Mr. Kuykendall is now making an extended trip seeking the advice and counsel of local exhibitors on these trade practice matters and to determine "how it can and should be done." A full meeting of the national directorate of the MPTOA is contemplated after Mr. Kuykendall returns to New York, in November, to discuss definite plans for local arbitration of disputes. The plan decided upon will then be presented to the distributors.

Indiana, Wisconsin, Washington Elect

Serving with R. R. Bair and A. C. Zaring, president and vice-president, respectively, of the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana, will be the following officers who also were elected Monday at the annual convention, held at the Claypool hotel, Indianapolis: Second vice-president, Oscar Fine; third vice-president, Maurice Rubin; treasurer, Frank Saunders; secretary, Helen B. Keeler. Mr. Fine will preside as vice-president over the southern part of the state, and Mr. Rubin the northern.

Directors elected at the convention, where Representative Samuel Pettengill held an open discussion on his federal control bill, included: Maurice Rubin, A. C. Zaring, Harry Markun, Charles Metzger, Alex Manta, V. U. Young, R. R. Bair, Roy Harold, Frank Saunders, Oscar Fine, William Studebaker, W. F. Easley, H. C. Calloway, Billie Connors, S. W. Neall, Leonard Sowar, George Mallers, I. R. Holycross, H. P. Vonderschmitt, R. R. Sherer.

The members voted in favor of the Pettingill bill.

Wisconsin Joins Allied

Following the election of A. C. Guttenberg, of Milwaukee, as president of the Wisconsin Independent Theatres Protection Association, at the annual convention at the Hotel Plankinton, Milwaukee, the membership voted unanimously to affiliate with the national Allied organization. This action was expected.

Elected vice-president was F. J. McWilliams, while E. F. Maertz was named secretary and Ernest Langemack treasurer. Directors elected included: George Fischer, B. K. Fischer, Frank Fischer, Charles Washicheck, R. J. Patterson, Ross Baldwin, L. F. Thurwacker and F. L. Koppelberger.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut named a committee to investigate a flood of complaints from members about shortages of release prints and to induce exchanges to correct the situation created thereby. It was said that the shortage has been particularly acute on second-run prints of RKO's "Top Hat."

The adjourned annual convention of Allied States of New Jersey, Sidney Samuelson, president, will be held on the S.S. Queen of Bermuda, December 7th to 11th, as it plies between New York and Hamilton, Bermuda.

FILMS ACCEPTING U. S. INVITATION

Motion picture executives and other film interests are following the lead of those in other industries in accepting invitations to attend conferences at Washington on matters relating to National Recovery, as recently extended by George L. Berry, coordinator for President Roosevelt for industrial cooperation, and will participate in the meetings if only to protect themselves in the event another effort is made at next winter's Congress to revive the NRA.

More than 90 per cent of those invited have accepted, it was declared this week by Major Berry. The conferences will be held late in November or early in December.

While NRA officials at Washington are gratified over the response and declare the conferences are designed to further the adoption of voluntary codes, leaders in a number of industries have made it clear that they are accepting the invitation only in self protection and will come to Washington prepared to fight any effort to revive the codification of industry.

Most of the acceptances are coming from small operators who found in the codes an opportunity to secure concessions from their larger competitors. Leaders in few industries are desirous of further federal control.

As the Western Pennsylvania MPTO, an Allied affiliate, went into convention at Pittsburgh, word was awaited from national officers in attendance that the national Allied had formulated its previously announced plans for establishment of an independent producing company.

However, Abram Myers, Allied chairman of the board, said an announcement of the production plans would be premature at this time. Sidney Samuelson, national president, and M. Myers spoke to 90 exhibitors behind closed doors, urging them to establish their own production unit.

The convention elected William David as president; William Litsie, vice-president; Fred Herrington, secretary, and Joe Gellman, treasurer. New directors are M. A. Rosenberg, Bennett Amdur, Frank Panopolus and William Finkel.

Martin Smith, Ohio exhibitor leader, was present at the meeting, at which it was announced that Allied plans to publish a guide book in two weeks, to be called "The Allied White Book," containing a report on trade practices.

Mayor McNair, of Pittsburgh, welcomed some 52 delegates and told them he favored abolishment of the state theatre tax.

M. A. Rosenberg, chairman, cautioned members against signing film contracts before they have been examined and approved by the organization.

Kuykendall Meets State Members

Mr. Kuykendall, nearing the end of his tour proposing machinery to correct trade abuses, told 300 exhibitor members of the Independent Theatre Owners of Northern California, meeting in San Francisco, to oppose the Pettengill bill to abolish block booking, and to support the copyright law amendment to check the music seat tax levied on theatres by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

In Seattle, Mr. Kuykendall, addressing the annual convention of the Pacific Northwest Allied Amusements Association, explained the return of individualism and personality to the theatre industry, and lauded the work accomplished under the Production Code Administration.

The convention voted against lotteries, discussed regulations regarding protection and bookings, voted to affiliate with the MPTOA and effected a name change to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the Northwest.

Hugh Bruen was re-elected president; William Ripley was elected vice-president, Al Rosenberg, second vice-president; Milton Kenworthy, third vice-president, and James Hone, secretary and treasurer.

New trustees named included: Cecil Miller, John Hamrick, Le Roy Johnson. Delegates attended from Washington, Oregon and Idaho, establishing a new attendance record.

Texas Allied Appeals to U. S.

Hitting at monopoly, which was the chief topic of the meeting, Allied Theatre Owners' Association of Texas at San Antonio adopted a resolution asking the United States Department of Justice to act under the Sherman anti-trust law wherever infringements are found.

Col. H. A. Cole of Dallas was reelected president. Rubin Frels, Victoria; Henry Hall, Beeville; Martha McSpadden, Electra, and R. N. Smith, Mission, were chosen vice-presidents, and A. W. Lilly, Greenville, secretary-treasurer.

Elected directors were T. W. Lewis, Will Dorband, L. M. Treet, Paul Scott, F. W. Zimmerman, Tom Donnell, P. V. Williams, L. C. Tidball, Walter Stoppelman, B. Legg, Lynn Smith, Homer Mulkey.

Universal Shows Loss In Nine Months Period

Universal Pictures Company, Inc., for the first nine months to July 27, reports a loss of $735,756 after all charges including depreciation of fixed assets which total $301,120 and after giving effect to deduction from costs and expenses of $197,448 on account of excessive provision for royalties and foreign income made prior to the advent of the current fiscal year.

MPPDA MEMBERS CALL A HALT ON FILMS OF GANGSTERS vs. JOHN LAW

G-Man Pictures, While Influence for Law Enforcement, Called So Numerous As to Cause Unhealthful Box Office

Hays' Request That Producers Avoid Scenes of Excessive Drinking Where Possible Brings Thanks from the Field

Production of "G Men" films and others which "portray the activities of American gangsters in violent conflict with the law" has been barred—for the time being, at least—according to an announcement of the Motion Picture Producers' and Distributors' of America setting forth the agreement of the executives of film companies with the Production Code Administration.

At the same time it is revealed that Will H. Hays, president of the MPPDA, has been widely commended for his action requesting producers to avoid as far as possible the use of scenes showing excessive drinking.

Civic Leaders Notified

These developments are related for the first time, and officially, in the current issue of "The Motion Picture and the Family," a monthly publication of the MPPDA which is sent to a list of 28,000 comprising school teachers, ministers, parent-teacher groups, Better Films Councils and other organizations and individuals.

Another development under the Production Code, that of the recent change in title of "Snatched" to "Show Them No Mercy", was explained in Hollywood this week. It was pointed out that since details of kidnaping have been banned by the Code Administration, the original title no longer was proper as it might have created the erroneous impression of glorifying kidnapers. Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of Twentieth Century-Fox, had protested the change in title of the Darryl Zanuck production, but finally acquiesced.

The original script, depicting a kidnaping in all its details followed by a theme of the "crime doesn't pay" variety, was held unacceptable because under the interpretation of the Production Code it had been agreed by the producers not to make films in which kidnaping appears as the main theme. As revamped and approved, the story of "Show Them No Mercy" starts after the actual kidnaping took place.

As indicated in the article in "The Motion Picture and the Family," while there has been no feeling that the "G Men" cycle has been harmful and, on the contrary, has been considered constructive in presenting a picture of the Government's war on crime, at the same time films of this type were becoming so numerous as to create some resistance on the part of the public and hence an unhealthful condition at the box-office.

John Boettiger, special assistant to Mr. Hays, prepared the article, which said that at a meeting of the producers in Hollywood Mr. Hays had presented his views on "the current trend of crime pictures."

"He declared at the outset,," the article continued, "that the production of pictures based on crime was not to be questioned. He pointed out that the socalled "G Men" pictures, which reflected the activities of the agents of the Federal Department of Justice in the detection and capture of gang criminals, have had a splendid influence in promoting a public consciousness of law enforcement. These pictures, Mr. Hays declared, have been proper and interesting entertainment.

SECONDARY THEME IN "SOAK THE RICH"

Though "Soak the Rich", which Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur are making for Paramount release, includes a kidnaping sequence, it will probably conform to Production Code regulations because the actual commission of the crime is not shown and because kidnaping is not the main theme.

Negotiations by film companies for the screen rights to "Blind Alley", now running in New York, are being retarded, according to Broadway report, by the necessity of purging the play of objectionable elements. Several treatments are being prepared, and when one is finally approved by the Production Code Administration the negotiations will continue. Meanwhile, James R. Ullman, the play's producer, points to the fact that it required three months before "Men in White" was declared suitable for the screen.

"Mr. Hays raised a question, however, as to the number of these and similar pictures already released or in course of production and stated his belief that the quantity of such films in proportion to other entertainment had become too high, and that he desired to avoid an over-emphasis on the activities of American gangsters in the treatment of crime on the screen.

"It was deemed necessary to provide guidance for the members of the Production Code Administration in handling these pictures and the producers unanimously approved the following paragraph, to be added to the present policy of the Production Code Administration in applying the Production Code:

"'Crime stories are not to be approved when they portray the activities of American gangsters armed in violent conflict with the law or law enforcing officers.'

Started Films Not Included

"It was agreed that pictures on which production had already begun would not be brought within the scope of the action."

Among these, it was noted, were: "Confidential" (Mascot); "King Solomon of Broadway" (Universal); "Rich Men's Daughters," now "She Couldn't Take It" (Columbia); "Husk," now "We're Only Human" (Radio); "Mary Burns, Fugitive" (Paramount); "Three Kids and a Queen" (Universal); "It Happened in Hollywood" (Radio); "Waterfront Lady" (Mascot); "Petrified Forest" (Warner); "Whipsaw" (MGM); "Killers on Parole" (Universal); "Guns" (Paramount); "Panic on the Air" (Columbia); "Green Shadow" (Radio); "Last Call for Love" (Columbia); "The Killer" (MGM); "Dr. Socrates" (Warner) and "Special Agent" (Warner).

"Some of the pictures on the above list," continues the article, "do not portray American gangsters at all, nor do they show violent conflict with the law; but since they fall within the classification of crime pictures it was deemed advisable to list them among those to which the new interpretation would not be applied.

"Varying stories discussing this action have appeared in the press and other publications and some of these contained interpretations which were misleading and erroneous. It should be made clear that the action taken does not preclude the making of pictures dealing with crime or mystery. Crime is recognized as a dramatic theme which shall always properly be reflected in literature and drama. Similarly, there is no disposition to interfere with the making of pictures portraying the activities of such historic groups as, for example, the band of Robin Hood. The whole purpose has been to prevent pictures showing American gangsters in violent conflict with the law from becoming disproportionate in number or over-emphasized in treatment."

Evidence supporting Mr. Hays' assertion that the "G Men" pictures were constructive in their effect was given by no less an authority than J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the United States Department of Justice. Speaking at the Martin Quigley Anniversary luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in New York last month, Mr. Hoover paid tribute to the industry for "having created a great public sentiment of law enforcement consciousness" through pictures of that type. (HERALD, October 5.)

On Drinking Scenes

Of the stand on scenes of excessixe drinking the article says:

"In furtherance of these directions, the members of the Production Code Administration brought about the elimination from many scripts and finished pictures of scenes in which drinking was unnecessarily emphasized.

"In recognition of the degree to which this action succeeded in improving motion pictures, various complimentary letters have been received by Mr. Hays."

Governor Martin L. Davey of the State of Ohio was quoted as saying in a note to Mr. Hays:

"The purpose of this brief note is to extend my appreciation for the assistance you have given in eliminating the 'glamorous use of liquor in pictures and the restricting of it to such phases as have to do with the plot.'"

Further approval was given in a letter to Mr. Hays from Dr. E. Leslie Bowsher, director of education for the state of Ohio and ex-officio member of the state censor board, who wrote as follows:

"Another step in your program towards 'better movies' has been brought to my attention. May I congratulate you upon the recent position you have taken to eliminate 'glamorous drinking' as far as possible in the movies?

PRESS HAILS PARING OF PARAMOUNT FEES

New Day for Security Holders, Say Hearst and Scripps-Howard Newspapers

Praise of Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe in New York for slashing by two-thirds the $3,239,828 bill presented by lawyers and committees in the Paramount receivership case was expressed this week in the daily press, following last Wednesday's decision of Judge Coxe to allow only $1,026,711.

The Scripps-Howard newspapers hailed Judge Coxe's paring of the fees as originally claimed by some 53 petitioners, as striking "a blow in favor of those exploited persons who buy securities in great corporations, lose most of their money and then see the remnants of it distributed to lawyers and receivers in reorganization proceedings."

"If other courts follow the lead of Judge Coxe, a new day has arrived for security holders in bankrupt concerns," said the Hearst newspapers, which called the fees asked for "exorbitant."

It was in the following words that Judge Coxe turned on the light of the "new day in this once darkened secret room of financial profiteering," as the Hearst papers described it:

"The receivers, trustees and their attorneys are court officials and there is no opportunity for what Chief Justice Taft called vicarious generosity in determining what properly may be paid them."

Court Explains Stand

"There is no warrant under the statute for the granting of allowances for unnecessary services or expenses," continued Judge Coxe. "Committees are essential in cases where there are vast numbers of stock and bondholders, but multiplicity of the same leads to confusion and waste and should not be encouraged."

The Paramount claims amounted to 46 per cent of the valuation of the company at the market values for its securities at the time it was placed in bankruptcy.

The allowances granted by Judge Coxe for services and expenses in the reorganization case, contrasted with the claims presented, were listed in MOTION PICTURE HERALD on October 26th, page 45. These bills were criticized three weeks ago by the Sabath Congressional committee at hearings in New York in the investigation of realty bondholders' reorganizations.

Directors Welcome Action

Nor was the Paramount board itself silent about the paring of the receivership fees, general satisfaction with the allowances made for services performed having been expressed Thursday at a directors' meeting in New York.

No appeal from Judge Coxe's orders will be taken by the corporation in an effort to obtain further reduction of any of the allowances made, it was said. There were some vague rumors that a few of those whose fees either were not allowed or were slashed would appeal.

Meanwhile there were indications that no new directors will be elected to the Paramount board to fill the vacancies created by the recent resignations of Frank A. Vanderlip and William S. Gray, Jr.

The resignations reduce the board membership to 14, and, although the board is permitted by the company's by-laws to elect directors to fill vacancies, it was pointed out that the original intent of the creditor reorganization groups was to provide Paramount with a "small, but actively working" board. For this reason only 16 directors were elected originally, although the by-laws authorize a board of 18. The two resignations create a situation that is in keeping with this intent of the reorganization groups; hence it is expected that the vacancies will remain unfilled, at least until the annual meeting of the company's stockholders next June.

Mr. Gray, who is president of Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., and was on the Paramount board as a member of the company's bank creditor group, resigned late last week. His action is said to be in line with an original intention of serving on the Paramount board only temporarily because of the pressure of other business. He was elected for a one-year term which would expire next June.

Shares Liquidated

It was also reported that Central Hanover, together with other large Paramount bank creditors, have liquidated all or nearly all of the approximately 50,000 shares of new first preferred Paramount stock and the $4,900,000 of new debentures which were issued to them in settlement of the old bank debt and for this reason felt that their representation on the company's board should properly be diminished.

Mr. Gray's resignation leaves Charles A. McCulloch and Percy H. Johnston on the board as bank representatives. Neither is expected to resign before the expiration of his term as both have interests in Paramount dating back many years, Mr. McCulloch as a member of the board of Balaban and Katz and Mr. Johnston as an active figure in Paramount financing prior to the company's bankruptcy.

It was also said that there is little likelihood of Paramount management officials being added to the board despite the existing vacancies in view of a further reorganization intent to keep management representation on the board at a minimum so that the directorate would not be in the position of passing upon their own management activities.

Mr. Vanderlip, a representative of holdings of the old Paramount bonds, resigned two weeks ago. His resignation is not regarded as having any relation to that of Mr. Gray.

New operating agreements for the A. H. Blank, Hoblitzelle-Interstate and Kunsky-Trendle circuits will be set with the operators by the Paramount theatre department within the week.

Earnings of Paramount Pictures Corporation in the third quarter were estimated this week by Dow, Jones' Wall Street Journal at about the same as were reported for the second three months of the year when the net was approximately $796,000 after allowing for about $400,000 quarterly interest on the bonds. First quarter net was $1,472,000 after interest. Estimated nine months earnings after interest thus are apparently in the neighborhood of $3,000,000.

Decision Reserved On Fox Theatres Purchase Order

At the conclusion of hearings in New York Tuesday on an application for an order directing the receiver of Fox Theatres Corporation to exercise an option to purchase 50 per cent of the stock of Metropolitan Playhouses, the reorganized Fox Metropolitan Company, Federal Judge Martin T. Manton reserved decision while directing attorneys to file final briefs for or against the order by November 4 and extended the time in which the option may be exercised from November 2 to November 16. The option provides that Fox Theatres may acquire the stock by payment to United Artists Theatre Circuit of $300,000 or may receive $150,000 for waiving its purchase right. Thus a difference of $450,000 in immediate cash assets which would be available to Fox Theatres' creditors through a liquidation is involved.

The order is asked by a Fox Theatres stockholders' committee. Gustavus A. Rogers, chairman, told the court that the $450,000 difference in cash assets meant only six per cent additional for creditors at this time, as against possible dividends on the Metropolitan stock over a 10-year period if the option were to be exercised. He said that with the $300,000 expenditure creditors of Fox Theatres could be paid 22 cents on the dollar at once and, in addition, they could retain an equity in any dividends which might be declared on the Metropolitan stock during the 10-year period.

Mr. Rogers added that exercise of the option to purchase the 50 per cent stock interest for $300,000 must be good business in view of the fact that Joseph M. Schenck (United Artists Theatre Circuit) had found it worth while to pay $425,000 for the other 50 per cent.

Exercise of the option was also advocated by other Fox Theatres' creditors representing disputed claims of more than $1,000,000. The order was opposed by Halsey, Stuart & Co., Alvin J. Schlosser and creditors represented by Archibald Palmer, attorney.

Accountants for Skouras Amusement Corp., which operates about 45 houses for Metropolitan Playhouses, testified that net earnings of the circuit from last Jan. 1 to date are approximately $90,000, as compared with a net of $12,900 for the first 39 weeks of last year. Accountants for Randforce, operators of the remainder of Metropolitan's 84 houses, reported a loss of $44,900 for the period from Feb. 1 to Oct. 12, which included the payment of $30,000 for legal fees for receivership proceedings. This compared with a loss of $84,700 for the same period last year. It was also testified that Randforce had declared a dividend of $300,000 on Sept. 2 out of accumulated earnings since 1933, when the last dividend, amounting to $200,000, was declared. It was explained by Milton C. Weisman, receiver of Fox Theatres, that the Sept. 2 dividend had included $150,000 which was earmarked for retirement of bonds of Metropolitan Playhouses. The remaining $150,000 went to the Randforce operators.

Weisman told the court that Mr. Schenck has refused to accept any salary as president of Metropolitan Playhouses. He added that under the Fox Metropolitan reorganization plan the combined salaries of all officers of the new company are not to exceed $50,000 annually.

Keith-Albee-Orpheum, which has acquired 10 per cent of Mr. Schenck's half interest in Metropolitan, receives another 10 per cent in the event Fox Theatres does not exercise its option. This would give Mr. Schenck an 80 per cent interest in the new company.

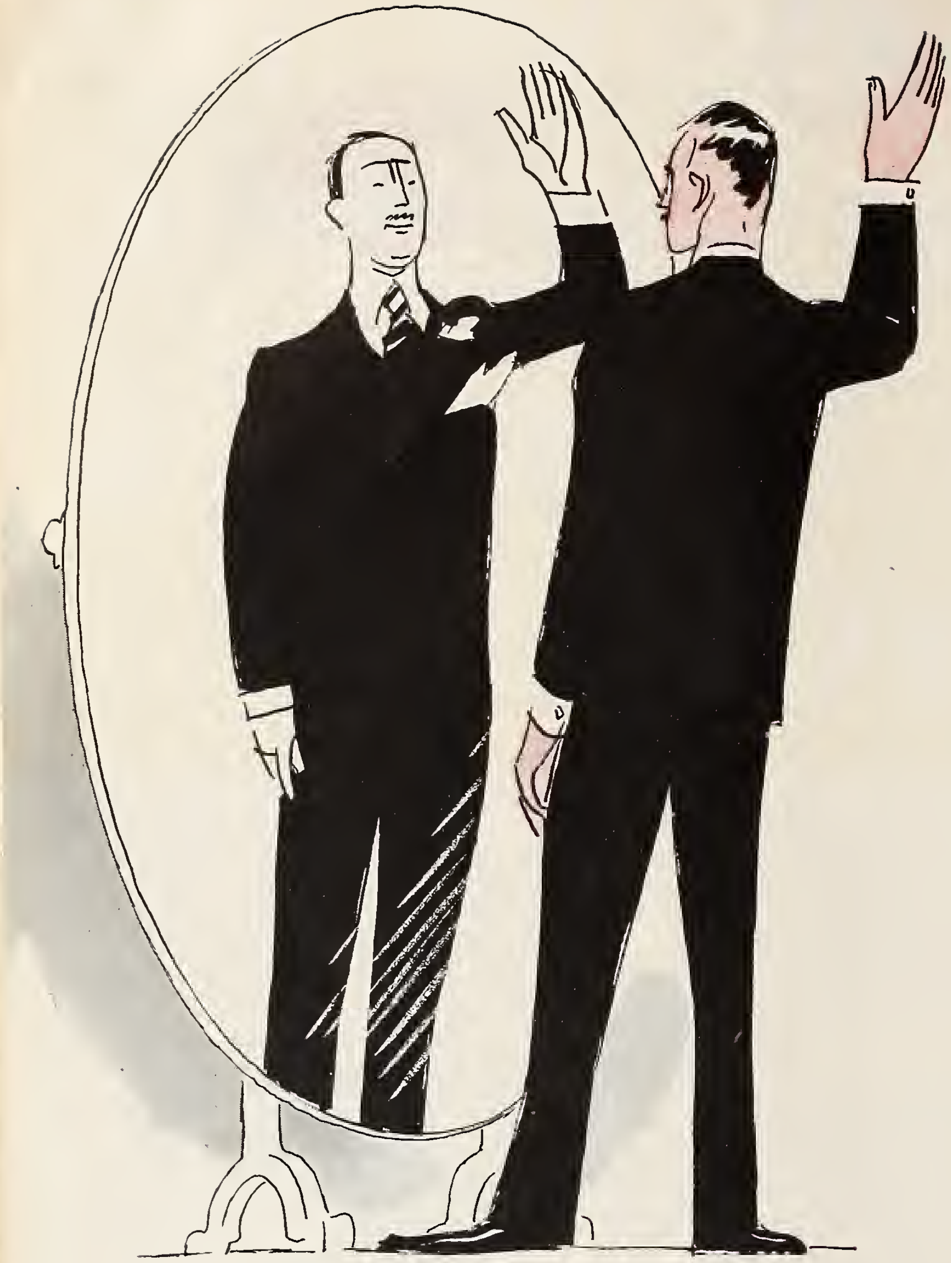
WATCH THOSE TWIN WORLD PREMIERES OF M-G-M $1,000,000 COMEDY SENSATION!

Friday, November 1st, is an important day in the history of film business. On that day M-G-M launches "A NIGHT AT THE OPERA" in two pre-release engagements! The roars of Leo are bellowing lustily in those cities right now in triumphant showmanship—and those ROARS will soon echo throughout the nation! Watch! But don't wait! Here's what M-G-M showmen are doing meanwhile—

(Yes, go on!)



PROMISE YOURSELF:

"Starting right now I will do the best job of my showmanship career to promote 'A NIGHT AT THE OPERA' starring the Marx Brothers!"

AND M-G-M PROMISES YOU:

"'A NIGHT AT THE OPERA' is one of the greatest entertainments ever made and its box-office possibilities are unlimited!"

HERE'S HOW TO INCREASE RECEIPTS ON BILL POWELL'S "RENDEZVOUS"!

Put a panel into your lobby at once carrying the marvelous critical notices reprinted below about M-G-M's newest hit. Use a flash headline stating: "Here's the picture that Broadway is raving about. Held over 2nd week at New York's famed Capitol Theatre." Then follow with reviews.

DAILY NEWS—A sure hit . . ."Rendezvous" offers the other theatres on the street considerable competition. For Mr. Powell does the unexpected by repeating the hilarious performance he gave in "The Thin Man" with another characterization just as amusing in "Rendezvous". . . Anybody who deliberately misses the fun and excitement of the latest Powell film is cheating himself of a good time . . . Mr. Powell is in top-form, delivering the smart and audacious lines with even more than his usual effectiveness . . . Miss Russell gives a diverting performance. The picture moves quickly and brilliantly to a highly amusing and fitting end . . .

N.Y. AMERICAN—A perfect pip of a picture, vastly pleasing in every respect . . . A thoroughly exciting melodramatic entertainment, the tensity of which is lightened by highly-diverting comedy . . . It keeps the audience between giggles and gasps from flash to fade-out, with never an arid moment in the fast fun . . . That sort of thing goes on and on to the very end, where a blood-tingling, hirsute elevating climax is capped by a tag that sends them out laughing . . . See it, please, and have fun . . . Also be among the millions who will revel in the "discovery" of Rosalind Russell, who vaults high toward stardom . . . The girl troupes her way right into your heart and provides another name to be enrolled on the list of your film favorites...By all means keep this "Rendezvous" at the Capitol . . .

Held Over 2nd Week, Capitol, N. Y. BIG Everywhere!

WORLD-TELEGRAM—It's a laugh-fest at the Capitol this week where debonair Bill Powell has in "Rendezvous" the kind of screen play that's duck-soup for him and in Rosalind Russell, a newcomer, the kind of leading lady who brings out the devil in him... A joyous jamboree...the customers spent most of their time laughing...they just love to laugh and thrill with Bill...the applause is plenty...

MORNING TELEGRAPH—It is a distinct pleasure to record the appearance of a worthy successor to the memorable "Thin Man"..."Rendezvous" must be set down as one of the better photoplays. This highly agreeable picture is amply supplied with high comedy and ably acted.

HERALD-TRIBUNE—Gayly and entertainingly told...The work of Mr. Powell and Miss Russell is engaging...Mr. Powell is excellent, Miss Russell is one of the great pleasures of the film . . . A lot of fun . . .

DAILY MIRROR—A smart and lively comedy-drama, reminiscent of the "The Thin Man." A gay cast, gay humor, gay director, it makes heartily pleasant entertainment... William Powell excels at being suave, jaunty and engaging...Excellent supporting cast...

N.Y. TIMES—A humorous and rousing melodrama... William Powell with that sleek banter and that blend of bored nonchalance and razored sharpness that makes him one of our most attractive performers, keeps the entertainment consistently vigorous... Under the able management of William K. Howard, the film preserves its sense of humor without disturbing its air of mystery... With Mr. Powell at his debonair best, "Rendezvous" emerges as a lively and amusing melodrama...

N. Y. JOURNAL—A gay and amusing entertainment . . . Powell has been given another "Thin Man" type of role . . . Smartly written and directed, the story builds to an exciting climax . . . Novel and lively, the film blends suspense with humor and Powell contributes an elegant performance. It's good fun!

N. Y. POST—. . . A boisterously entertaining picture that is both spirited and amusing . . . The flavor and dash of the picture are heightened by the excellent playing of the supporting cast. They help to make "Rendezvous" a sure-fire antidote to boredom . . .

BRAVO!

LET'S GIVE DUE CREDIT TO THE FOLKS WHO MADE IT!

Cheers for Bill Powell, Rosalind Russell, Binnie Barnes, Lionel Atwill, Cesar Romero, Samuel S. Hinds, and all the Cast. Cheers for Director William K. Howard and Producer Lawrence Weingarten. (And a bow to Leo the Lion who's having the year of his career, thank you!)

At the Testimonial Dinner to Hal Roach's new Vice-President

INDUSTRY HONORS DAVID LOEW

OVER 500 of his friends and well-wishers, in the industry and out, met Tuesday night at the Waldorf-Astoria, in New York, to attend the testimonial dinner honoring David L. Loew, retiring vice-president of Loew's, Inc. As previously announced, Mr. Loew has affiliated with Hal Roach as partner and vice-president of the Hal Roach producing organization.

The assemblage included representation from the top executive ranks of almost every film company. Also present were many leading circuits and independent theatremen. Wires and cables were received from studio and other film names unable to attend.

Arthur Garfield Hays acted as toastmaster, first introducing twin-brother Arthur Loew, who detailed incidents of the early life of the guest of honor and his first theatre job as usher at Loew's West End theatre in New York.

Howard Deitz, MGM advertising executive, spoke humorously on what Mr. Loew could expect to find at the studios, and was followed by Adolph Zukor, life-long friend of the Loew family. Mr. Zukor commented on the earlier days of the Loew-Zukor association and predicted an immediate success for the new Hal Roach partner.

Will H. Hays also recited incidents in his experiences with the late Marcus Loew and with Mr. Zukor, and announced that when some day he would write the history of the motion picture business, those names "would be written high into it." He also complimented the honor guest.

One of the highlights of the evening was the unexpected talk of David Warfield, world-known stage star of the past decade. Mr. Warfield told of his first meeting with Marcus Loew, then known as "Max," and how through Mr. Loew he had met Mr. Zukor, a meeting which eventuated in a partnership of the three to open one of the first penny arcades, the foundation of their motion picture fortunes.

Mr. Warfield further described the entrance into the business of Dave Bernstein, treasurer of Loew's, Inc., as a $13.50 bookkeeper, and also the addition to the payroll of Joseph and Nicholas Schenck, as helpers. He remarked on the childhood days of the Loew twins by saying that "Arthur and David were two of the noisiest kids I have ever known. . . . I often wondered if they would have any sense when they grew up. Now look at them."

Mr. Loew in his address credited the "influence of his father and mother to make something of life after the advantages that were given me," and further thanked Nicholas Schenck for assistance and advice during the 19 years of their association.

Louis Nizer and Hal Roach also spoke.

The presentation to Mr. Loew of a parchment upon which were inscribed the names of all those present climaxed the evening's program.

Dave Blum, who with Eugene Picker arranged the event, introduced Mr. Hays, the toastmaster, and others on the dais. In addition to those mentioned these included Nathan Burkan, J. Robert Rubin, Martin Quigley, M. H. Aylesworth and Jack Cohn.

Comedy highlight of the evening was the speech of J. Hamilton Webster, introduced as a New York bank president. Topping the turn was introduction of two uniformed attendants who forcibly removed the "banker" from the dais at the end of his act.

ONLY TWO STUNT FLIERS REMAIN IN HOLLYWOOD

Soon after the World War, a daredevil group of stunt flyers arrived in Hollywood and found they could make a living flying for pictures. They decided to remain and formed an organization called "Thirteen Flying Black Cats." There were thirty members of the organization but the "13" was picked in the name to defy superstition.

Recently, Warner Brothers sent out a call for stunt flyers for "Ceiling Zero" and only two of the original Black Cats reported. They are Paul Mantz and Frankie Tomick. They are the only two of the surviving nine of the original group who still make their living flying for the picture companies. With one or two exceptions the rest of the crew took their last flight in front of a movie camera only to crack up while supplying thrills for the screen.

Independent Session Called by Chadwick

I. E. Chadwick called a special meeting of all independent producers Tuesday at Reliable Studios, in Hollywood. Mr. Chadwick said the purpose was for a discussion of city licenses and to outline plans to request a revision in license fees as set up by the city council. It was learned, however, the group will also discuss ways to combat future union trouble among independent producers.

The discussion is an offshoot of the recent jurisdictional dispute of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers which cost Maury Cohen of Invincible $4,000 as a result of an enforced one-day production halt. Although Mr. Chadwick denied the meeting was called for a union discussion it was learned union representatives will attend.

WARNERS READJUST STOCK, SETTLE MINORITY SUIT, DISCLOSE PROFIT

Six Directors To Be Reelected at December 9th Session; 100,000 Common Shares Transferred to Corporation

The position of Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., as a profit maker is looking up, to the extent of at least $2,500,000, the corporation this week disclosing to stockholders that operations during 1934-35 were conducted "in the black," as against a net loss of $2,530,513 for 1933-34.

Complete information necessary for final determination of accounts to determine the exact amount of 1934-35 profits is not yet available, but for the 39 weeks ended May 25th, 1935, net profit was $371,592 or two cents a common share, running not far below the $558,836 net for the similar 1934 period.

This disclosure was made in connection with announcement of the settlement of a suit brought by a minority stockholder and the transfer of 100,000 common shares (worth approximately $750,000) of Warner Brothers Pictures to the corporation by Harry M. Warner, president; Albert Warner, vice-president and treasurer, and Jack L. Warner, vice-president, together with their own Renraw, Inc., holding company.

Stockholders at the annual meeting on December 9th will be asked to approve the action of the board of directors in negotiating the settlement of the minority stockholder's action against Renraw and the Warner brothers, charging mismanagement since 1929 and alleging liabilities due the corporation arising out of an employment contract between the corporation and the brothers.

Preferred stockholders, who now have power to elect a majority of the board, will reelect at the stockholders' meeting six directors whose terms expire, including Harry M., Albert and Jack L. Warner, Abel Cary Thomas, Waddill Catchings and Henry A. Rudkin.

Of the 100,000 shares transferred, 90,000 shares had been delivered to the brothers and their Renraw, under the employment contract as signed on September 1, 1928, in which year the 90,000 shares had a maximum open market value of some $12,420,000.

The settlement as negotiated provides:

1. That the three Warner Brothers and Renraw deliver the 100,000 common shares to the corporation;

2. That the brothers and Renraw release the corporation from all claims based upon or related to the employment contract, including all claims against the corporation because of non-payment of part of cash compensation payable to them under the contract;

3. That the corporation release the Warner brothers and Renraw from all claims relating to the contract; and,

4. That the Warner brothers and Renraw pay the costs of the minority stockholder's suit, as instituted by Max Goldberg, of the Salem, Mass. law firm of Goldberg and Goldberg.

Under the employment agreement, the Warner brothers rendered service to the corporation for the six years ended August 31, 1934. The contract was modified subsequent to its signing.

Letter to Stockholders

Explaining the situation to the stockholders and notifying them of the meeting on December 9th, Warner Brothers Pictures said in a letter:

"At this meeting six directors, constittuing a majority of the board of directors, are to be elected by the preferred stockholders. Pursuant to the provisions of the Certificate of Incorporation, the voting power for the election of a majority of the board of directors is at present vested in the preferred stock. The directors whose terms of office now expire, are: Harry M. Warner, Albert Warner, Jack L. Warner, Abel Cary Thomas, Waddill Catchings and Henry A. Rudkin.

"The board of directors will also ask you to approve their action in compromising and settling all controversies between the Corporation on the one hand, and Renraw, Inc., Harry M. Warner, Albert Warner and Jack L. Warner on the other, arising out of or relating to an agreement between the parties dated as of September 1, 1928, and its amendments and modifications (hereinafter referred to as "the employment contract").

Employment Contract Provisions

"The employment contract, under which the Messrs. Warner have performed their services for the period of six years, provided, among other thngs, for a weekly cash salary, and for the issuance of 90,000 shares of the Corporation's common stock which was delivered in instalments during the term of the contract. The Corporation, in June, 1929, split each share of its common stock into two shares.

"Minority stockholders' suits had been instituted for the alleged benefit of the Corporation, against Messrs. Warner and Renraw, Inc., and several of the directors, in which suits, among other things, certain legal questions were raised and liabilities asserted by reason of the making and performance of the employment contract.

"The board of directors, believing that the continuance of a controversy between the Corporation and the Messrs. Warner, its principal officers, arising out of the employment contract was detrimental to the best interests of the Corporation, sought the advice of the law firm of Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Gardiner and Reed, of New York City, which law firm had never previously represented or advised the Corporation of Messrs. Warner or Renraw, Inc. This law firm after full consideration of all the facts submitted to them, recommended that the Corporation, if possible, negotiate a settlement of all claims arising out of the employment contract. Upon receipt of this recommendation and after due consideration, the board of directors authorized Messrs. Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Gardner and Reed to negotiate the settlement advised by them.

"The Messrs. Warner and Renraw, Inc., at all times have steadfastly denied any liability on their part. However, they also recognized the desirability of reaching an accord with the Corporation in respect to the controversies arising out of the employment contract and therefore consented to negotiate a compromise and settlement thereof. . . ."

Rockefeller Claim Stirs RKO Action

Negotiation of a settlement of Rockfeller Center's claim of $8,700,000 has been started by factors prominent in the reorganization of RKO, and will be heard November 18th.

The huge Rockefeller Center claim arises out of RKO's liability under leases for the Music Hall and Center Theatre, which held RKO liable for the unamortized cost of the theatres in the event of a default under the lease. Although allowance of the claim at $8,700,000 is being contested by Irving Trust Company, as trustee of RKO, factors in the reorganization are reported not hopeful of obtaining any appreciable reduction in the amount.

With a valuation of $14,644,614 placed by Radio Corporation of America on its investment in RKO, and with half this amount disposed of recently for $5,000,000 to Atlas Corporation and Lehman Brothers, the Rockefeller Center claim became the largest single creditor interest in the RKO reorganization.

Current negotiations are understood to be directed, first, at obtaining a reduction of the amount allowed and, second, an agreement on the issuance of securities of the new RKO company in satisfying the claim. Indications are that both stock and debentures of the new company will be offered in payment, probably in amounts sufficient to assure Rockefeller Center of at least two representatives on the board of the new company.

The RCA and Atlas Lehman securities will be exchanged for securities of the new company on a basis similar to whatever the agreement reached with Rockefeller Center provides for, it is believed.

These three, with the approximately $1,400,000 of first lien gold notes of RKO owned by Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., comprise the principal obligations of RKO. The new RKO company will assume liability for the notes held by Consolidated at face value. It is believed that the existing agreement providing for the retirement of a minimum amount of these notes monthly will be continued. The notes are secured by virtually all the assets of RKO and its principal subsidiaries.

A hearing on exceptions to Special Master Thomas D. Thacher's report on $7,800,000 in claims is to be held in New York Thursday before Federal Judge Bondy.

Exhibitor Named to Canada Parliament

Out of the whirl of the Canadian federal elections in which more than 800 candidates competed for the 245 seats in the House of Commons, one result emerged with general satisfaction to theatre men. This was the election of H. E. Wilton, manager of the Strand, Hamilton, Ont., and mayor, as a member of Parliament for Hamilton West.

Believing that with right casting, direction and production, Du Maurier's great romance, "Peter Ibbetson," could be made one of the entertainment triumphs of all time, Paramount chose two beloved stars —Gary Cooper and Ann Harding—to play the leading roles in this glorious story of a love that never died. The result justifies our every hope. We have not only a fine box-office picture, but a picture that will long be remembered as an important advance in motion picture art.

WHY "PETER IBBETSON" IS BOX-OFFICE!

{1} Gary Cooper at the top of his fame, with Ann Harding, whose performance establishes her as a star of stars.

{2} Directed by Henry Hathaway and produced by Louis D. Lighton, who gave you outstanding entertainment with Gary Cooper in "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" and "Now and Forever." They know what the public likes in pictures.

{3} Story will live forever as one of the great romances of all time. Is of particular appeal to women because it possesses in added degree, the same fine qualities that made "Smilin' Thru" a favorite.

{4} Pre-sold to women's clubs. To date thousands of Group Discussion Guides have been sent to these clubs in response to more than 6000 requests from all the forty-eight states. Each request represents a club, not an individual.

{5} Hundreds of thousands of women actually waiting to see "Peter Ibbetson." This extraordinary interest can be translated into excellent business by any theatre that goes after the local women's clubs. All in all, "Peter Ibbetson" can be summarized as a picture that will repay showmanship effort. The theatre that does a good job of selling it in advance will not have to worry about the gross.

PURCHASE OF 91 STORIES FOR 1935-1936 NEARS AN ALL-TIME RECORD

Only Nine Fewer Than the High Mark of April; Attributed to Openings of Play and Book Publishing Seasons

Harry Sherman, Independent Producer, Negotiates Rights to 25 Clarence Mulford Stories, Outdoor Subjects

September story purchases by Hollywood producers neared the all-time record, 18 companies buying 91 properties, only nine less than the record of 100, established last April. These acquisitions virtually round out completely feature commitments to exhibitors on 1935-1936 contracts.

The unusually heavy story-buying activity last month, quite pronounced in comparison to the average of 56 purchased monthly in 1934-35, is principally attributable to the flood of outstanding material introduced at the opening of the new season a few weeks ago on the dramatic stage and in book publishing. That many of these outstanding manuscripts were quickly absorbed by the studios for film production to further strengthen 1935-36 feature schedules becomes obvious in a study of the purchases made.

Probably the most outstanding deal, numerically, at least, was consummated by the independent producer, Harry Sherman, who negotiated talker rights to some 25 Clarence Mulford stories, six of which will be released through Paramount this season. Other producers participated in the story market in September as follows:

September Totals	34	4	49	4	91

For the first time in years, published books exceed original stories in the number purchased, the 49 September novels acquired, as against 34 originals, comparing with a 3-to-2 ratio for the past 12 months in favor of the original. The stage continued, along with the magazine, as unimportant sources of supply for the screen. Nor would the published book have outstripped the original in September from the standpoint of the number acquired if Harry Sherman's 25-novel purchase of the Mulford stories had not rocketed that total beyond the usual monthly average of 20 book purchases. Story deals consummated in September compared with other months as follows:

St. Louis Stock Withdrawn

The St. Louis Amusement Company Class A stock has been withdrawn from the St. Louis Stock Exchange after official approval of the action was received from the Securities and Exchange Commission at the request of the company. There are 21,245 shares of this stock outstanding. The last deal was in 1930.

Court Rules Picture Cannot Be Impounded

Upholding a lower court decision that no court has the right to impound a film in a legal action unless the plaintiff posts a bond adequate to repay the defendant in event of a decision in the latter's favor, the United States circuit court of appeals in San Francisco has directed the release of the impounded Warner picture, "Across the Pacific," an old silent picture starring Monte Blue.

The film was the object of a million-dollar damage suit brought by M. P. Echevaria of Los Angeles, who claimed it was a plagiarized version of his "Milias Filias." The case has been remanded to the lower court to be tried on its merits, which, it was explained, does not prevent the release of the picture.

"Revival" Votes Show Surprising Results

The vote in a contest being sponsored by the Empress theatre in Oklahoma City, Okla., to determine what picture to show during "revival week," has brought out many unexpected turns.

With several thousand ballots already turned in, the William Powell-Myrna Loy comedy mystery, "The Thin Man," and "Cimarron" are leading. Among other pictures getting heavy votes are "Little Caesar," "Smiling Thru," and "Dr Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

Forbids Sunday Showings

The City Council of Burlington, N. C., at a special meeting last week revoked an ordinance permitting the operation of motion picture theatres on Sunday. The ministerial association of the town has waged such a relentless fight against the ordinance that Alderman Hobby remarked: "If I were running a show of my own on Sunday I would close it in the face of such opposition."

Van Beuren Signs Cartoons

The Van Beuren Corporation has closed a deal with Fontaine Fox, creator of the "Toonerville Trolley" cartoon script, and with the estate of Pat Sullivan, originator of "Felix the Cat," for the right to include these comic strips now appearing in newspapers in the Van Beuren cartoon series. The pictures will be done in Technicolor and will be released in the "Rainbow Parade" group by RKO Radio.

Richmond Promoted

Lou Richmond has been appointed field manager of the independent theatre circuit in New England headed by E. M. Loew. Mr. Richmond, formerly the manager of the National in Boston for the unaffiliated chain, fills the vacancy left by the death of Al Cohen, who was killed in an automobile accident last fall.

Paramount Retains Florey

Paramount has signed director Robert Florey to a new long term contract and his next assignment will be "Rich Man's Son," from an original story by Anne Morrison Chapin and Marian Spitzer. Mr. Florey recently directed Carl Brisson in "Ship Cafe."

20th Century-Fox Nets $1,996,324 In 39 Week Period

Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation on Wednesday reported for the 39 weeks ended Sept. 28, 1935, a consolidated net operating profit of $1,996,324 after all charges, including federal income tax. This is $490,111 more profit than the $1,506,213 net for the same period of 1934.

In the third quarter, ended Sept. 28, 1935, the profit was $640,543, or more than double the $306,971 profit for the third quarter last year. The profit for the second quarter of 1935 was $738,974, and for the first quarter $616,806.

On the basis of the 1,369,042 shares of $1.50 dividend cumulative convertible preferred stock outstanding, the profit for the three quarters of 1935 amounts to $1.46 a share. Dividends on this preferred are cumulative from Jan. 1, 1936. After allowing for preferred dividends for nine months the net profits were 38 cents a share on the 1,226,529 shares of common stock outstanding.

Consolidated earned surplus at Dec. 29, 1934, was $3,006,812; after adding the net operating profit for the nine months of 1935 and profits of foreign exchange, amounting to $9,760, and deducting $335,987 of reorganization expenses, the consolidated earned surplus of Sept. 28, 1935, stood at $4,676,820.

Gross income from sales in the nine months totaled $30,402,159. Charged against this were operating and administration expenses, $7,810,308; amoritzation of production costs, $15,758,254, and participation in film rentals, $4,897,364, for a total of $28,465,926.

New Garnett Unit Launches Three

With the appointment of Douglas Hodges as general manager, the newly incorporated Tay Garnett Production Company has begun preparation of stories in Hollywood for its first three pictures: "Singapore Bound," "Jimaneve" and "Man Laughs Back."

Adds Color Cartoons

J. H. Hoffberg Company, Inc., has added a series of color cartoons produced by C. L. Whitehead and George Orth to the 1935-36 product. Seven subjects have been completed. Magna color, controlled by Consolidated Film Industries, is being used.

Theatre Ordinance for Alameda

The City Council of Alameda, Cal., has adopted an ordinance under which the city proposes to regulate motion picture theatres, and at the same time amended the zoning ordinance giving the council power to prevent the erection of additional theatres.

London Studio Swept by Fire

A fire at the Twickenham studio, London, destroyed the old floor, the wall of which collapsed on a railway, causing suburban service to be delayed for several hours.

REMOVAL OF STARS TO AVOID HEAVY TAXES FREELY PREDICTED ON COAST

Gov. of Massachusetts Warns That California's Heavy Income Tax May "Wipe Hollywood Off the Map"

Southern California Publisher Says State Will "Call Hearst's Bluff"; Chamber of Commerce Warns of Florida's Taxes

The motion picture producing industry as represented by Hollywood appears to have been wedged into the middle of the argument between William Randolph Hearst and those whom he displeased by his announcement a week ago that California's high income taxes are compelling him to transfer his permanent address from his native hearth in that state to New York.

There were sharp repercussions of the decision of Publisher Hearst to spend more time away from his expansive San Simeon ranch because of the confiscatory taxes.

Massachusetts' governor, James M. Curley, predicted that the state income tax "may wipe Hollywood off the map."

Louella O. Parsons, Mr. Hearst's Universal Service motion picture editor, added that unless the coast tax laws are repealed or greatly modified the motion picture industry will trek away, leaving California bereft of its largest source of income.

Louis B. Mayer, Metro's production general at Culver City, and president of the Motion Picture Producers' Association, joined the Hearst sympathizers, declaring, "It seems inevitable that others will be obliged to follow Mr. Hearst's action."

Joseph M. Schenck, president of Twentieth Century-Fox, likewise voiced the sentiment that it would not surprise him if prominent motion picture stars decided on taking similar action.

United Press telegraphed from Hollywood that "a general exodus of California wealthy men and women was feared," and added:

"Corollary local fear, and one freely adverted to by Mr. Hearst, was that the film industry might pull up stakes and leave Hollywood, possibly for Florida.

Then the Invitations

This started the anticipated stream of offers to the California film industry to set up their picture-making machinery elsewhere, including Mexico.

Florida invited both the industry and Mr. Hearst to move to that state. Mayor Charles D. White, of Atlantic City, New Jersey, telegraphed to Mr. Hearst and invited him to make his home there. Executives of each of the nine large studios received similar invitations.

Such invitations were received from at least one dozen eastern states when Upton Sinclair ran for governor in California last year on his Epic tax-the-wealth program.

On the other hand, Mr. Hearst was also on the receiving end of attacks from more stalwart native sons of California for his "insolent rebuke" to the state. Manchester Boddy, a Democratic publisher in southern California, predicted that the state would "call his bluff."

CAN'T RUN SHOW WITHOUT 'HERALD'

"I am enclosing you check for $3.00 to pay up the Herald for another year. I don't see how any small town exhibitor could run a show without this paper.

"I am enclosing you reports on some pictures we have recently run both here and at McCracken. . . .

"If I see these reports in print, I may be inclined to break loose and send you some more."

—REGGIE BUXTON,
Strand Theatre, Ransom, Kan.

Mr. Hearst's announcement aroused fear and resentment in California business circles, where the state's power of attracting wealthy men and their money is still seen as a major asset.

Chamber of Commerce Protests

The California Chamber of Commerce, led by business men who like income taxes no better than Mr. Hearst, issued a statement to show that persons with high incomes would pay more in Florida in total state and federal taxes than they would in California.

Everywhere in the state where civic emotion is strong, the booster spirit was aroused.

Mr. Hearst's prediction that others in California will follow his move to evade the high taxes, was followed by the "I told you so" of Mr. Mayer, when Mr. Hearst especially mentioned the drain on the high salaries of motion picture stars.

Governor Curley, arriving in Los Angeles from his native Massachusetts, warned: "Last winter, when I was in Florida, I saw many motion picture people looking for possible sites. The tax now is creating a very serious situation and it will hurt the Los Angeles (motion picture) section tremendously."

Too, Attorney Charles A. Sunderlin, noted California insurance counselor and founder of the Los Angeles Lawyers' Club, predicted that "the state income tax is driving capital to other states."

Louella Parsons further explained that when Mr. Hearst announced that he is going to move from California to avoid being "robbed" by tax collectors, he was expressing the intention of "thousands of others."

Joseph Schenck warned the California administration that "a popular actor can get work anywhere in New York or London." He added that he would "like to move out myself, but I can't go because my work is here; we have millions of dollars tied up in our properties out there and we just can't pack up and leave."

Other large Hollywood producing corporations likewise have large sums invested.

United Press surveyed the Hollywood high-salary situation and learned that "a check of incomes showed that many film men, screen players and wealthy retired easterners might find themselves in the same situation as Mr. Hearst."

Among those who United Press discovered would have to pay from 70 to 90 per cent of their incomes are Louis B. Mayer, Mary Pickford, Wallace Beery, Bing Crosby, Samuel Goldwyn, Irving Thalberg, Norma Shearer, Myron Selznick, Ernst Lubitsch and many others.

Miss Pickford, in Hollywood Wednesday, said the taxes may force her to leave.

"An odd feature of the new tax scare under discussion at the studios," United Press observed, "was that a great many of the highest paid actors were reported refusing work in order to hold their incomes below the surtax point."

"As a case in point," said the news service, "the vacation of Gregory La Cava, director, was mentioned. After making $150,000 in six months, Mr. La Cava was said to have sailed for Europe on a pleasure trip for the balance of the year, despite attractive offers."

The United Press made much of the report that Mr. Hearst would lead the way in an eastward trek, and further reported that he would confine his own motion picture activities, represented by Cosmopolitan Productions (distributed by Warners), to New York.

Treasury Department Denial

From Washington came word, via John O'Donnell and Doris Fleeson, syndicate political writers, that the United States Treasury Department had denied the statement of William Randolph Hearst that it had asked Warner Brothers and Cosmopolitan to make a motion picture showing what happened to tax delinquents.

The Treasury Department's story is that it was asked to cooperate by Warners with the man who wrote the scenario, "Special Agent." The Department did so, a spokesman said, by giving him access to records of the Internal Revenue Department.

Mr. Hearst is expected in New York within the week on his taxless pilgrimage from California and his $25,000,000 San Simeon ranch. He will establish his residence at the Ritz Tower hotel, Park avenue and 47th street. The Hearst Hotels Corporation, one of the publisher's holdings, controls the property.

Duals Now a Frankenstein In Their New England Cradle

Doubles Nowadays Have Scarcely a Friend in That Territory

by BRAD ANGIER
New England Correspondent

New England created double features. But of late, New England has been feeling it has been Frankensteined, that it was easier to start them than to control them.

Certain pioneer exhibitors in New England have remarked in this respect that cash giveaways and other box office bolsters in the premium division should be regarded more seriously than they are at present in many instances, inasmuch as history has a tendency to repeat.

Although New England was the mating ground from which double features sprung and the cradle in which they thrived, an investigation shows the surprising fact that now such billings have scarcely a friend in this territory. And if not here, where? On the other hand, it was freely admitted that the public in these parts is so attuned to double features that in most instances they are a necessary evil. But the intimation is that if there is ever any chance to shove in a wedge in the present situation, perhaps by means of an exhibitors' agreement, that the prevalent policy will be split into two—that is, into single features.

"I wish I could do away with double features," said Richard Rubin, Greater Boston theatre operator and local Allied States officer, "so I could get a chance to use some shorts I bought three years ago! But how? I've used only two singles recently, 'The Count of Monte Cristo,' and 'Gold Diggers of 1935.' Even then, folks came out to the manager's office and wanted to know where was the other feature."

Calls Singles Best

"Singles are best, although a few complain on the shortness of such shows," remarked Charles Koerner, RKO circuit divisional manager in New England. "The competitive situation here was the reason for our using double features at the RKO Boston this summer, after the house dropped vaudeville. We only used them to keep the theatre open. Quality is what counts, and you can't make up with quantity for lack of quality," Mr. Koerner concluded emphatically.

Arthur Howard, business manager of the Independent Exhibitors of Massachusetts, Inc., the key unit of Allied in New England, and Joseph Brennan, executive secretary of the local MPTOA affiliate, declared, however, that their respective organizations plan no move against double features, inasmuch as they believe they are too firmly entrenched in this part of the country.

"With single features, we can grind out seven shows a day and gross much more," added George French, manager of Keith's Memorial, in Boston. "Doubles are necessay in some situations, however. There's some stuff even we can't play by itself. This doesn't mean that such pictures are not good, rather that they of themselves do not possess sufficient entertainment quality to make people feel satisfied. More pictures are entitled to be played single feature than are so booked," Mr. French said.

"Double Features Crazy"

"How much chance is there to get away from double features in the outlying parts of New England? Listen, I can answer that one from personal experience," retorted Philip Bloomberg, city manager for the five Salem Realty Company houses in Salem, Mass. "When Publix operated the Paramount here, I played single features for a year while Lynn (an adjoining city) played doubles. The difference in the comparative grosses was terrific. There was a real checkup for you, too; same pictures, same sort of people."

"The place is so double-feature-crazy that I expect any day to have to tie up Bank Night and Tango, or something of the sort, and have double cash-premium-night," complained another exhibitor. "Why do I use double features, then? Well, I don't like spinach either, but when I was a kid my father used to make me eat it. The public is sort of like my father used to be."

Although the clamor has greatly died down, women's clubs and other organizations in New England have been strongly urging that double features be discarded, this stand being made a moral issue. Yet exhibitors in various local sections reported that the members of these groups, and even some of the instigators themselves, flocked to double-feature theatres when single-feature stands were accessible.

"Double features are here to stay," said Thomas Woodbury, city manager for the Ramsdell Brothers theatre interests in Beverly, Mass., and one of the first exhibitors to waiver from the single standard. "Very few pictures are made today that are worthy of single billing, not with the public so educated in favor of doubles."

"I'm not in favor of double features," said a spokesman of Allied States. "I'm not in favor of block booking, either, nor of percentage pictures. So what?"

Those last two words seem to be the crux of the whole matter. So what!

Clements Now Director

William Clements, who has been in the cutting room of the Warner Bros. studios in Hollywood, has been made a director by Jack L. Warner, head of the studios, and has been assigned to direct "Prison Farm," soon to go into production.

First Division Appointments

Harry H. Thomas, president of First Division Exchanges, Inc., has appointed Joseph W. Bohn office manager in Indianapolis and Sam Haber, formerly with Gaumont British, salesman in Tennessee.

ESTIMATES SPACE 8,000 THEATRES ON DUALS

No less than 8,000 theatres today are showing double features, estimates Edward Golden, sales manager of Republic Pictures. Mr. Golden, now touring Republic's exchanges in the field, added that the tendency is growing in small towns.

In Flint, Michigan, however, exhibitors were preparing to decide whether they will continue enforcing their present agreement to use double bills only on one change a week, or return to the use of duals regularly.

For the first time in months, a Chicago "Loop" theatre has a dual bill, the Garrick theatre playing "Wings Over Ethiopia" and "Here's to Romance," and this despite the citywide exhibitor agreement to refrain from showing two features on a single program.

And in Kansas City, Fox Midwest installed double bills at its Uptown theatre, thus adding to the troubles of independent suburban owners who are already considerably disturbed over the clearance demands of the circuit.

Walter Eberhardt Funeral Is Held

Funeral services were held Tuesday morning at the Church of St. James, the Less, in Scarsdale for Walter F. Eberhardt, author, scenarist and member of the public relations department of Electrical Research Products, Inc. Mr. Eberhardt was found dead from asphyxiation last Sunday morning, in the garage adjacent to his home. Notes found at his side indicated suicide.

Mr. Eberhardt was widely known in industry circles, particularly in Manhattan, where he had served as secretary of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in 1924-25, as the organization's vice-president in 1925-26 and utimately as its president in 1926-27. Memorial services were to be held at the AMPA Thursday at the regular meeting in New York.

Following five years of newspaper work in New York, Washington, Cleveland, Duluth and other cities, he joined the publicity and advertising department of Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation and later First National Pictures, where he remained for eight years. Since 1929 he had been connected with Erpi.

He was the author of several mystery stories, including "A Dagger in the Dark" and "The Jig Saw Puzzle Murder." He wrote the novelization of Earl Hudson's screen story, "Sundown," and William B. deMille's play, "Classmates."

Mr. Eberhardt, was born in New York in 1893. He was a graduate of Bowdoin College and served overseas with the Canadian Infantry in 1917-19. He is survived by his wife, the former Harriet Howard Kimball, whom he married in 1925.

DISTRIBUTORS SCORE IN DEFENSE AGAINST U.S. CHARGES AT ST. LOUIS

Witnesses for Warner Brothers, Paramount and RKO Take Stand After Judge Refuses to Direct Verdict of Acquittal

Defendants Win Several Rounds With Opening Witnesses Rebutting Allegations of Conspiracy; U. S. Attorney Fined

Warner Brothers, Paramount and RKO this week opened their defense against the United States Government's criminal indictment anti-trust charges in the St. Louis case, after "a million dollars' worth" of prosecution and defense talent had argued for days over motions for directed jury verdicts of not guilty, which Federal Judge George H. Moore refused.

The defense got off to a good start, scoring several points with their opening witnesses in their effort to rebut the allegations that a conspiracy existed among the three distributors to prevent the St. Louis first-run Ambassador, New Grand Central and Missouri theatres of the Harry Arthur - Fanchon and Marco interests from obtaining sufficient product.

The arguments in support of defendants' demurrers to the Government evidence and motions for directed verdicts of not guilty and to dismiss the indictment opened before Judge Moore Thursday afternoon with a three-hour vigorous discussion of the indictment, the evidence and the law and court interpretation of that law on each question by Frederick H. Wood speaking for the Warner group of defendants individually and collectively.

Before opening his address to the court Mr. Wood presented to Judge Moore a 59-page memorandum brief setting forth in detail various court decisions touching on phases of the case as he and other Warner counsel analyzed it. This brief was signed by James A. Reed, Mr. Robert W. Perkins, and Jeffries, of Simpson & Plummer, attorneys for the defendants.

The motions for a directed verdict of "not guilty" and asking dismissal of the indictment filed on Thursday on behalf of the Warner and Paramount individual and corporate defendants were worded slightly differently from those presented Wednesday afternoon by counsel for RKO Distributing Corporation and Ned E. Depinet. Briefly, they were to the effect that the Government had failed to make out a prima facie case of conspiracy against any of the defendants and that therefore the charges should be killed for all time.

The brief set forth that the rule of law as laid down by the guiding decision in this and all other circuits of the United States courts is that evidence to convict must be "substantial evidence of facts which exclude every other hypothesis but that of guilt," and that the evidence in the case consists of a series of acts each in itself lawful, the making of separate and independent contracts between Warner Brothers and each of the other defendants in themselves wholly lawful, and statements claimed to have been made by certain representatives of but a single company, no two companies being represented at the same meeting, and that neither the court nor jury may consider these as evidence of the alleged conspiracy.

Prior to the opening of the arguments Judge Moore denied motions by Mr. Wood on behalf of Warner Bros. and William R. Gentry of Paramount counsel to strike out certain portions of the testimony against their clients. The Warner motions alone would have deleted some three hundred pages of record while Mr. Gentry sought to strike out testimony concerning conversations by various Warner Brothers and RKO officials given by Harry C. Arthur, Jr., Jack Allen Partington, Thomas M. Dysart, Frederick Kreismann, Joseph Grand, David Levinson, Jacob Chasnoff, John S. Leahy, Clarence M. Turley, Frederick W. Straus and M. A. Rosenthal, declaring no proper foundation had been laid for such testimony.

Judge Moore declined to hear arguments on the motion to strike out, saying such matters already had been gone into fully.

Mr. Wood contended that the Government, in charging conspiracy in restraint of interstate trade and commerce, must prove concerted refusal to deal with the complainants, not that the defendants had individually and independently entered into exclusive contracts for first-run motion pictures, since such contracts of themselves were legal and all such contracts everywhere are of necessity exclusive in their exhibition rights; that the Government must establish guilt beyond substantial doubt, not a mere suspicion of guilt based on conjecture. He cited a recent ruling by the United States supreme court definitely rejecting the socalled "scintilla rule of evidence" formerly relied upon to convict in conspiracy cases. He then called attention to Judge Sandborn's decision in the Union Pacific case that the trial judge must direct a verdict of acquittal if the evidence permits of any other hypothesis but that of guilt, and that this rule is now universal.

He then proceeded to show that Warner Brothers had a legal right to lease the Shubert-Rialto and Orpheum theatres, to exhibit their pictures therein and also to contract for RKO and Paramount pictures, and to take the various steps they had taken to protect their equity in the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres and to endeavor to have their reorganization plan adopted in preference to that finally accepted by the bondholders.

He pointed out that the supreme court repeatedly has held that every man has the legal right to engage in any kind of business and the fact that his exercise of that right may restrict and even destroy the business of another does not make his action unlawful. He also said that courts have ruled that the buyer and the seller may choose the persons with whom they do business and may also make a requisite of their purchase that the seller may not do business with another competing concern. In this connection he said that the fact that the opening of the Shubert-Rialto and Orpheum theatres by Warner might have hurt the business of the Fanchon & Marco houses and that the contracts with RKO and Paramount may have limited the pictures available for the Fanchon & Marco houses, was not enough to prove conspiracy in restraint of trade. He said that the Government had not proved or attempted to prove that the Warner Brothers had more pictures than were needed for the Shubert-Rialto and the Orpheum. He stressed that no law compels any business man to build up the business of his competitor.

In support of his contention that Warner Bros., like Fanchon & Marco and any other business man or corporation, had the right to lease theatres in St. Louis or in other cities, and go into the business of exhibiting motion pictures, Mr. Wood cited numerous legal decisions, including the findings of Judge Manton in Federal Trade Commission vs. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corporation.

"In passing," Mr. Wood said, "it may be said that it does not appear and is not contended that Warner Bros. bought more pictures for the theatres it opened in St. Louis than were reasonably required for the operation of these two theatres which it leased and had a clear right to lease.

"The lawfulness of this conduct on the part of Warners is in no wise dependent upon the effect which it may have upon the business of either a present or potential competitor: If so obvious a proposition needs support in the cases, we refer to the following:

"It was said in Federal Trade Commission vs Curtis Publishing Company, 260 U.S. 568:

" 'Effective competition required that traders have large freedom of action when conducting their own affairs. Success alone does not show reprehensible methods, although it may increase or render insuperable the difficulties which rivals must face.'

'It was said by Judge Manton in Federal Trade Commission vs Paramount Famous-Lasky Corporation (57 F. (2d) at p. 157):

" 'The respondent is not required under the law to so conduct its business that every competitor may conduct his with an equal degree of success according to his size and importance.'

"Every business man, whether buyer or seller, has a legal right to choose his own customers for good reasons, bad reasons, or no reasons at all; that is, a buyer may determine from whom he shall buy and a seller may determine to whom he shall sell. This equally obvious proposition would not seem to require the citation of authorities. Since, however, we have a few at hand, it may not be inappropriate to call attention to them." (He then cited numerous court rulings of this long-recognized right of buyer and seller.)

Continuing, he said: "This rule has been applied by the circuit court of appeals for the Second Circuit to the motion picture business in Federal Trade Commission versus Paramount Famous-Lasky Corporation (57 Fed. (2d) 152 (1932), in which the court said at p. 156:

" 'A distributor of films by lease or sale had the right to select his own customers and to sell such quantities at given prices or to refuse to sell at all to any particular person for reasons of his own.'

"In the exercise of this right inherent in both buyer and seller to choose their own customers, either the buyer or the seller may declare his intention not to deal with the other if the other deals with his competitors or follows any other course of action not to his liking, and this irrespective of the effect of a contract made as a result of such declarations or threats, if they may be termed threats, upon the business of such competitors.

"Even if, therefore, the Government should be able to show that the effect of Warner Bros.' entering the business of exhibiting motion pictures in St. Louis through the leasing of theatres for that purpose, made it difficult or, indeed, even impossible (which is not claimed) for the lessees of the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres to do business, or should be able to show that either Warner Bros. or the companies from which they bought motion pictures, or all of them, were conscious that such would be the effect, this would be of no significance.

Must Show Conspiracy

"In order to establish a charge of conspiracy to restrain trade it is necessary and essential to establish the existence of a confederation or conspiracy upon the part of Warner Bros., with the distributors of motion pictures with which it dealt to prevent the lessees of the three theatres from getting pictures, not merely as the result of contracts or a course of action separately determined upon by the three separate business interests as being good business, but it is necessary to distinctly prove a definite confederation, conspiracy, or agreement to act in concert for the purpose of depriving the lessees of any pictures. This the Government has utterly failed to prove by any evidence, since conspiracy or agreement to act in concert cannot possibly be implied from the mere fact of two sales, no matter what disastrous results may come to the competitors of the buyer by reason of their inability to obtain the same pictures.

"The supreme court of the United States has clearly pointed this out in Binderup versus Pathe Exchange (276 U. S. 291). Contrary to Mr. Hardy's statement, there was never any finding in this case that the motion picture companies concerned had been guilty of the acts charged. In the district court the complaint was dismissed upon the opening statement. The supreme court merely held that the district court should not have dismissed upon the opening statement. When the case was tried a verdict was directed for the defendants.

"At page 312 of its opinion the supreme court said:

" 'It is doubtless true that each of the distributors, acting separately, could have refused to furnish films to the exhibitor without becoming amenable to the provisions of the act, but here it is alleged that they combined and conspired together to prevent him from leasing from any of them. The illegality consists, not in the separate action of each, but in the conspiracy and combination of all to prevent any of them from dealing with the exhibitor.'

"The only other acts committed by Warner Bros. as disclosed by the evidence, consisted of various steps which it took to protect its large investment in the companies owning the buildings in which the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres were situated, including the bonds on the properties. All these steps were taken in connection with the reorganization of the owning companies. There is no evidence and no claim that any of the other defendants participated in such acts or were to have any interest in the buildings if Warner Bros. succeeded in its efforts to protect its interest there in the reorganization.

COUNSEL FOR U. S. IS FINED FOR CONTEMPT

A shouted "That's a damn lie" cost Harold L. Schilz of Government counsel a $25 fine for contempt of court on Friday. Judge George Moore was deaf to appeals by defense counsel that the court remit the fine, as it would be "a blot on the career of a young lawyer."

Instead, the judge, declaring that he would not tolerate such conduct, directed Mr. Schilz to rise and apologize, and then assessed the fine.

"Warner Bros. had a lawful right to attempt to protect its interests. In fact, it was the duty of those in charge of the operations of the company to endeavor to do so for the protection of their own stockholders and bondholders. The evidence fails to disclose that Warner Bros. attempted in this effort to take advantage of anybody or that the proposals which it made were unfair to the bondholders or to anybody else.

"In substance, the evidence as to those efforts is that Warner Bros. attempted to work out a reorganization plan with the bondholders and at the same time give to Warner Bros. a chance in the long distant future to salvage some part of the losses which it had sustained by reason of the financial difficulties into which those properties had fallen. An examination of the Warner plan completely negatives any attempt upon the part of Warner Bros. to overreach the committee, and the Government apparently makes no contention that it did. However, had Warner Bros done so, the methods that were employed for the purpose of inducing the committee to agree to its plan would and could have no effect upon interstate commerce."

"Putting the Screws to Warner Bros."

Taking up the various statements credited to various Warner Bros., Paramount and RKO officials in conversations with outsiders, Mr. Wood said that the courts have repeatedly held that "the existence of a conspiracy cannot be established against an alleged co-conspirator by evidence of acts or declarations of his alleged co-conspirators done or made in his absence."

In connection with Herman Starr's declarations in the conferences with the Bondholders Protective Committee, Mr. Wood said that it was apparent the committee was "putting the screws" to Warner Bros., as they had a perfect right to do, and that Mr. Starr, when it became apparent that Warner Bros. was not to be taken into the reorganization plan, made it very clear that his company did not propose to be forced out of St. Louis or to submit to the monopoly of existing first-run theatres by Fanchon & Marco, but would open its own theatres and continue in the exhibition field locally.

Mr. Wood contended that Mr. Starr had a perfect legal right to say everything that was credited to him at various times and that the manner in which he uttered the words did not change the legality.

He said that the United States supreme court in various rulings has clearly demonstrated that in a case consisting merely of a contract or contracts to restrain trade it is not permissable for the Government to charge conspiracy to restrain trade. The reason is that where the conspiracy involves the same combination or community of purpose of two persons essential to the transaction itself, then the substantive offense cannot be turned into a conspiracy. In short, where the cooperation of two persons is essential to a transaction, such as signing a contract for motion picture film, they cannot be charged with conspiracy, he said.

Touching on the evidence against the various individual defendants in the Warner group, Mr. Wood pointed out that the sole evidence against Harry M. Warner was the statement credited to him by witnesses Frederick W. Straus and M. A. Rosenthal, that Mr. Warner had declined their offer to intervene in the St. Louis situation, as Warner Bros. was making money with the Shubert-Rialto and Orpheum and was perfectly satisfied with its St. Louis setup, and the further statement that Mr. Starr had authority to represent the company in St. Louis. He added that the mere fact that Mr. Warner was president of the company was not sufficient convict him of conspiracy, nor to hold him for any unlawful acts that Mr. Starr or any other employee may have committed.

Mr. Wood contended that a review of all the evidence in the Government's case and consideration of the laws applying revealed that the Government had failed to make a prima facie case of conspiracy and that therefore Judge Moore should direct a verdict for the defendants and dismiss the indictment.

The Government's arguments against the defense move for acquittal were made Friday afternoon by Dwight I. Savage and Russell Hardy, special assistant to the attorney general, after pleas for the motion in the morning by Mr. Gentry for the Paramount companies, Samuel W. Fordyce for George J. Schaefer, Paramount vice-president and general manager, and Mr. Leisure on behalf of RKO Distributing Corporation and Ned E. Depinet.

While Mr. Leisure was presenting his argument an incident occurred that compelled Judge Moore to assess a fine of $25 for contempt of court against Harold L. Schilz of Government counsel. Mr. Schilz, without rising from his chair, shouted, "That's a damn lie," when Mr. Leisure stated that the Government has failed to return a carbon copy of an RKO letter that had been used before the federal grand jury last January.

Judge Moore directed Mr. Schilz to arise and apologize to the court, which he did, and then assessed the fine. Later Mr. Leisure and other defendant counsel led by James A. Reed sought to have Judge Moore remit the fine, as it would be a "blot on the career of a young lawyer," but the court said that the fine would not be remitted, as the court could not tolerate such conduct on the part of an attorney.

Mr. Savage, for the Government, without the oratorical presentation of Mr. Wood, presented a very thorough discussion of the Sherman and Clayton acts in their relationship to the case at the bar, citing numerous court decisions to support his chief contention that the fundamental purpose of the law is to secure equality of opportunity to every individual engaged in interstate commerce and to prevent the evil effects of any combination or monopoly that might interfere with such opportunity.

WITNESS DEFENDS WARNER ACTIONS

Answering Mr. Wood's contention of the previous day that the Schechter case, the most recent of the United States supreme court, had shown that the fact that an article may have been incidentally a part of interstate commerce was not sufficient to bring an action under federal statute. Mr. Savage said that a contract signed in New York for motion pictures to be shown in St. Louis was clearly interstate commerce. He said that a conspiracy is rarely susceptible of proof by direct testimony but of necessity must be shown or inferred from circumstances such as acts done.

Mr. Hardy, for the prosecution, said that his clients were not Fanchon & Marco and the bondholders' protective committee, but the Government of the United States, and that the gentlemen that had figured in the situation in opposition to Warner Brothers were merely Government witnesses. Then with picturesque adjectives that carried him all the way from China to the diamond fields of South Africa, with a stopover in Ethiopia to predict the outcome of the Italian invasion of that domain, he proceeded to analyze the testimony that had been given against the various defendants, both corporate and individual, to support his contention that nothing they did in furtherance of the alleged combination against Fanchon & Marco and the bondholders' protective committee and even the United States district court for the Eastern District of Missouri could support any presumption of innocence. He touched on the size and power of Warner Brothers and the comparative smallness of Fanchon & Marco, to prove his contention that Warner Brothers had not only made the threats credited to the company but was able to carry through such threats.

Wood Replies

In the morning Mr. Wood of Warner counsel had replied at some length to the scholarly presentation of the law made Friday by Mr. Savage, and also to the address to the court made by Mr. Hardy. Mr. Wood contended that under the undisputable rule of law, as interpreted by various court decisions, statements and acts of one alleged conspirator made in the absence of his alleged co-conspirators could not be used against them unless and until the existence of such conspiracy had been shown by independent evidence. He said from 90 to 100 per cent of Mr. Hardy's argument should be disregarded because he had confined himself almost exclusively to the various conversations that had been testified to during the trial.

As usual, Wood and Hardy indulged in some very pointed personal discussions somewhat aside from the proceedings, but in the absence of specific objections were given free rein in that regard by the court.

Judge Moore's decision denying the demurrers and dismissal motions was handed down on Monday. Without giving any reasons for his decision, the court overruled each petition.

THREE LEGAL ACTIONS ON TRADE PRACTICES

Legal actions involving trade practices beclouded the film horizons in three centers this week.

At San Antonio the Allied Theatre Owners of Texas decided to concentrate upon a program of seeking anti-trust prosecutions in the territory by the Department of Justice at Washington, on behalf of members of the association. At the convention a week ago a budget of $12,000 was set for the year.

In connection with the anti-trust action filed several months ago in federal court, Newark, by Ledirk Amusement Company, large distributors discussed defense procedure at a gathering of attorneys Friday in the offices of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. The argument of Warner Bros. and Twentieth Century-Fox that the court lacks jurisdiction in their cases will be heard soon.

Reports that the Independent Theatre Owners Association has begun serving papers in its long-threatened suit against large distributors, charging forced tying-in of short product with features, follows word that the association is seeking the indorsement of Allied Theatres of New Jersey for federal intervention through Attorney General David Wilentz to halt trade practices considered inimical to the exhibitors' interests.

Then Warner Bros. took up the defense, placing Sam B. Jeffries, local Warner attorney, on the stand.

Mr. Jeffries related Warners' interest in Skouras Bros. Enterprises and St. Louis Amusement Co. in addition to giving a full analysis of the various reorganization plans the company had submitted to the bondholders' committee for the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central. He also told the court and jury how the bondholders had "walked out" on an oral agreement reached with Warner Bros. on Sept. 18, 1933.

Mr. Jeffries testified that at this conference the bondholders' group and Warner Bros. had a complete understanding on a reorganization plan which required that Warner Bros. put up $400,000 fresh capital with which it would get control of the new company. He said that David Levinson, attorney for the bondholders' committee, had been authorized to draft the plan agreed upon, and although several matters not discussed at the September 18 meeting were included, Warner Bros. did not object because they were considered minor.

Mr. Reed questioned the witness at some length on the management and ownership of the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central and St. Louis Amusement Company. Mr. Jeffries said that in February, 1934, Tom K. Smith was receiver for the three theatres, which were then operated by Spyros Skouras and Clarence M. Turley, who also had possession of the St. Louis Amusement circuit.

Koplar Again Mentioned

He said he had been a director, but had resigned in January, 1934. He also told of the Blake-Skouras Bros. Enterprises and Shea-St. Louis Amusement Company receivership suits, adding that Elsie Probstein, one of the petitioners, was a sister of Harry Koplar; that Nat Koplar, another petitioner, was a brother of Harry Koplar, who, he alleged, was behind the moves.

In 1929, Warner Bros. owned 5,000 shares of Skouras Bros. Enterprises stock, and at the time an intervening petition in bankruptcy was filed, controlled about 96 per cent of the stock, he said. This company owned 51 per cent of St. Louis Amusement Company, Mr. Jeffries declared, and Warners afterwards bought from Mr. Koplar 14,000 shares in the St. Louis Amusement circuit. Several other purchases of St. Louis Amusement stock were made, which gave Warners 40 per cent of the company. Combined with Skouras Bros. Enterprises interest, the total virtually amounted to 91 per cent.

Mr. Dysart, the Warner attorney said, acquired the Ambassador and New Grand Central by foreclosure in January, 1934, as chairman of the bondholders' committee, which held an original first mortgage on the two properties totaling $4,500,000. Mr. Jeffries was not permitted to discuss the mortgage situation regarding the Missouri when Mr. Hardy was sustained in an objection on the ground that the document itself was the best evidence. After a bit of quibbling between Reed and Hardy the former Senator then produced certified copies of documents, including the mortmortgages on the three buildings.

Testifies on Mortgages

Mr. Jeffries testified that the first mortgage on the Ambassador and New Grand Central was for $4,500,000, later reduced through payments to $4,050,000. The second mortgage was for $1,075,000 and later reduced to $800,000. The third mortgage was $1,000,000, which Warners held. The first mortgage on the Missouri was for $2,000,000.

The witness said he knew of the setup from Mr. Arthur's testimony and again Mr. Hardy intervened, stating that the first Government witness should have been cross-examined on this.

Mr. Reed remarked, "I'll address myself to the court and his honor's wisdom." To which Judge Moore replied, "I don't know about that."

Mr. Jeffries said that during the latter part of August, 1933, when the two receivership suits were out of the way, he began to negotiate with the bondholders' committee, recalling a meeting in Chicago that month and a later meeting on September 18 in his office attended by Mr. Starr, Abel Carey Thomas, Dysart, Levinson and himself.

The local Warner legal representative then recited some of the variations put into the plan by the bondholders which were not agreed upon at the conference. Warner Bros. wanted the agreement to run 15 years and the committee insisted on making it 10. The oral understanding on exemption of accumulated interest on the bonds was for the first two years. The committee reduced this to the first 12 months only. That 25 per cent of the money deposited in a sinking fund be paid to the new corporation annually was not changed, nor was the insurance provision or setup of the trustees, the witness said.

Four Warner Representatives

Warner Brothers was given four representatives on the board of trustees, Mr. Jeffries stated, because it would not put up the $400,000 unless it could have 60 per cent of control. Reorganization expenses, plus the amount of money the non-depositing bondholders would get out of the foreclosure sale price was to be paid by Warners. It was agreed Warners would put up $50,000 in escrow in a bank on account of the purchase price of participating certificates, the balance to be paid on delivery. At first a Chicago bank was named, but this was changed to a St. Louis institution. Skouras Bros. Enterprises guaranteed the old bonds, Mr. Jeffries said.

Other provisions were that the committee should get 40 per cent of the authorized stock in the new company, Warners was to have an option to operate the Missouri, for which the company would get a 5 per cent management fee and no capital expense should be reduced from the gross receipts in determining net profit.

Mr. Jeffries said Mr. Levinson never submitted the draft to him, but to Mr. Dysart, who personally changed it so that the committee would be in control for 15 years without putting up a penny. Warners, who were to deposit $400,000 with the committee, were to get nothing, he said.

Asked about the Allen L. Snyder bid for the three theatres, Mr. Jeffries said he had heard about it sometime in January, 1934, shortly after which he conferred with Dysart and inquired if Koplar was connected with the deal. Mr. Dysart replied he was not dealing with Koplar and all negotiations were with Snyder. Mr. Jeffries added that on February 19 he saw Mr. Koplar, who told him that he would not interfere with Warners trying to get control of the St. Louis Amusement Company. On February 22 the Warner attorney visited Mr. Thomas and Mr. Starr in New York and was advised Warners were drawing up a new reorganization plan, he testified.

"We did not say we would keep F. & M. from getting pictures," the witness said. "We did say that Arthur would not get Warner product and that he may not have enough films for the three houses." He denied Mr. Starr called F. & M. "fly-by-nighters." What Mr. Starr did say, the witness testified, was that Mr. Snyder and F. & M. were "not experienced enough financially to carry out so great a responsibility."

Relieving the witness for a while, Mr. Reed read to the jury Warners' proposal, dated March 8, 1934, to the bondholders' committee. This, however, was for the Ambassador and New Grand Central, the Missouri being covered by a separate deal. Both were submitted to Mr. Dysart by Mr. Jeffries on March 15, it was stated.

Warner Brothers on Tuesday scored another important victory when Judge Moore reversed himself and permitted Mr. Reed, for the defense, to introduce testimony relating to Harry Koplar's suits against two companies in which Warners were financially interested, in rebuttal to inferences brought out by the Government on examination of its witnesses.

COURTS MAY ADOPT RECORDS ON FILM

Dean Edward T. Lee, of the John Marshall Law School in Chicago, this week hailed a new sound device capable of reproducing instantly the voices of trial witnesses in courtrooms, as "the last link in the chain of communication."

The sound can be synchronized with motion pictures and the two reproduced before the reviewing tribunals, and thus be a more impressionable of earlier proceedings than the printed record now in use.

The machine will be demonstrated shortly before the Chicago Bar Association for approval as a court instrument.

Mr. Reed was interrogating Sam B. Jeffries, on the stand for a second day, in connection with a conference which he had with members of the bondholders' committee of the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central on August 3, 1933.

After the question of admitting references to Mr. Koplar had finally been settled by Judge Moore, the witness gave reasons why Warners couldn't negotiate with the bondholders' committee. He said it was because of the suits pending before Referee Barker, who later made a report describing the actions as "brought to extort money from Warners, that they were blackmail suits and all charges of mismanagement and misconduct on the part of Warners were unfounded, untrue and quite the reverse."

The referee found, Mr. Jeffries said, that Warners had successfuly, honestly and efficiently operated St. Louis Amusement Company and Skouras Brothers Enterprises.

"Our hands were tied," the local Warner attorney said he told the committee, "in the reorganization of two companies in which we were interested because of the litigation. It was held the suits were brought for the purpose of destroying Warners and this had been confirmed by the court."

The Koplar charges in a petition were also decided in favor of Warners, Mr. Jeffries declared. Mr. Koplar claimed Warners had paid $200,000 to union help which shouldn't have been paid, but the referee found, it was stated, the companies had a contract with the musicians at the time sound displaced theatre orchestras which had to be paid.

The entire Tuesday morning session was devoted to a reading of Warners' reorganization plan for Central Properties by Counsels Reed and Wood. After the reading was completed, Jeffries explained the difference between this plan and that discussed at Mr. Dysart's office on June 6.

When Prosecutor Hardy objected to Defense Counsel Reed's questioning the witness in connection with what he had told Harry C. Arthur about Mr. Koplar and the trouble Warners experienced with him, he was sustained. This, however, occurred just before noon recess when the prosecutor charged Mr. Reed with working up to an impeachment of the government's first witness. The ex-Senator denied the intent and produced testimony in which Mr. Arthur testified he was not informed about the trouble.

Mr. Jeffries, continuing on the stand on Wednesday, testifying under cross-examination by Assistant Attorney General Hardy, took direct issue with several Government witnesses who had testified concerning alleged threats made by Mr. Starr at various conferences with the bondholders' protective committees in connection with the plans for reorganization of the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres.

Among the statements Mr. Jeffries denied were made were reflections on the financial responsibility of Fanchon and Marco, that "If Fanchon and Marco attempt to operate these theatres it will be just too bad for them," and alleged threats that Warner Brothers would prevent Fanchon and Marco and Allen Snyder obtaining sufficient pictures to operate the houses.

The witnesses who Mr. Jeffries disagreed with included Thomas N. Dysart, chairman of the bondholders' protective committee, but he made it very clear that he was not attempting to question Mr. Dysart's honesty or integrity.

"I am quite sure that I am correct in my statement as to what Mr. Starr said, and that Mr. Dysart is mistaken. What Mr. Dysart said may have been his conclusions based upon what Mr. Starr said," Mr. Jeffries said in response to a question by Mr. Hardy.

When Mr. Hardy demanded to know what explanation the witness had to offer for the difference in his and Mr. Dysart's testimony, counsel for the defense objected, but Judge Moore said the witness might answer. Mr. Jeffries replied: "Mr. Dysart is just simply mistaken."

"Does the same thing apply to the various other statements made by government witnesses about Mr. Starr?", Mr. Hardy asked.

"Yes," was the reply. He then explained that he had been through all of Warner Brothers St. Louis troubles, commencing with the Koplar suits and that he thought his memory of what had transpired at the various conferences was "awfully good but I don't want to brag."

Defense Sustained

Mr. Hardy then sought to place Mr. Jeffries in the position of attempting to impeach the testimony of Mr. Dysart. But Senator Reed and other members of defense counsel objected saying that the defense has not questioned Mr. Dysart's reputation for truth and veracity and that the witness had not attempted to do so, and that it was simply a matter of two witnesses having a different recollection of what had been said at a meeting they both attended. Judge Moore sustained the defense, ruling Mr. Dysart's veracity had not been questioned.

Mr. Jeffries proved a better witness on cross-examination than he had on direct, and in response to various questions by Mr. Hardy succeeded in telling the jury that Warner Brothers in all their dealings with the bondholders' protective committee had acted in good faith, had not attempted to block the committees, and that he was not attempting to question the good faith of the bondholders' committees although he did believe they had used bad business judgment in accepting the 10 year Snyder leases in preference to the Warner Brothers reorganization plans.

Russian Delegates Feature Closing Session of SMPE

The closing day's session of the Society of Motion Picture Engineer's thirty-eighth semi-annual convention at the Wardman Park hotel in Washington late last week was given over largely to the industry in Russia. Soviet film executives described Soviet expansion plans.

J. C. Frayne presided at the final session. A paper was read by E. I. Sponable of Twentieth Century-Fox, who discussed elimination of the splice noise in sound films. E. C. Wente of the Bell Telephone Company recounted the contributions of telephone research to sound recording and reviewed his own investigations. A non-directional moving-coil microphone was described by L. W. Giles of the same laboratories.

"In 1935 the Soviet cinema industry's own factories will produce about 300,000,000 feet of cinema film of all kinds, which is 53 times greater than in 1931," said V. I. Verlinsky, head of the Amkino Corporation, distributors of the Soviet product in America. "During this year the number of studios in the U.S.S.R. increased to 19, with a total output of 300 full-length pictures. The Soviet film industry has grown to enormous proportions, employing 150,000 persons. With 32,000 theatres in the union now, it is planned to have a total of 70,000 by the end of 1937."

Professor A. F. Chorine, who directs all motion picture technological work in Russia, extended an invitation to attend a conference of engineers in Moscow next spring in conjunction with the cinema festival.

"Great interest," said Professor Chorine, "is being shown in a movement to bring sound pictures to the remotest corners of Siberia, to sections of the north and to Turkestan, and also to the reading rooms of collective farms."

Vote Shows Audiences Favor Single Feature

The Plaza Theatre, New York, which caters to Park Avenue trade, has announced the first results of its pool on dual features and the ballots show that out of 857 returned, only 120 voted for twin bills while 737 voted for the single picture policy.

In Flint, Mich., on the other hand, exhibitors will meet soon to decide whether they will continue their present agreement to use but one double bill a week.

James M. Minter, owner of the Ritz and Family, has said he would ask exhibitors to discuss the matter, but indications are, however, that the agreement will not be renewed.

FWC Gets Pasadena House

Fox West Coast Theatres has taken over the Tower, Pasadena, from the California Amusement Company, owned by Ray Miller and Robin Rowley, in exchange for the circuit's Pasadena. The Tower was recently transferred to the California Amusement Company by Ben Berinstein and B. H. Lustig.

ANIMATED CARTOON SATIRIZES NEW DEAL

The New Deal is being satirized with an animated cartoon in Philadelphia this week at a "Safeguard the Constitution" exhibition organized by the "Sentinels of the Republic," the organization which led the successful fight against the "pink slip" amendment to last year's Income Tax Law.

Headed by Raymond Pitcairn, attorney and archiect, the sentinels are presenting a free continuous movie at the Garrick Theatre entitled "The Amateur Fire Brigade—A Parable of the New Deal."

The picture will be taken on a tour of key cities following its run in Philadelphia.

Clayton Sheehan Resigns Foreign Post With Fox

Clayton P. Sheehan has resigned from his position of general foreign sales manager of Twentieth Century-Fox, a post he held for twelve years. Mr. Sheehan still had some time to serve the company under the contract he held, but he explained the agreement had been settled on terms "mutually satisfactory."

His successor will not be named for some time, Sidney R. Kent, president, said. Walter Hutchinson, managing director for Fox in England, is reported as a likely successor to Mr. Sheehan. Mr. Hutchinson is scheduled to visit New York early next year. He has been with the Fox organization fifteen years. Meanwhile, Irving A. Maas, who has been assistant to Mr. Sheehan, is in charge of the department.

Mr. Sheehan's resignation had been expected in reports that he would join his brother, Winfield Sheehan, who withdrew as Fox production head last July, in a new affiliation not yet made.

Up to the time of his resignation, Mr. Sheehan had been in the employ of Twentieth Century-Fox and its predecessor, Fox Film Corporation, for eighteen years. He joined the company immediately following his graduation from Harvard University, becoming Buffalo branch manager, then district manager for New York State and finally entering the foreign department.

Supreme Pictures Corporation in Hollywood has finished two westerns starring Bob Steele. The films are "No Man's Range" and "Alias John Law." A. W. Hackel produced the pictures.

Chance Games Increasing in Several States

Despite opposition on several fronts, chance games in theatres are gaining ground, particularly in major cities, reports from the field indicate this week. In New York the powerful Loew circuit has tried "Broadway Handicap Night" with success. In Cleveland a large increase of Bank Nights followed a recent favorable court decision. Fox Midwest Theatres installed Bank Night in thirteen of its houses in Greater Kansas City. In Connecticut and Wisconsin gains also were shown.

B. & K. Drops Screeno

In Chicago, on the other hand, the Balaban & Katz theatres have dropped Screeno after a checkup showed that the game did little to increase attendance or total grosses. Indications pointed to a loss of favor by the various "prize nights" at most of the houses despite the recent adoption of Sweepstakes by the State-Lake theatre on the Lopp.

The Booklyn Palace theatre introduced "Broadway Handicap Night" last week and brought out the largest crowd the house has had in years. As a result of the succesful inception there, other Loew houses are reported preparing to introduce the stunt. Screeno, which is being offered in other houses of the chain, will be continued, it is believed, and will not be discarded for a substitute.

Twenty houses in Cleveland are now using Bank Night and about 100 in Northern Ohio since the recent court decision that the game does not constitute unfair competition and a number of houses are making plans to introduce Sweepstakes to their patrons.

Fox Midwest Uses Bank Night

Thirteen Fox Midwest houses in Greater Kansas City, including the first-run Uptown, began using Bank Night last week. The circuit is operating the promotion on a pool arrangement whereby patrons may register at any theatre and win by attending any other Fox house.

In Bridgeport, Conn., the Loew organization has purchased Bank Night for the Globe and Screeno for the Lyric. It is also reported that five other Bank Night contracts are being considered over the Poli New England circuit, including the Bijou, New Haven. This is Loew's first venture into any special inducement plan other than amateur and stage shows in this territory.

In Madison, Wis., the state attorney general's office has notified District Attorney William M. Gleiss that free distribution of cards bearing numbers which entitle holders to prizes is not a lottery. The question arose over the policy of a Monroe theatre's giving away money once a week to the holder of the lucky number.

Despite a restraining order prohibiting authorities from interfering with Bank Night programs, granted by the superior court at the request of Affiliated Enterprises, police in Indianapolis late last week arrested Mark G. Margolis, operator of the Rivoli, and Urban Anderson, former manager, charging them with operating a lottery. The drive was ordered following a riot at the Rivoli over an alleged conspiracy in the drawing for a Bank Night prize.

Thanks a Million

(20th Century-Fox-Zanuck)

Comedy

Exactly what the title says is just what voices of pleased exhibitors and audiences should echo unanimously when this picture is presented. It's sock amusing entertainment from start to finish. The showmanship-exploitation availability is so plainly apparent in every phase that even the most thoughtless cannot help but see it. It is a combination of entertainment and commercial elements dually providing buyer and seller with the most desired essentials—personalities, rib-tickling comedy, farce drama, lilting catchy music, topical timeliness, appealing human love interest, finely mounted production quality, smartness of direction in handling dialogue, action and situations, specialty features, a unique racing-singing anticlimax and a surprise finale.

"Thanks a Million" is a story of a new kind of political campaigning, but it's not an ordinary political story. For a plot: Fred Allen sells gubernatorial candidate Raymond Walburn's campaign managers the idea of using his stranded band troupe as a crowd-drawing ballyhoo. Voters flock in amazing numbers to hear this new kind of bushwhacking, lured by the charm of Dick Powell's singing and the class of the supporting show. Walburn's addiction to the juice of the forbidden fruit proving too much for his sponsors to stand, they sidetrack him and put Powell up in his place. Enters the eternal triangle with Mrs. Boss Krueger trying to do a little philandering to drive a wedge between the sweethearts, Powell and Ann Dvorak. Comes Powell to put the blast on his new found friends, exposing his candidacy as just another trick of the same old boodlers to grab the spoils. Follows his finding of the fleeing Ann Dvorak and the singing-race to get to the state line as a whole horde of motor cops are in hue and cry, and the hilarious finale when Powell finds that despite his revealing tirade he has been elected governor.

That's the story, but quite naturally it cannot picture all the fun and frolic. Not by any means does it describe the heart-touching romance of Powell and Miss Dvorak. Nor does it tell of any of the fun in dialogue and action by Fred Allen, Patsy Kelly and Raymond Walburn. Nor does it reveal the drama of the conniving politicians, Alan Dinehart, Andrew Tombes, Edwin Maxwell and Paul Harvey or their opposition party rival who import Paul Whiteman and his band and Ramona as an offset to Powell's stunt. Nor does it tell of Margaret Irving's disillusionment when Powell takes her for what she says she is. At the same time, the story cannot tell anything of the hilarious singing and acting contributions of The Yacht Club Boys and Benny Baker. It doesn't include mention of Powell's singing "Thanks a Million," "Sittin' High on a Hilltop" and "I've Got a Pocketful of Sunshine," numbers to regale audiences and matched by the trio rendered by the Yacht Club Boys.

As the show is comedy, all fun and laughter, with only a couple of serious moments, it's the kind of entertainment patrons should enjoy. As soon as the first few who see it start talking, the rest should follow. But there's no need to wait for or depend upon word-of-mouth advertising. The picture undoubtedly will be in the air, people awaiting it expectantly long before it is played. While everything required to bring them in in large numbers is at anyone's disposal to be used in all the old and every new showmanship way, there's no justification for getting over-confident. Plenty of work will be required to let potential patrons know all the entertainment this has in store for them. The more convincingly they are told the better returns should be.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Ship Cafe

(Paramount)

Romance with Music

Well produced, sticking closely to the theatrical recipes that make for mass entertainment, this picture offers much to amuse patrons and much to occupy showmanship inclinations. With action the outstanding quality, the story is a smartly contrived comedy romance built about a unique situation. While embellished with specialty music and dancing, emphasis is continually focused on comedy.

Essentially, although the idea is not thoughtlessly shoved to the fore, the yarn has a distinctive he-man quality. Preserving this character, comedy contrast and musical interludes together with the appeal of on-again-off-again love interest so color the feature that there is a coherent diversity of amusement to please the fancies of varying tastes.

Presented in a manner that creates the impression that something unlooked for is always going to happen, the picture follows through on this idea by having plenty that is unanticipated occur to capitalize nicely the amusement-exploitation value of these qualities.

The story is that of a singing stoke hold coal heaver whose fiery temper and hatred of a dainty nickname both get him into a peck of trouble and make him a prized night club attraction. Jailed following a coal shovel swinging duel, the result of someone calling him Dimples, Briny gives Anderson the job of bouncer in his Ship Cafe. Falling in love with star entertainer Ruby, a straight romance that has its comedy counterpart in the antics of Briny and Molly, Anderson becomes a singing success while pinch-hitting for Davis. His old nemesis, the Countess, gets him into another jam, this time with champ Rocky Stone, an incident which, while great for the cafe's business, changes Anderson's outlook. Apparently falling hard for the Contess, though only trying to do what Ruby has urged him, he accepts her bid to become the big shot of a swank club which a friend of hers is to open. But as the Countess only makes a gigolo of him, Anderson, following a satirical ribbing by Ruby and Molly, walks out on the arrangement. Wanting only the freedom of the wind-blown sea, he makes his way back to renovated Chip Cafe to be enthusiastically welcomed by Briny. But in the meantime his second mate's papers have arrived and as he gets a job on a sailing vessel, Ruby, who realizes he is passing out of her life forever, rushes after him, only to be dunked in the ocean a couple of times before she winds up in his arms.

In the picture audiences will see a heretofore unrevealed Carl Brisson, a fact acceptable to showmen also, as his part here does more for him as an attraction than any of his previous pictures. While he has several songs to please those who like his singing, the he-man character of his role, which in its romantic angle has a human interest twist, justifies his being given much publicity attention. Other players, mainly Arline Judge, William Frawley and Inez Courtney, should be given the benefit of intensive plugging.

In general a brand of publicity that establishes the picture as something vividly new and different in the line of fast moving entertainment looks to be the medium that will arouse most interest. There's plenty with which to work and segregating the values that will have most local influence should bring the best results.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Turn of the Tide

(British National Films)

Sea Drama

First feature of a new British unit, "Turn of the Tide," promises well for its producers, who have certainly struck a new story note and, in the technical sense, achieved a definite and original success. Box office appeal does not reach the same standard, the dramatic values being overweighted by a background excellent in itself but possessing "documentary" rather than entertainment appeal.

The story traces the development of a feud between two families of fishermen on the Yorkshire coast. The Fosdycks have been established in the village for generations; the Lunns only recently have come from another village twenty miles away, and are called "foreigners." Feeling is further embittered by the fact that the newcomers are progressive, fit a motor engine to their boat and go out after catches which the others are afraid to attempt. Old Isaac, head of the Fosdycks, is most bitter against the Lunns and threatens to turn his granddaughter, Ruth, out of his house when she falls in love with young John Lunn. In the end, however, the lifeboat salvages a stranded steamer, the Lunns and Fosdycks agree to pool their prize money and buy a steam trawler and the old man is made captain and withdraws his opposition to the love match.

The sea scenes are magnificently done, with the relief of the stranded steamer a high spot, and throughout there is an authenticity of atmosphere which is facinating if one is content to accept a cross-section of life in a primitive community as substitute for more conventional plot values.—ALLAN, London.

Comedy Drama

Clean and attention holding, this music tinged comedy drama stacks up as a pleasing entertainment and showmanship feature. It's the story of a little girl, played by a little girl, in which the comedy is always light and gay, the drama just dramatic enough in its power to stimulate suspense and the interluding music and dancing just effective enough to assure proper balance. Well written, capably directed, with all the players, particularly the star, contributing convincing performances, the show moves evenly and spots its various punches just where they will do most good.

Traveling alone to America, little Irish colleen Jane Withers makes friends with a group of Russians, Tamara, Popuska and Momuska, during an entertainment in the ship's steerage. Landing, the child is heartbroken to find that her mother is not there to meet her and that something has happened to prevent her leaving the ship. A comedy situation contrived to effect her escape from Ellis Island, the child encounters various entertaining adventures in making her way to the house in which her mother was employed. Despite the warnings of the icy maiden ladies, Flora and Emma Ford, and the fears of butler Benton, Dora takes the child in and tells her that her mother is dead.

More comedy, including a wild chase featuring the Ford cat and Jane's dog, finally lands the child in Ray Ford's room. Taking her to heart at once, he issues instructions that the little lady is to be treated as one of the family. Come Mischa and Tamara, seeking news of the child, only to have Mischa in a sparkling comedy sequence make a different man of moss-backed Ray.

Moving into the Cafe Petrovitch, in which Ray has become a very modern-minded partner, Jane is the featured member of a group of Russian entertainers as the immigration officers finally catch up with her to deport her. But Officer McGuire has a heart big enough to overcome his sense of duty and when he suggests that if someone adopts the child she can stay, Ray and Tamara reveal that they have been married and that they will make the child theirs.

Not only does the production make available the worth of a good and interesting story for showmanship purposes, but it features little Miss Withers in several singing and dancing numbers; Rita Cansino is similarly presented, and Pinky Tomlin in a specialty song number, while a surprisingly pleasing comedian is uncovered in George Givot. Given the benefit of an aggressive campaign, the show has attractive qualities to offer.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Born to Gamble

(Majestic)

Drama

The effect of an inherited gambling taint on four grandsons of a western gambler is the provocative theme of this picture, which may be used for exploitation purposes. The gambler is killed in a duel as the result of his last bet. His daughter marries and has four sons who inherited the gambling urge with disastrous consequences. One of the sons is lost with the Lusitania, after taking passage on the doomed liner on a bet. Another is murdered by a bootlegger's gang. The third commits suicide after losses in the stock market, and the fourth, in avenging the death of his murdered brother, is involved in the killing of a notorious gangster. The mother dies brokenhearted, and the father is haunted by the tragedies.

Adapted from Edgar Wallace's "The Greek Poropulos," this picture has some very dramatic movements and the cast turn in some very meritorious performances. Emphasis on the name of Edgar Wallace is indicated in the selling campaign. And, as mentioned, there is the question, "Can a fondness for gambling be inherited?" The cast is headed by Onslow Stevens and includes such well known players as H. B. Warner, Maxine Doyle, Eric Linden, Lois Wilson, William Janney and Ben Alexander.

Stevens plays a dual role, that of the western gambler and the fourth son, who finally succeeds in ridding himself of the betting habit, easing his aged father's last days. The direction keeps the picture moving at a lively pace and photography is good.

H. B. Warner, wealthy clubman, in his contention that settling any controversy by gambling is futile, draws from the history of his family to prove his point. He describes the untimely death of his father-in-law as the result of a bet in Colorado in the 1860's. Warner tells of his marriage to Lois Wilson, the gambler's daughter, and their four sons. As youngsters his sons had been constantly in hot water, betting with the neighbors' children and even playing dice in the nursery.

As they grow to manhood the gambling urge became stronger. Paul the first born (Ben Alexander) forges his father's name to checks. Fred (William Janney) is expelled from college for organizing a football betting pool. Shame and humiliation break the mother's heart, and a few years later she dies. Warner gathers the boys together once a year at a dinner to honor the anniversary of their mother's death. It is at one of these dinners that we find Alexander, an aviator, planning to sail on the Lusitania and enlist in the Lafayette Esquadrille. He chooses the Lusitania to win a bet with a friend. Janney is a broker in Wall Street specializing in shady deals. Earl (Eric Linden) has just obtained a loan of $5,000 as his contribution towards a bootlegging career. Henry (Onslow Stevens) is still at college.

Stevens, the only one of the boys of more sober mien, changes completely after Linden is murdered. Frequenting the race track and drinking a good deal, he becomes a friend and partner of a notorious gangster. Fixing prize fights and wrestling matches, the partnership thrives financially. Betting all on one of the supposedly fixed fights, the gangster is cleaned out. He accuses Stevens of double cossing. Stevens retaliates by accusing the gangster of the death of Linden. The gangster is shot by an unknown person while arguing with Stevens. Stevens is accused but is acquitted. Stevens takes charge of his father's piano business and saves it from bankruptcy, after which he marries Maxine Doyle.—MOONEY, New York.

His Night Out

Comedy

Hokum comedy, featuring a player whose forte is this brand of entertainment, "His Night Out" is promising as both an engaging audience attraction and an interesting showmanship feature as well. With the widely known name of Edward Everett Horton as its keystone, a campaign assuring patrons that the picture should afford them some of the merriest moments ever enjoyed can easily be adapted. Material for this is found in significance of the title, entertainment worth of story content, prestige of supporting players and merit of supplementing production values.

Horton's role is characteristic. He is a jittery purchasing agent deathly afraid of his boss, Robert McWade, and timidly in love with office girl Irene Hervey. Also he has an imaginary illness which leads him to sample all cure-all pills and become easy meat for quack doctors.

Simultaneously with McWade's preparing for a merger and having a fortune in the safe with which to put the deal through, Horton is victimized into believing that he has only a few months to live. His troubles fade, however, when he learns that his sweetheart's little brother needs an expensive operation, which Horton, secretly heroizing himself, guarantees. Then, believing his days are numbered, he embarks on a grand spree with Irene that amazes even his frugal heart. In the meantime, McWade's bonds are stolen. Irene thinks that's how Horton got his money, and to protect him, confesses to the theft. To shield her, Horton confesses that he's the culprit. His jailing galvanizes Miss Hervey into action.

Now comes a comedy gangster atmosphere, with Miss Hervey doing a little inside investigating. Gangster Jack LaRue, who stole and has the hot bonds, becomes convinced that Horton is in cahoots with his rival in crime, Arch Robbins. To complete his coup, LaRue bails Horton out, but is unable to get any information out of him after a thorough beating up. The gangster gets identities mixed up, and in the hokum, action, laugh-packed anticlimax, Horton not only puts the finger on the thieves but surprises himself by recovering the bonds. Follows the happy romantic ending, the discovery that the supposed invalid is healthy and the promise of swell job that assures married life being a beautiful thing.

One of those pictures to which ordinarily not much attention is devoted, a smart adaptation of what is provided can be expected to win the average patrons. Build for big first presentation audiences and word-of-mouth advertising should be highly beneficial to subsequent shows.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Transatlantic Tunnel

(GB)

Drama

An inkling of what the future may hold in store for the English speaking nations, primarily England and America, is contained in this dramatic picture. Produced with foresight and vision, the production definitely gives the exhibitor something to talk about and to sell. The building of a tunnel between London and New York, entirely credible due to the excellent direction of Maurice Elvey, is the gigantic undertaking of the future carried to its completion after heartbreaking and almost insurmountable odds. Then, too, there are pictured other fancied devices in accord with the times to come, television and aircraft similar to the autogiro of today, but capable of spanning the Atlantic swiftly and comfortably, depositing its occupants in the heart of a city.

A sequence, as novel as it is powerful, shows Congress and Parliament meeting simultaneously in Washington and London with the President of the United States addressing both Congress and Parliament and the Prime Minister of England in a similar situation made possible by television. Walter Huston portrays the President, and George Arliss, the Prime Minister.

The cast is headed by Richard Dix and includes Leslie Banks, Madge Evans, Helen Vinson, C. Aubrey Smith and Basil Sydney. Dix is here in the vigorous type of role which has brought him his widest following. He is cast as a hard driving, relentless engineer interested only in the completion of his brain child, the tunnel. Leslie Banks portrays Robbie, associate engineer and close friend of Dix.

Dix conceives the project of building a transatlantic submarine tunnel linking New York with London. A group of international financiers agree to back him. The project begins with two crews working toward each other, one from the New York end and one from London. With danger everywhere, the work goes on, driven by the relentless will of Dix. Dix's wife (Madge Evans), jealous of the demands made on Dix by the tunnel and of rumors linking him with the daughter of one of his financial backers, leaves him. Dix, unaware of the true situation, blames his friend Banks.

Death, tragedies and finally manipulation of the stock market, which causes a crash in Tunnel stocks, stop work temporarily on the tunnel. With the help of Helen Vinson, who intercedes on behalf of Dix, one of the backers agrees to put more money into the project. With the recommencement of the work, Dix's son joins the tunnel workers. Nearing the meeting point, the radium drill, boring through the ground, encounters a seething submarine volcano. Hundreds are killed, including Dix's son. The tragedy reunites Dix and his wife and friendship with Banks is restored.

Showmanship values in the picture are many, but emphasis on its uniqueness and the possibility of it happening in the future, plus capitalizing on the drawing power of Richard Dix and the featured names of the cast, seem to be the best selling factors. It is a picture with appeal for adults and youngsters alike.—Mooney, New York.

I Found Stella Parish

(Warner)

Drama

This is a drama of mother love, a story of devotion, fear, sacrifice, heartache and, finally, inspired triumph. Keyed to a serious human interest pitch, its emotional appeal is aimed directly at arousing the most sympathetic sensibilities. Essentially it is a woman's picture, yet its other principal ingredients—romantic love interest and novelly contrived mystery—give it a character for general audience attention if the values are properly established.

While certain phases and incidents can be adapted to ballyhoo exploitation, the fundamentals are such that can be most efficiently commercialized through carefully thought out and sincerely worded advertising and publicity copy. Though a child plays an important part in the story's development, the subject matter is probably a little too deep for immature minds and thus of little interest to juveniles. Sold, however, as an adult attraction, the full force and power of the theme can be made evident.

In the beginning Stella Parish is the most beloved actress appearing on the London stage. Adored by millions, dear to the heart of her producer, Stephen Norman, all her thoughts are devoted to the welfare of her child, Gloria, whose existence she has kept a close secret, trusting the knowledge only to nurse Nana. At the height of her triumph comes the menace of her estranged husband, blackmail bent, threatening to wreck every illusion and dream that is dear to Stella.

To escape it, to protect the child more than herself, Stella flees. Norman, shocked at the disappearance of his great star, calls upon newspaper man Lockridge to aid him in finding her. Interluded by a bit of action aboard a transatlantic liner, Lockridge, through Gloria, is sure that he is on the trail of Stella. In New York, a newspaperman at heart but gradually falling in love with the disguised Stella, he is still on the trail of a sensational story. Comes the blow off when Lockridge's story, publicized in in England, is flashed back to America, which gives Stella the impression that the friend she had trusted had been playing with her affections just to get a sensational yarn.

Revealing herself as what she actually is supposed to be, a pardoned but innocent murderess, in the meantime putting the child out of her life, she becomes a theatrical sensation, but as yesterday's flaming headlines grow cold she gradually sinks lower and lower in the profession scale, eventually becoming a side attraction to a cheap burlesque show. There she is found by Norman, who convinces her that the British want her back. Set in the role from which she fled, she is fearful of what will happen, until looking out from the wings she sees little Gloria sitting in a loge. The inspiration of her presence enables her to give a performance eclipsing any previous appearances. With England's theatregoers at her feet, she finds happiness and love with Lockridge.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Show Them No Mercy

Drama

Melodramatic as it capitalizes the entertainment and commercial worth of gangster versus G-man conflict, this picture embellishes that quality with stark but believable human drama. Fast moving and convincing in premise, dialogue and action, assets which fine performances by the entire cast greatly enhance, the show has an appeal that, with merely the aid of a sketchy publicity campaign, should make a deep impression. The ingredients of the novel powerful drama are those with which the public has become familiar through other pictures and news events. But the drama, diverging radically from formula and thus setting the picture entirely apart from any predecessor, is the peg upon which bids for popular interest can be most effectively based.

The story indicates the character of applicable showmanship. Melodrama colors the opening as a kidnap ransom, paid against advice of Justice Department men, convinces the criminals that theirs is a perfect undetectable crime. Switching, the picture takes on a sympathy stimulating quality as a young couple, Rochelle Hudson and Edward Norris, and their baby seek refuge from a storm in a deserted farmhouse and are surprised to find the kitchen well stocked with needed foodstuffs. It plunges into its dramatic melodrama when the kidnapers arrive to divide their loot and make the little family prisoners. Most vicious of the group, Bruce Cabot wants to kill them immediately. As Edward Brophy and Warren Hymer contribute characteristic tension-easing comedy, ringleader Cesar sees in Norris a medium of spending the supposedly untraceable money. Attempting this, the gang discover they have fallen into a trap as, paralleling a recent sensational case, the G-men have so arranged the currency that its serial numbers are positive clues to the criminals.

Panic stricken, the gang start to quarrel among themselves and with menacing Cabot threatening to make good his determination to kill the family, suspense builds in seething style. Attempting a getaway, Brophy is killed, but Cabot makes his way back to the hideout. Later Hymer is killed by officers as he attempts to pass one of the bills. In the house, murderous Cabot plays Romero, but, in attempting to kill the family, he is sensationally machine-gunned by Miss Hudson.

While it would be inadvisable not to take full advantage of the entertainment sock of the gangster-G-man basis of the picture, it seems that the element that would surely add to its commercial success would be an intelligent concentration on the drama of the little family held prisoner. It is not a secondary quality, as in any analysis it is the hub about which all else turns. As such it provides something different to talk about. This can be done not only through straight-from-the-shoulder publicity copy, but also by way of ballyhoo exploitation, suggestions for which are almost unlimited.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Frisco Kid

(Warner)

Melodrama

An action thriller from first sequence to fadeout, there's enough vivid punchy entertainment in this to interest anyone and more than enough showmanship potentialities with which to sell it. What is required for both purposes is found in worth of story account, class of substantiating production effects, the manner in which both are combined to maintain continual renewed interest, and quality of cast in star and supporting names.

It is a story of San Francisco's now legendary but once notorious Barbary Coast. As it is presented, in an air of convincing realism, time moves backward and there is believable authenticity to its raucous, vibrant, sometimes sordid but always colorful, melodrama; the surprising tender quality of its love interest and the comedy's human humor. The surge of its pulse-tingling action is in the full spirit of the Barbary Coast that either memory or imagination conjures.

Fact is blended with fiction to make the show. Though the feature, in substantiating production detail, is elaborate and thorough in its pictorial description of all the conflicting emotional cross-currents that made the Coast such a scarlet spot, the motivating story is comparatively simple.

Basically it's the story of Bat Morgan and his adventurous career in the organization and demolition of the Coast. A shanghaied sailor, he escapes his captors to kill the murderous despoiler of men, Duck, in a fierce barroom brawl. Then he's Bat, the nation's first racketeer czar, the lust for money and power permeating his soul and merging under his control all the vicious features, gambling dens, the lowest kind of dives that were part and parcel of the Coast. Colorful to a high degree, this element has an unusual romantic counterpart. First through sympathy for Jean, daughter of a murdered newspaper publisher, Bat comes to see the way she sees and to love her. Even his stirring conflicts with Morra, ambitious rival gambler, though great personal triumphs for Bat serve to weld a closer bond between the lovers. Unwillingly at first, his relations with Jean bring him into alliance with her crusading editor Ford.

Comes the dramatic turning point when the righteous citizens, symbolized by the illustrious Vigilantes, rise in rebellion. At the crossroads, the way is marked clearly for Bat. His love for Jean proving more powerful than his selfish greed for wealth and power, he rides with the raiders as Morra is made their victim, the Coast is laid waste before the flames and Bat and Jean, sure now only of their great love for each other, visualize a great new San Francisco, the rebuilding of which will be the devotion of their future.

Pulsating drama, the picture has been produced with an intelligence that practically precludes any objection to its fundamental vivid character. As it centers its theatrical license about events and incidents that are actual history, it makes an honest effort to picture the combined elements in a realistic atmosphere. In this condition, understanding direction on the part of Lloyd Bacon has inspired James Cagney, Margaret Lindsay, George E. Stone, Ricardo Cortez, Fred Kohler, Donald Woods, particularly, and the remainder of the cast in general, to remarkable acting performances. The picture was enthusiastically received by the preview audience.

The matter of its entertainment quality being an assured fact (though it is distinctly an adult feature) the question of showmanship should be given individual thought. It provides opportunity for diversified campaigns in which special ballyhoo stunts, cooperative exploitation and straight printed copy can all fill an important part in revealing the production's colorfulness.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Comedy

Laughs, particularly of the type associated with Lee Tracy and Roscoe Karns, should be the keynote of showmanship campaigns in handling this picture. The comedy is of the situation type for the most part, but the lines are so punchy and are so aided by the deliveries of the two featured comedians, that the picture abounds in rib-tickling scenes.

It is true that the film concerns the doings of a prize fighter and his fast-talking manager, but the principal motivating theme is domestic comedy drama that takes place in the home of "ultra-social people."

The quality of story content alone, amply embellished with production values that provide correct atmosphere and with cast names such as Gail Patrick, Grace Bradley, Kent Taylor and Billy Lee, also suggests unique and lively showmanship.

The story concerns the misadventures, in a socialite's home, of a fighter and his manager who give up battling in the ring for buttling in a swank mansion. The direction never allows the action to lag for a moment and it keeps the audience interest building right up to the climax.

The picture is an adaptation from the play, "Is Zat So," which was a tremendous success on Broadway several seasons ago.

Hap Hurley and his stumble-bum fighter, Chick Moran, are stranded—hungry and with no prospects of future fights—when they meet Clint Blackburn, wealthy socialite with a strong love for liquor. Clint invites his new friends to his home for a meal and helps them further by paying a taxi bill that had them stumped.

On arriving at the palatial mansion of their benefactor they agree to sober him up and put him in first-class condition. When they discover that his sister, Sue Parker, is having trouble with her estranged husband, who is trying to take their child in order to control the youngster's fortune, they decide to take jobs in the household in order to protect everyone.

Hap appoints himself butler and makes Chick the second man. From here on the laughs fly thick and fast when the two try to do things in Emily Post's "correct way."

To celebrate Clint's birthday a fight is arranged between Chick and an unknown fighter, the battle to be staged in the drawing room. While everyone is crowded around the ring a ladder is discovered against the child's window and his bed is empty. Chick kayoes his opponent, who is the leading contender for the title, to help search for the youngster, and the estranged husband arrives to further complicate matters since he was suspected of the kidnaping. The child is found in the garage, however, staging a prize fight of his own.

The father is forced to give up his fight for the child, consenting to award his wife a divorce, and the romance between Chick and Marie, the maid, comes to a happy ending.

All in all, it's grand fun with plenty of laughs to please anywhere.—Baehler, New York.

BAR 20 RIDES AGAIN

Paramount

Made by Harry Sherman, whose two previous western contributions to the Paramount program, "Hopalong Cassidy" and "Eagle's Brood," have been favorably received, this feature is a furtherance of the entertainment quality and potential showmanship that was part and parcel of those pictures. Additionally, it features William Boyd and Jimmy Ellison who, with Frank McGlynn, Jr., were the top personalities of those pictures in the roles of Hopalong, Nelson and Red Connors.

Geared to appeal not only to the outdoor action fans but also those who appreciate sound diversity in their entertainment fare, the feature concentrates on elements that can be counted upon to satisfy. With the expected romantic contrast it's a yarn of cattle rustling bad men, terrorizing a country side. All goes well for them and their chief inspiration until the redoubtable Hopalong Cassidy decides to take a hand not only to insure the romantic feature of his pal, Johnny Nelson, but likewise to bring peace and security to the outraged ranchers. Preceded by a sensational cattle stampede, Hopalong, to the tune of dangerous and daring personal adventure, accomplishes his purpose.

In addition to the names mentioned, Harry Worth is featured as the prime bad man and Ellison's romance centers about Jean Rouveral. Other players to be seen are George Hayes, Howard Lang, Frank Layton, Ethel Wales, J. P. McGowan, Paul Fix, John Merton and Al St. John.

Showmanship similar to that which proved effective in selling the preceding features should be applied.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE

Radio

As an original stage play starring George M. Cohan and since made several times as motion picture entertainment, "Seven Keys to Baldpate" has emphatically demonstrated its amusement and exploitation worth. A comedy mystery in idea, it includes all the fundamentals that have become formula to all succeeding similar type yarns, either comic or shudder-provoking in character. As a story within a story, it is demonstrative that the melodrama of real life, as well as human reaction to it, is more startling than that of fiction.

Originally the story was by the late Earl Derr Biggers, creator of the currently popular Charlie Chan character; a fact, that is an undeniable showmanship asset. The locale is Baldpate Mountain Inn, a dreary, windswept, deserted summer resort to which comes a novelist seeking quiet and a place to write. He believes that he has the only key. Ensues a series of strange, weird and scary events that eventually prove that there are seven keys, which the possessors all hope to use for reasons of their own, and these reasons make the story.

The cast features Gene Raymond in the role of the novelist. Others are Margaret Callahan, who with Raymond shares the romantic angle; Eric Blore, Molly Lamont, Moroni Olsen, Grant Mitchell, Ray Mayer, Henry Travers, Harry Beresford, Emma Dunn and Murry Alper.

Being directed by Edward Killy and William Hamilton, who recently teamed on "Freckles," a main point to include in all exploitation is that the picture, modernized in every way, retains all that proved so interesting in past presentations, embellishing it with all the advantages which the modern screen and experience make possible.

INVISIBLE RAY

When Karloff and Bela Lugosi are co-featured and the picture carries such a title as this, showmen and audiences can look for something unique and powerful in the way of superweird, nerve tingling, thrill entertainment. In digest here's an outline of what will be seen that one may gather ideas of how, in addition to name values, it may be marketed.

In the hidden fastnesses of the Valley of the Moon, deep in Africa's mountains, Karloff discovers and partially controls an invisible ray in which are locked up all the destructive and some of the beneficial forces of cosmic creation. Pursuing his discoveries, he is horribly dsfigured and his wife, Frances Drake, who desires only to be faithful, finds herself falling in love with Frank Lawton. Lugosi, a not wholely trusted co-worker, discovers an antidote to Karloff's ghastly affliction. Later when Karloff has made his discovery scientifically available, the scene shifts to Paris. There, seeing the happiness of his domestic and professional establishment menaced, Karloff turns killer and embarks upon the destruction of friend and enemy alike, utilizing the forces of his invisible ray. His reign of terror is halted by the heroic action of his mother, who sacrifices his life rather than permit a madman to terrorize the world.

The story, an original by Douglas Hodges and Howard Higgin, adapted by John Colton and directed by Lambert Hillyer, provides unusual material for Karloff and Lugosi. Production settings can be counted upon, in their scientific fantasy, to accentuate fully all the yarn's eerie gyrations.

Naturally highly imaginative, but nevertheless venturing into the realm of eagerly searched for scientific fact, the picture should be productive of a brand of showmanship that is as diverse in its power to attract attention in imaginative ways as the picture will seek to entertain in the same manner.

YOUR UNCLE DUDLEY

No matter what the story, who produced it or who's in it, the mere notation of Edward Everett Horton's name in the cast seems to guarantee to the public that the show is worth their time and money. Long regarded as the busiest actor in Hollywood, the number of his appearances as leading featured player far outstripping that of any contemporary, there appears to have dawned a realization that his appearance is an automatic assurance of showmanship availability and entertainment satisfaction.

Consequently, no matter what the character of this story, and it is a down-to-earth, homey, human comedy finely adapted to Horton's talents, he is the dominating interest stimulating feature. Based on a stage play of the same title by Howard Lindsay and Bertrand Robinson, with adaptation by Dore Schary and Joseph Hoffman and screen play by the master humorist Allen Rivkin and direction by Eugene Forde, the feature potentially is an all-family attraction. As it combines light drama with its motivating comedy, it deals solely in elements that make for understandable and believable domestic entertainment—the kind that might and probably does happen in any family or community.

With Horton, most recently in "His Night Out" relied upon to carry the greater share of the interest stimulating load, the remainder of the cast is more than adequate in its potential showmanship value. Listed are Lois Wilson, recently seen in "Cappy Ricks Returns"; Rosina Lawrence, a popular young player featured in "Charlie Chan's Secret"; John McGuire, seen as the boy in "Steamboat Round the Bend"; Alan Dinehart, previously with Horton in "$10 Raise" and now in "Thanks a Million"; Marjorie Gateson, William Benedict, Florence Roberts and Jane Barnes.

SPLENDOR

UA-Goldwyn

A dramatic romance, this is also the story of a woman's love and sacrifice. Modern in context, localed in New York, it tells of the marriage of an idealistic but impoverished son of a de-fortuned family to an impecunious daughter of the Old South. The girl's mother, inimical to the marriage as it upsets her plans to restore the family's place in the social-financial sun, contrives to wreck it. Pushing the girl to the attention of a rich cousin, who also gives the young husband a job, a series of dramatic incidents leads to the wife being found in compromising circumstances. The self-satisfied husband, believing that he alone is responsible for his success, becomes arrogantly inattentive, which forces his wife to leave his house. The husband, eventually realizing that both have been tricked, puts the falseness of his recent life behind him to follow his wife, beg forgiveness and hope for opportunity to undo the wrong.

Miriam Hopkins and Joel McCrea, currently in "Barbary Coast," have the featured leads. The role of the conspiring mother is played by Helen Westley with Paul Cavanaugh in the part of the other man. The supporting cast is of more than ordinary showmanship interest, as it includes such names as Billie Burke, Katherine Alexander, Ruth Weston, David Niven, Ivan Simpson, Arthur Treacher, now a feature of "Remember, Last Night," Torben Meyer and Reginald Sheffield.

The story and screen play are originals by Rachel Crothers, whose screen contributions include "When Ladies Meet" and "As Husbands Go." Direction is by Elliott Nugent.

Warner

This production is adapted from an English stage play, with preparation for the screen being the work of F. Hugh Herbert and Charles Beldon. All the locales, and all the characters, save one who is an escaped American jailbird, are British.

High Brow!

The other day an old school film salesman remarked to us: "Motion Picture Herald is a swell book, but it's too classy, too highbrow—they don't get it, etc."

That, we deem, is a great compliment and a great error—a compliment too to the 13,844 showmen readers who so cheerfully and promptly pay three dollars a year to get it.*

Motion Picture Herald's standards of the printed page represent the normal evolutions of a journalism which has kept abreast of the best in the attainments of the art and industry which it serves. The nickelodeon is a fossil and along with it the journalism that served it.

If "The Herald" does not go there, it isn't a theatre. For those who yearn for the sawdust on the floor and the carnival patois of the long ago there are fossiliferous journals to serve them.

Motion Picture Herald is edited for the showmen of today, with the knowledge that the intelligence of its audience is as high as that of any numerically equal audience in the world.

siring to map her own romantic future with a man who, although an army officer, is nevertheless a commoner, the conflicting situations lead to a lot of understandable theatrical action that has an established amusement and commercial value. In this connection the names of the players prominent in the story's narration must be depended upon to carry a large share of the interest creating burden, inasmuch as experience with similarly grounded attractions has demonstrated that inspiring enough popular reaction is not an easy proposition.

As the comedy angles are the features that undoubtedly will be most eagerly searched for, these are to be found in the manner in which the hero and heroine manage to outwit her straight-laced relatives; what happens to their prospective suitor after his proposal of marriage has been accepted; the way in which a pair of social climbers are put in their proper place; the exciting happenings at an English amusement spa when a quiet day had been anticipated, and the antics of the American refugee in bringing about the happy ending.

Dolores Del Rio and Warren William will be seen in the featured roles. Colin Clive is the ambitious rival for Miss Del Rio's affections. Herbert Mundin and Louise Fazenda appear as the socially ambitious Marmalade King and Queen, with Ely Malyon, E. E. Clive and Mary Forbes as the trio who try to dictate the heroine's future.

IT HAPPENED IN HOLLYWOOD

Radio

Aptly titled, the idea which is the substance of this story could happen only in Hollywood and on the screen. In content the story is a fast moving comedy, and while much of its activity centers around the business of motion picture making with correlative behind-the-scenes accompaniment, it is not entirely a motion picture, either satirical or burlesque.

The story is an original by Thomas Dugan and Ray Mayer, a pair who should know what is required to amuse audiences. Direction is by Christy Cabanne, whose accomplishments need no detailing.

Starting as a sinister gangster film, the picture quickly and smartly takes on its true character. The yegg, to have his bacon, has his face lifted in typical front-page fashion and kills the doctor who remade his features. Always having a yen to be a screen star, his new profile is just what the screen needs to create a new star. Preceding him to Hollywood is a nurse who becomes engaged to a cowboy actor and gets around the studios a lot. When the gangster makes his appearance and lands a part in a picture, the ex-nurse recognizes him. Confiding her discovery to the studio press agent, this worthy sees a grand chance for smash publicity. The picture will be filmed showing the actual capture of a public enemy, he, of course, being completely in the dark. But what happens is not as anticipated. The gangster is taken, all right, but not in a way that anybody can anticipate.

Wallace Ford is in the role of the press agent. Brian Donleavy, seen in "Barbary Coast," is the gangster. Phyllis Brooks, now in "To Beat the Band," is the girl. Included among the supporting cast are Molly Lamont, Erik Rhodes, Addison Randall, Oscar Apfel, Alan Hale, Charles Wilson and Frank Mills.

MISS PACIFIC FLEET

Warner

No matter what the title might signify or whatever the reputation of this studio may be for glorifying the Navy, a glance at the names of the participating players quickly establishes this as a comedy, and in the title sense, one with a nautical background. Warren Hull and Allen Jenkins assist the principals, Joan Blondell and Glenda Farrell, last seen together in "We're in the Money."

The story is by Frederick Hazlitt Brennan, whose reputation as a deft spinner of salty yarns is established by previous screen contributions as well as his features in popular magazines. It has to do with sailor boys and sailors' girls, whose antics and activities embroil quite a few civilians. The central theme is a beauty contest to select Miss Pacific Fleet, which in its eventual choosing of Miss Blondell for the honor runs through a host of hilarious situations that make for typical popular amusement. Romantic contrast to the comedy motivation has any number of surprising twists, all of which add to the fundamental merriment.

Being directed by Ray Enright, the screen play by Peter Milne concentrates on providing the featured players as well as those important in support with action and dialogue material in keeping with their screen characters. Thus the misses Blondell and Farrell are a pair of fast talking, resourceful young ladies; Herbert is a dizzy civic worker and beauty contest promoter; Minna Gombell is his ex-burlesque queen wife, now steeped in culture; Jenkins is a slightly punch-goofy navy fight champion, and Warren Hull is the romantic marine hero.

Geared to appease the popular appetite, the type of showmanship necessary to support the production is evident, with plenty of attention to name values, particularly in relation to past performances, and convincing hints that their efforts here should assure another laugh feast.

MILLIONS IN THE AIR

Paramount

This production is a topical story of amateur hours that goes behind the scenes to show the complete colorful parade of amateurs with all their romance, drama and comedy, plus spectacular vocal, instrumental and orchestral music and dancing in a big time radio station.

The yarn, the title of which has acute showmanship value, is an original by Sig Herzig, who collaborated on the screen play with Jane Storm. The music is the work of Frederick Hollander, with lyrics contributed by Leo Robin. Ray McCarey, who specializes in quick moving comedy, is director.

For motivating purposes the story has two young folk trying to get on a radio program through the medium of amateur tryouts. Almost an instant success, romance crops up for the pair, but complications arise as the boy discovers that the girl is a daughter of the program sponsor and he figures that it was her liking for him, not his ability, that boosted him up. Bent on revenge, he fixes things so that story builds to a walloping presentation of the greatest air wave show ever released.

With the newcoming John Howard and Wendy Barrie in the leading roles, the cast includes a number of wellknown comedians whose work in pictures, on the stage and via radio have brought them to public attention. Included are Willie Howard of musical comedy-vaudeville note, Benny Baker and Dave Chasen, in addition to Eleanor Whitney, sensational dancing star. Straight screen personalities are represented by Alden Chase, George Barbier, Catherine Doucet, Ernest Cossart, Samuel Hinds, Inez Courtney and Mariana Shubert.

With amateurs on the stage and radio occupying much popular attention, this production should make readily adaptable a type of exploitation effectively directing that enthusiasm to itself. The show, itself, looks to be the thing to sell.

Films Influence Children, Dr. Hutchins Says on Radio

Parents who are not willing to have their children "enter the world of ideas" were advised recently in Chicago by Dr. Robert Maynard Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago, to "keep them at home."

But even there they "would not be safe," continued Dr. Hutchins, who was addressing students of the nation and their parents over the Columbia Broadcasting System, the speech being part of the university's celebration of its forty-third anniversary.

"From the newspapers, from books, from the radio and from the movies, some new ideas may reach them, and reach them in garbled and fragmentary form," he said.

Studio Planning School To Develop Music Talent

Because of the success of "Broadway Melody of 1936," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will inaugurate a school in its Hollywood studios to train young men and women as teams for future material in musical films. J. J. Robbins, now in charge of song writers at the studios, has been placed in charge of the plan and he will soon start a series of tests to find performers to join the school.

"The basis of musical comedy," explains Mr. Robbins, "rests on the romantic leads —a boy and a girl—who must be outstanding dancers, singers and who have marked acting ability. On the stage it used to take about fifteen years to create such a team, but now there is no more vaudeville and burlesque so we are forced to this measure for our material."

Filmosound Releases Ready

The Bell and Howell Company now has "Thunder Over Mexico," seven reel feature produced by Sergei Eisenstein, ready for release on 16 mm stock. The film is being handled through the company's Filmosound Rental Library. Additional releases in the current library include a two-reel adventure film, "N'Manga" and "The Masked Raider," for children.

Griffith Receiver Named

Joseph Gans, an attorney in New York, has been appointed equity receiver for D. W. Griffith, Inc., on the application of John A. Manning, a Griffith stockholder. Federal Judge Murray Hulbert, who signed the receivership petition, set a bond for Mr. Gans at $1,000.

Republic Picks Serial

"The Vigilantes Are Coming" has been chosen as the title of the fourth serial to be produced by Nat Levine for the current program of Republic Pictures. B. R. Eason has been signed to direct.

U.S. FILMS RETAIN LEAD IN GERMAN MARKET DESPITE BRITISH RIVALRY

Realistic Pictures Fare Better with Germany's Theatregoing Public Than Romantic Films; But Not the Too Realistic

Dispute Over Sound Patents Is Revived by Dutch Philips; the Theatre Attendance Improves; Studios Also Busier

by J. K. RUTENBERG
Berlin Correspondent

In spite of sharp competition from England, which was felt throughout the year 1934, the American feature film will continue to hold the first place on the German market in the coming season. The first two months are generally significant for the future development of the market, especially in Germany where the existing kontingent regulations make the preparations of the distributing companies necessary at a rather early date.

In August of this year 20 features passed the censoring authorities, eleven of them from the United States, eight from Germany and one from Austria.

For the first two months of the new season the figures were:

Germany, 12 features; U. S. A., 12 features; France, 3 features; Sweden, 2 features; England, 1 feature; Austria, 1 feature; Poland, 1 feature; Czechoslovakia, 1 feature. This was a total of 33 features for August and September.

From the United States came the following: "It Happened One Night," "Under the Pampas Moon," "Murder in the Fleet," "No More Ladies," "Private Worlds," "Accent on Youth," "Curly Top," "Great Event," "China Seas," and "The Crusaders."

Leading Players

Although star voting is unpopular in Germany, it can be said that certain American actors and actresses are very popular in Germany. While classification is always an individual estimate, the following are unquestionably among the leaders:

Actresses: Greta Garbo, Katharine Hepburn, Joan Crawford, Shirley Temple, Marlene Dietrich, Claudette Colbert.

Actors: Wallace Beery, Clark Gable, Franchot Tone, Robert Montgomery, Gary Cooper.

Significant is the fact that men in romantic roles are not so favorably accepted as character players such as Wallace Beery. Germany prefers the sophisticated players who have led the American films in Germany to their present height. Sixty to 70 per cent of the love stories have scarcely covered expenses, but the over-average picture from the United States is still doing a big business if it is not too realistic. "Viva Villa," for example, was popular in Germany long before a copy was sent to Germany. The reason for its banning was due to its drastic realism, yet it is often referred to in trade circles. Generally speaking, the public and the trade are far better informed about the American feature production than is generally thought. When, for instance, Paramount announced "Peter Ibbetson," the leading German film press published lengthy articles in which the new film was compared with "Lives of a Bengal Lancer." It is natural that the public eagerly awaits such a film.

LEHNICH MADE NEW REICH FILM HEAD

Oswald Lehnich has been appointed president of the Reich Film Chamber in Berlin by Paul Joseph Goebbels, Minister of Propaganda, to succeed Fritz Scheuermann, who resigned.

It is believed that Mr. Scheuermann's resignation was due to a sixty per cent drop in German film exports during the past two years and the resultant dissatisfaction of Minister Goebbels.

Canty at Brussels

George R. Canty, who for seven years represented American film interests in Europe in the capacity of a U. S. trade commissioner, dividing his time among Berlin, Warsaw, Paris and Prague, has discontinued his work and gone to Brussels, doing no more film work. The reason for the abolition of the official film post in Berlin may be that the U. S. Government is favoring the reciprocal economical arrangements with the individual countries, thereby easing the way for American films and making the activity of an official observer superfluous. Mr. Canty is now attached to the American Embassy in Brussels.

Patent Disputes Still On

While the disputes over the American double-print patent and the fly-wheel patent, controlled by American Tri-Ergon Corporation, have definitely come to an end in the United States by the decision of the supreme court, not so in Germany. The German double print patent is in the hands of the Tobis. It was the center of quite a great number of patent litigations which for several reasons have never come to the Reichsgericht, Germany's supreme court. In the winter of 1934-35 the Friess A. G., manufacturer of sound film recording sets in Berlin, filed, after various unsuccessful attempts before the ordinary courts, a plea of nullity in the Reichs Patent Office. In a sensational decision of this court the double print patent was partly declared void, clearing the way for manufacturers of recording sets and easing up the barriers to the producers and distributors of commercial films. The Tobis appealed to the Reichsgericht and the decision of the supreme court is expected soon.

Meanwhile Hans Friess, inventor of the Friess recording sets, has gone over to the Tobis company, at the same time withdrawing the plea for nullity. Some weeks earlier there had come an internal and secret understanding between the Friess A. G. and the Dutch Philips Company. The Philips concern, as the maker and user of its own sound film recording, known as the Philips Miller System, had a keen interest in abolition of the superiority of the double print patent which was preventing Philips from entering the German market. So Philips has declared itself ready to pay the expenses of the action for the Friess A. G., which had suffered heavy financial losses owing to unfavorable verdicts of the ordinary courts. The changing over of Hans Friess to the Tobis company and the withdrawal of the plea forced the Philips Company to start afresh, filing a plea for nullity before the Reichs Patent Office. A verdict cannot be expected before winter.

The German double print patent, filed in 1921, has still four years to run, expiring in 1939. If the Philips company should be successful before the Reichs Patent Office, as is expected, Tobis again will appeal before the Reichsgericht.

American films are shown in Berlin mostly in the original with superimposed English titles. The German version is generally made after several successful weeks of the original. In post-synchronization things have changed favorably. The technique of the dubbing has been improved, better actors have been engaged for the speaking parts. A proposal has been made to produce foreign versions of German-made films in the same manner.

According to a report just published by the Marketing Board, activity in the German film studios was rather higher in the first months of this season than in the corresponding time of the past year. Some studios report a 50 per cent increase in working hours.

Together with the diminution of the number of unemployed, attendance at the cinemas has increased. In the second quarter of 1935, admissions throughout the Reich showed an increase of 20.5 per cent over the second quarter of 1934. The income of the distributing companies was correspondingly higher. In the second quarter of 1933 the middle-priced admissions (60 to 90 pfennigs (15 to 22 cents at par)) was represented with 31 per cent in the total turnover, in the second quarter of 1935 with 41 per cent, evidencing the growing stability of the market.

For the 1935-36 season a total of 150 feature films has been announced, of which 37 have been completed and 13 already shown.

UNIVERSAL EXPANDS BRITISH PRODUCING

Outlay of $650,000 for Studio Enlargement Planned; General Theatres Profit Up

by BRUCE ALLAN

London Correspondent

Universal is the latest United States company to make enlarged plans for British production, to cope with the stringent 20 per cent quota demand now operating. S. F. Ditcham, managing director of Universal in London, this week announced that, in combination with J. B. & R. B. Wainwright, Ltd., the Laemmle company would occupy two specially erected floors at Sound City, Shepperton, and that the films would be for "world release" by Universal.

Expenditure involved in the plan is said to total $650,000 for studio enlargement alone. No picture appropriation is stated but the promise that directors and technicians may be supplied by Universal City and that the British product is expected to measure up to that of Hollywood indicates a considerable increase in the budget for Universal British films. The Wainwrights, who have made one or two useful productions independently, including an English version of "Emil and the Detectives," are already contracted to make a Claude Hulbert picture, "The Adventures of Ambrose," and a version of Edgar Wallace's "The Crimson Circle" for Universal British release.

The annual report of General Theatres Corporation, Ltd., including the accounts to March 31 last, indicates £1,485,246 (more than $7,425,000) as "amount of capital lost or unrepresented by available assets," but the year's profit, £214,976, shows an increase of £21,042.

Opposition Defeat Indicated

Under the reconstruction plan recently sanctioned by the court and now become effective owing to the abandonment of the dissentient preference shareholders' appeal, £1,450,833 of capital will be extinguished. The balance of the loss is planned to be recouped from profits.

GTC, under the new plan, remains under Gaumont-British management. Opposing shareholders alleged, among other reasons for challenging the reconstruction, that a counter offer from Associated British Pictures (the Maxwell company) had not been properly considered. The defeat of this opposition is indicated in the passage in the report stating that "directors will oppose the election as directors of the three directors put forward by the opposing shareholders."

Quotas and Elections

Prospects of a revision of the Films Act in harmony with trade opinion are not heightened by the fact that a general election is due in mid-November, leaving aside the fact that trade opinion itself is still some way from being unanimous. A few days ago the expected conference between the CEA and the Film Group of the FBI took place, but no definite result has yet been announced; what has been gained is that the producer group has been officially acquainted with the views of the exhibitor group, which is known to favor a relaxation rather than a tightening of the provisions of the Act. The "agreed policy" demanded by the Board of Trade may, nevertheless, be forthcoming earlier than has been expected. The deciding factor may well be that major British concerns are more and more becoming frankly anti-quota. The quickie hurts them as much as it hurts the exhibitor. Like the exhibitor, they want a revision of the Act which will insure good quality British films and not just footage. The only interests which are concerned to maintain the quota in a penal form are those British companies which hope to remain in business by selling footage to the American distributor at the pistol point, and these concerns tend to lose weight in trade councils as one U. S. concern after another allies itself to more serious British production enterprises.

BRAZIL'S EXHIBITORS PINCHED BY MERGER

Six First - Runs for Rio de Janeiro's Two Million Population; Ribeiro in Control

by A. WEISSMANN
Rio de Janeiro Correspondent

The biggest motion picture event in Brazil since the American companies opened branches in this city is the consolidation of the two most importeant exhibitor companies, the Compania Brasileira de Cinemas and that of Luiz Severiano Ribeiro.

The trade sees in this development a significance—and danger—which only an analysis of the Brazilian market will explain.

There are in Brazil two motion picture centers of great importance from the economic standpoint—Rio de Janiero and S. Paulo. Rio de Janiero, capital of Brazil, is consequently the first-run city for American pictures and others.

6 First Runs, 2 Million Population

The population of Rio de Janeiro runs about 2,000,000, yet there are only six first-run houses, amounting to less than 10,000 seats capacity. The theatres Palacio, Odeon and Gloria belong to the Companhia Brasileira de Cinemas, which operates the Imperio and the Ipanema as second-run houses. There are also the Alhambra, operated by the Companhia Brasil Commercial e Immobiliaria; the Rex, operated by Vivaldi Leite Ribeiro, the Broadway by Ponce & Irmaos, which represents the RKO-Radio program in Brazil, and the Pathe Palace, also second-run and owned by Marc Ferrez. All these theatres are equipped with sound apparatus.

The three first named theatres are not of the high standard one would expect in such an important city, yet they present the better pictures imported from U. S. A. With the first-run situation inadequate, much more unsatisfactory are the second-runs. There are 70 of these, about 30 of them operated by Luiz Severiano Ribeiro, who dominates the states of Ceará and Pernambuco in the northern part of this country.

Here is the principal point of the problem. Leaving the company two or three stockholders, Luiz Severiano Ribeiro bought their interest, becoming the president and making a consortium that we might call a "trust," representing about 50 houses, to impose his prices upon the distributing companies.

Small Exhibitors Pinched

Because of the trust's domination, small exhibitors see their deathknell in unavailability of good pictures while they must pay high prices for inferior product.

Exploitation of pictures in Rio de Janeiro is under Ribeiro's supervision. The companies submit for his approval all expenditures for newspaper and magazine space each week when pictures are released, and the budgets are held to a minimum. The advertisements lack originality. There is nothing to attract attention besides two trailers one week before the picture is shown, glaring billboards spread out in front of the theatre, and a lighting system for publicity purposes that is always the same. Exhibitors complain that this type of economy is harming business.

With these drastic methods and the exchange rate so low, it is doubted that the major distributing companies will show New York 60 per cent of the business done last year.

Seven Product Deals Closed by Radio

Harry W. Leasim, sales manager of Radio Pictures International, has closed a deal with Mosco and Cuppini of Rome, Italy, for the distribution of the entire output of 1934-35 Radio pictures in Italy. The Italian dubbing will be done by Mosco and Cuppini. The first pictures to be released under the new contract will be "Becky Sharp" and "The Informer," to take advantage of the publicity given these films recently at the International Exposition of Motion Picture Arts recently held in Venice.

"Becky Sharp" has also been sold to the entire Amalgamated chain of theatres in New Zealand by R. R. Doyle, managing director of the Australian branch of Radio Pictures International.

The Inland Circuit, covering nine houses in the state of Washington, and the Simmons Circuit, of four situations in Idaho and Montana, have also signed for the entire 1935-36 RKO Radio product.

Marking the fourth consecutive deal between the two companies, RKO has signed a contract in New York with Peacock Motion Picture Company, of Shanghai, for distribution of Radio's 1935-36 product in China.

RKO has closed a contract with Atlantis Film Company of Belgrade for distribution in Jugoslavia of a number of RKO Radio pictures in the current and last-season lineup, according to word received from H. W. Leasim, sales manager of Radio Pictures International now in Europe.

A contract has been signed between RKO Radio and Remaco's Filmbedrijf, N. V., of Amsterdam, whereby Remaco will distribute all the 1935-36 RKO Radio product of shorts and features in the Netherlands.

The RKO Export Corporation has just closed a deal with the Pavilion Co., Ltd., of Singapore, whereby the latter will distribute all of the Radio product in the Straits Settlements and surrounding territories until 1937.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Omaha, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

We came down here to attend a convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners, which was held in one of the rooms of the Loyal hotel, and, as far as we have been able to learn, the exhibitors left everything, even down to the cook-stove. It has been our fortune to have attended similar conventions all over the western part of the U. S. and, without attempting to throw any bouquets, we wish to go on record as saying that this convention was the most orderly and best attended convention we have ever had the pleasure of attending.

There have been times that John Barleycorn was the principal speaker and as an invited guest, but at this convention and at the banquet, John's credentials did not bear the stamp of approval and the doorman was instructed to not admit him. His absence from the convention was a very hopeful sign that the committees on arrangements have decided to go to Early Mass or the Sunday School, and at either place they will receive some very lasting help.

A Fine Meeting

The speakers at the banquet were Mayor Towl of Omaha, who gave the address of welcome; Rev. Dr. Dundin, Rev. Father Macke, pastors of out-state churches; Edward Shafton of the Variety Club; Ted Mendenhall, manager of Paramount exchange, and Ed. Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who gave the principal address.

The toastmaster at the banquet was D. V. McLucas, branch manager for United Artists, who, by the way, conducted the program in a very masterful way which added a whole lot to the pleasure of the occasion.

The exchange managers were Ted Mendenhall of Paramount, D. V. McLucas of United Artists, Jerry Sapendau of Universal, Clarence Olson of Warner Bros., E. O. Ringler of Republic Films, Mr. Scott of Fox Films, Al Avery of RKO, Mr. Marcus of Columbia, Harry Schumal of MGM, Stern Brothers of Capitol Films, and Max Winetraub of Majestic.

Charles Williams, who has been president of the MPTO for a number of years, and who has given such universal satisfaction, was reelected president for the coming year.

Mr. Kuykendall gave us a very informative and interesting address and blazed the trail for the MPTO to follow, which was well received by the guests, and he paid a very high tribute to the honesty and intelligence of his friend, Joseph I. Breen, of the Production Code Administration, and assured the audience that through his efforts, and the efforts of the Legion of Decency and other helpful influences, the picture industry was headed for a higher position in the minds of the theatregoing public.

We wish Ernie would give us space to name all of the exhibitors who attended, but you know that space in the HERALD is mighty valuable; however, here are just a few of them:

R. F. Kerberg, Sheldon; Dale Goldie, Cherokee; Otto Lehrman, Sibley; Charles Sartoris and wife, Hartley; William Bogart and wife, Rock Valley; Carl Johnson and wife of Red Oak; Nate Dax and wife, and Skippy Freedman of Sioux City; Ray Brown and wife and daughter, Harlan, all of Iowa; Art Record, Hebron; Charles Launi, Deshler; Horace Kennedy and son Howard of Broken Bow; Mrs. Georgia Racely, O'Neill; Oscar Johnson and wife, Falls City; Harold Schoonover, Aurora; W. B. Bradley, Neligh; Howard Brookings, Weeping Water; D. V. Fletcher and wife, Hartington; Mrs. Minerva Robinson, Coleridge; Mr. Bailey and wife of Pawnee City, all of Nebraska, and Carston Gehlsen of Burk, South Dakota, but then, gee whiz, we can't name all of 'em so what's the use. Should we have omitted the names of some of our friends we trust that they will omit the poison gas.

This list doesn't include the boys from Omaha. They were all there and some brought their guns and some brought all-day-suckers. Walter Creel brought a pitchfork and Sam Epstein brought a corkscrew (and that was all Sam had, too).

London and That Shelterbelt

We are in receipt of a copy of The Era, published at 11 Soho Square, London, England, W. I., and we note that the publication carries a copy of part of what we said in the HERALD about the trees they are planting in that "Shelterbelt" and "The Government has commandeered five million dogs" and the editor comments "The colonel surmises that the young trees will require a lot of attention."

You are correct, Mr. Editor. Those trees will "require a lot of attention" and if our English friends have some able-bodied dogs that are not working they can dispose of them at a good price if they will take the matter up with the Government of the U. S. A.

But speaking of dogs reminds us that we saw a picture recently wherein the star kissed a flea-bitten pothound right on the nose, which again reminded us of a scene in "David Copperfield" wherein the star kissed a skyoodle pup on the screen (instead of the nose) and which disgusted a theatre-going public and bred the hope that some time some of the directorial minds in Hollywood will rise above the kennel. How are you fixed on dogs, Abner?

In this same issue of The Era we found a discussion as to whether Christopher Columbus discovered America or not and whether or not he was a Jew. As far as we are personally concerned we don't care whether he discovered America or whether it was Lydia E. Pinkham or Babe Ruth, so long as it was discovered, and it matters not to us whether he ate Berkshire or Poland China pigs knuckles or confined his diet to carp and bullheads on Friday. The facts are that the North American Indians were holding their pow wows and eating boiled dog when Chris arrived.

New Theatres

At Algona, Iowa, a theatre is being built and equipped by the Western Theatre Supply Company of Omaha for Gale Pettit, an old showman of Algona, who has been connected with theatre circuits in the South and Southwest for several years. The theatre is being built on the Stadium type and will have a capacity of 700 on the lower floor. The theatre will be called the State, and Western Electric wide range sound will be used and the seats will be furnished by American Seating Company. Algona is a good town and the State ought to be well patronized, which it probably will be.

Our friend A. F. Kehr is building a new theatre at Ogallala, Nebraska, which is said to cost $70,000 and will have a seating capacity of 650 and will be booked under the name of the Prairie. The Western Theatre Supply Company is furnishing the interior with all that is required in theatre equipment and the American Seating Company will install the seats. The theatre probably will open its doors to the public on or about December 10th. Good luck, Kehr, we are for you. You remember that the last time we called you were just going to go hunting and wanted us to go along, but we had to work, doggone the doggone luck anyhow.

We met Harold Dunn and his wife, Hazel, at the convention and we hardly knew him, he has fallen off until he only weighs 230 pounds, and his wife says that it is because she holds him to a strict diet of T bone steaks and corned beef and cabbage.

Our neighbor has an Airedale that is trying of nights to imitate a crooner. We are going to try and buy that pup and ship him to a broadcasting station. He'd be a big help to that "Shelterbelt" too.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

First National

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—Joe E. Brown's pictures are all so well received that I do not know whether to rate this as his best or not, but it is plenty good and pleased 100 per cent. Joe gives an excellent performance as a vaudeville actor while the other members of the cast are all good. Running time, 88 minutes. Played September 25-26.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebannon, Kan. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Ann Dvorak, Joe E. Brown—Joe's best. A grand windup for a very successful Warner season. Business was exceptionally good on this picture and the audience enjoyed every minute of it. P. S.—So did I. Played October 18-19.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—Here's a picture that spells box office. Good in any town. Played on weekend to big crowds, two nights. Best Joe E. Brown so far. Ann Dvorak good. Running time, 83 minutes.—C. H. Collier, Globe Theatre, Drew, Miss. Small town patronage.

CASE OF THE CURIOUS BRIDE, THE: Warren William, Margaret Lindsay, Claire Dodd—Very good, Warren, and the trailers Warners send out sure sell the customers on these mystery pictures.—Reggie Buxton, Strand Theatre, Ransom, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

GO INTO YOUR DANCE: Al Jolson, Ruby Keeler—Although Jolson is slipping, he put over a real bang-up musical, with the aid of the ever popular Ruby. Enjoyed it very much, also above average business. Jolson is O. K. with our people.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

GO INTO YOUR DANCE: Al Jolson, Ruby Keeler—Consensus in here is that Miss Keeler danced away with the picture, although Al's singing went over big. We could easily have stood another song from Helen Morgan, even at the price of one less of Jolson's. Played this one late, but it satisfied everyone, and that is saying a lot in here. Played October 19.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

GOOSE AND THE GANDER: Kay Francis, George Brent—This brilliant star is a favorite in this town. Supported by a grand cast including George Brent, she delivers again in a swell story filled with plenty of laughs. Played October 6-7.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Olivia de Havilland—Good entertainment for the masses and that's wbat we want. Only hope they don't overdo this pair, as about one a year with them together is enough. Everyone seemed to enjoy this picture. This little de Havilland has lots of possibilities. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 26-28.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. General patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Olivia de Havilland, Pat O'Brien—Now, there's a picture! Completely satisfied our patrons. Believe all of these stars are gradually assuming their deserved places as "the tops." Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 23-24.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

MARY JANE'S PA: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee—Best business for weeks, thanks to Guy and Aline and the Warner's trailer that sold the show. Pleased 100 per cent on a week end showing.—Reggie Buxton, Strand Theatre, Ransom, Kan. Small town and country patronage.

MURDER IN THE CLOUDS: Lyle Talbot, Ann Dvorak—This was a real good program action picture which did business, and the manager received favorable comments.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

OIL FOR THE LAMPS OF CHINA: Josephine Hutchinson, Pat O'Brien—Dandy show. Intelligent and well received by the patrons.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

GB Pictures

ALIAS BULL DOG DRUMMOND: Fay Wray, Jack Hubert—We had a lot of kick on this one. This British stuff does not go in our town. Show is too silly.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MAN OF ARAN: It is a classic. It is O.K. on a double bill.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

MY HEART IS CALLING: Jan Kiepura, Marta Eggerth—My patrons did not care for this. It may be good of its kind but no one liked it. The singing is fair.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

TRANSATLANTIC TUNNEL: Richard Dix, Madge Evans, Helen Vinson—I recently saw the American premiere of this picture at a midnight preview. The fine acting of its American cast, the unusual story and its technically perfect production are all undermined by an excess of dialogue.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MGM

AGE OF INDISCRETION, THE: Paul Lukas, Madge Evans, May Robson—A very good program picture that pleased our patronage.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

ANNA KARENINA: Greta Garbo, Fredric March—Good picture of its kind; the people who have read the book will come to see it in addition to your regular crowd. Greta Garbo means nothing at our box office.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

BISHOP MISBEHAVES, THE: Edmund Gwenn, Maureen O'Slulivan—No draw, but pretty fair comedy. Running time, 86 minutes. Played September 26.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

BONNIE SCOTLAND: Laurel and Hardy—This is the best feature this pair has made so far. It's a wow of a comedy. Did very good business here. Running time, 85 minutes. Played October 5.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Jack Benny, Eleanor Powell, Una Merkel, Vilma and Buddy Ebsen—It is a great show and it also introduces the biggest discovery of the year, Eleanor Powell, who makes Ruby Keeler and Ginger Rogers look like a couple of wooden Indians.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Robert Taylor, Eleanor Powell, Una Merkel, Jack Benny—A super-musical that actually lives up to its advance praise. Perfect audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—This one has enough of "what it takes" to satisfy practically anyone. Will do 25 per cent above average business anywhere, in my judgment. Running time 89 minutes. Played October 18-19.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—A picture that should pack any house. Very good. Played behind competitor; good crowds both nights. Running time, 89 minutes. Played September 30-October 1.—C. H. Collier, Globe Theatre, Drew, Miss. Small town patronage.

DAVID COPPERFIELD: All Star Cast—Despite the fact that we played this one very late, the MGM masterpiece was well received by the inmates. A little deep for some of the men, but the excellent acting offset that. Freddie Bartholomew, W. C. Fields and Edna May Oliver all went over big. Her tirade against David's stepfather drew a big hand. A story that will never grow old. Played October 12.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

GIRL FROM MISSOURI, THE: Jean Harlow, Lionel Barrymore, Franchot Tone—Brought this picture back for Jean Harlow fans. Did only average business. Harlow slipping.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

HERE COMES THE BAND: Ted Lewis, Virginia Bruce—A very pleasant surprise all around. Well liked by our patrons and pulled a most satisfactory midweek business. The local girls have a new heart throbber in the warbling Harry Stockwell, who put over some swell song numbers in a voice and manner that will undoubtedly make him a marquee name in the future. Running time, 87 minutes. Played October 2-3.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

MEN IN WHITE: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy—This picture is a credit to the movie interest, showing a doctor's angle. It has a good moral and a picture not easily forgotten. Play it.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

MURDER IN THE FLEET: Robert Taylor, Jean Parker—An outstanding murder mystery, with the fleet for the stage, and an unusually good cast make this a more satisfactory show than lots of the specials. Thrills and comedy hold the interest of the patrons to the last reel. Una Merkel, as usual, almost steals the show. Leo is entitled to an extra roar on this one. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 28-29.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN THE FLEET: Jean Parker, Robert Taylor—Went over O.K. on a Saturday night.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MURDER MAN: Spencer Tracy—Just a waste of time and film. Played October 9.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

NO MORE LADIES: Joan Crawford, Robert Montgomery, Charlie Ruggles, Franchot Tone—Very good production but not worth the price. Good acting, fair story, beautiful costumes and plenty of comedy make this an entertaining picture, but not quite the super-special the invoice calls for. Edna May Oliver is a scream. Running time, 82 minutes. Played October 5-7.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

NO MORE LADIES: Joan Crawford, Robert Montgomery—Very good social comedy drama. Patrons came a second time to see it and when they do that it must be OK. A few scenes and remarks could have been left out to make it still better. Kinda raw. Played October 12-14.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

NO MORE LADIES: Joan Crawford, Robert Montgomery, Franchot Tone—It is smart and good entertainment. Crawford not liked here but Montgomery helped to put it over to fair business.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PURSUIT: Chester Morris, Sally Eilers, Scotty Beckett—One of those rapid fire thrillers that seem to click. Plenty of comedy and action and Scotty Beckett is very, very good. Not a special but pleased. Running time, 62 minutes. Played October 12-13.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

RECKLESS: Jean Harlow, William Powell—We did only moderately well with this picture. The plot is rather vague, hard to follow in parts. Song numbers fairly good. Not up to expectations and second showing was poor. Played October 3-4.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

SEQUOIA: Jean Parker—Wonderful subject. Mostly about deer. Animal pictures all right if not played too often. Played October 5-6.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

WOMAN WANTED: Joel McCrea, Maureen O'Sullivan—Good program picture. It is unpretentious but none the less entertaining. It will hold up any bill. The story is unusual and full of action and therefore not boring to anyone. Played October 18-19.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

WOMAN WANTED: Joel McCrea, Maureen O'Sullivan—Good programmer that pulled well on midweek showing and gave very good satisfaction. Nothing outstanding, but thoroughly entertaining. Running time, 68 minutes. Played October 9-10.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Monogram

MYSTERIOUS MR. WONG, THE: Bela Lugosi—Might have been a fair picture if properly made, as it wasn't. Poor business. Played October 1.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

Paramount

ACCENT ON YOUTH: Sylvia Sidney, Herbert Marshall—Good drama based on the old man-young girl theme. It has considerable comedy relief and was liked by the majority. Played October 12.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

ACCENT ON YOUTH: Herbert Marshall, Sylvia Sidney—A good high class comedy. You have to be on your toes constantly to get all the smart quips, but a lot of them go over the audience's heads. It is strictly a class picture. Played October 16-17.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

ACCENT ON YOUTH: Sylvia Sidney, Herbert Marshall—Not a special by any means but might go over where Sylvia is popular. She is not box office here, and would class the picture as only fair program. Running time, 77 minutes.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

CAR 99: Fred MacMurray, Ann Sheridan—Good action picture. Played October 2.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: George Raft, Alice Faye—This picture will please most any audience. It has entertainment for all. Raft is growing in popularity with us as he is a good actor, and his support was good. Running time, 80 minutes.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

HERE COMES COOKIE: George Burns, Gracie Allen—Typical Burns and Allen fare that stretched out far beyond the limits of its story and gag possibilities. Used as a preview, this clicked fairly well. Running time, 65 minutes. Played September 28.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

HERE COMES COOKIE: Burns and Allen—Wonderful title. Burns and Allen popular with us. Then the picture is pleasing. Gracie is just as individual as any of the big stars. I mean by that there is just one Gracie. Running time, 65 minutes.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

HOPALONG CASSIDY: William Boyd, Paula Stone This series of "Hopalong Cassidy" pictures look like naturals. If the remaining five come through just half as good as this one, there will be no complaint. —Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

LAST OUTPOST, THE: Cary Grant, Gertrude Michael, Claude Rains—An excellent picture. Went over big, some staying to see it twice. Played October 15.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

LAST OUTPOST, THE: Cary Grant, Claude Rains, Gertrude Michael—Good adventure picture along the lines of "Bengal Lancer," but which fails to reach the heights achieved by that picture due chiefly to a rather obvious story, and rather melodramatic sequences of last two reels. Held the interest of our patrons and was generally liked. Used on release date, without benefit of run in key situation adjacent to this town, picture pulled fairly well. Running time, 78 minutes. Played October 11-12.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone—A very satisfactory picture that satisfies all. The photography is good. The present trouble in Africa adds interest to this picture though the scenes are laid in India. Played October 11-12.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

MAN ON THE FLYING TRAPEZE: Mary Brian, W. C. Fields—Outside of the fact the title was terrible, the picture pleased in every particular. It drew well and the audience was well pleased with it. My personal opinion is that it would have drawn even better with a more fitting title. Played October 12. —Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

MEN WITHOUT NAMES: Fred MacMurray, Madge Evans—Well produced picture, using the "G Men" theme. Our patrons liked it and told us so, many saying they enjoyed it more than any other of this type we have shown. Good midweek business. Running time, 65 minutes. Played September 25-26. —M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

PARIS IN THE SPRING: Mary Ellis, Tullio Carminati—Mary Ellis as a box office name is about as good as Minnie Zilch. Played October 9-10.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

PEOPLE WILL TALK: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—A very nice little show; moves right along and entertains all the way through. Did twice the business of "Becky Sharp." Played October 6.—B. J. Vandeby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. General small town patronage.

SMART GIRL: Kent Taylor, Ida Lupino—This picture was condemned by the Legion of Decency. Can't see why, but that, plus the lack of box office names, made it a weak sister at the box office. Entertainment value good. Joseph Cawthorne is very funny and carries the picture. Played October 15.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

THIS WOMAN IS MINE: Gregory Ratoff—This is another that is just as bad as "The Scoundrel" was. Paramount did not produce this, as it stated that it was released only through them, and certainly they must have known what they were buying and why they did I don't know. Absolutely poor. Bad recording and bad direction. No known stars, and try and foist this onto the public and then get their reaction another time that the exhibitor is on the spot plenty.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

TWO FOR TONIGHT: Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett —This picture went over O.K. the first night but fell down the second one. Personally thought it was a good picture. Played October 1-2.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

VIRGINIA JUDGE, THE: Walter C. Kelly, Marsha Hunt—An excellent picture. Walter Kelly is swell as the Virginia Judge. Stepin Fetchit stole the show, however. Played October 11-12.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

WITHOUT REGRET: Elissa Landi, Kent Taylor—Very poor title. Yet a fair program picture but one that will not pull them in. Star power without much draw. Running time, 75 minutes.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

RKO Radio

ALICE ADAMS: Katharine Hepburn, Fred MacMurray—It is very, very good. It may not have the box office draw of "Little Women," but it will please just as well.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

ALICE ADAMS: Katharine Hepburn, Fred MacMurray—A very good picture, well liked and splendid entertainment. Running time, 97 minutes.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. General patronage.

ALICE ADAMS: Katharine Hepburn, Fred MacMurray—Nice story but our little Katharine overacted a little and is hard to understand. Would be well for her to work on her voice and more distinct pronunciation. Fast talking doesn't register well. We have quite a few admirers of Miss Hepburn. Running time, 99 minutes. —Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patroage.

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES: Anne Shirley, Tom Brown—RKO did a nice job; nice simple story which touched the hearts of our patrons and the heart strings on your exhibitor box office.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

ARIZONIAN, THE: Richard Dix, Margot Grahame —An above-the-average western that should please anywhere. Played October 10.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. General small town patronage.

ARIZONIAN, THE: Richard Dix—Will class this one as a splendid western picture. A great title and a good star. Dix fine in this kind of role. Running time 75 minutes.—William A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

ARIZONIAN, THE: Richard Dix, Margot Grahame —Oh, boy! Oh, boy! Here's a western that really has it, them and those. And did they go for it. Plenty of action, comedy and drama. This is not just a cheap western. It packs a wallop. We wore out two pairs of suspenders sticking our thumbs behind them as we watched the crowd come. Start pattin' yourself on the back if you have this one. It will wipe the cobwebs off the old bank book. Played October 18-19.—Charles Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

BECKY SHARP: Miriam Hopkins—Intended passing this one up and am sorry we didn't as it is the reason for originating the word "flop" when it comes to box office value. Colors beautiful but certainly wasted on the story. Running time, 75 minutes. Played October 9-10.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. General patronage.

BECKY SHARP: Miriam Hopkins—Should have been entitled, "Beautiful But Dumb." Wonderful color, but strange as it seems, the public also wants entertainment. It set a new low record for my house that I hope not to shoot at for a long time. Hope the Hollywood boys don't get any more brain storms like this one, or else that I have sense enough to leave it alone. Played October 13.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. General small town patronage.

CHASING YESTERDAY: Anne Shirley, O. P. Heggie, Helen Westley—Although it took a stage attraction to bring them in to see this the greater part of the audience liked it. The story is different and refreshing and the cast performed well, but unfortunately "Anne of Green Gables," which introduced the three stars to the public, wasn't sufficiently popular to have made them any great name draws. Played October 11.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

FRECKLES: Tom Brown, Virginia Weidler, Carol Stone—Did not appeal to fans as well as former Gene Stratton-Porter stories. Story modernized so much one would not recognize it. Very good work by stars and picture well liked by those who saw it. This little Virginia Weidler steals the picture. Running time, 65 minutes. Played September 29-30.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. General patronage.

HIS FAMILY TREE: James Barton, Maureen Delany—Just a word of warning to any unfortunate exhibitor who might have this booked. Set it out; it's the worst yet. Picture as a whole very poor. Words fail me when I try to describe the sound. An Irish picture which would make the Sons of Erin blush with shame. Released by a company who made such pictures as "Top Hat," "Laddies," "Star of Midnight" and dozens of other real top pictures. We just have to say, "Shame on you, RKO."—Reggie Buxton, Strand Theatre, Ransom, Kan. Rural patronage.

HOORAY FOR LOVE: Gene Raymond, Ann Sothern—Two outstanding features in this subject, the toe dance by Maria Gambarelli and Bill Robinson's tap dancing. Also has some nice songs, but otherwise is very ordinary. Running time, 72 minutes. Played October 9-10.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

NITWITS, THE: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey—I think this was the most awful thing these two pseudo comedians have ever done, but I must confess that several hundred people who came to see them (and it was about the average number) differed with me considerably. The answer to the story seems to be that RKO should keep on making these pictures. I'll play them but won't look at them. Played October 13-14.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

OLD MAN RHYTHM: Buddy Rogers, Betty Grable —Not so good. A hairbrained story with too much music of no merit to carry the continuity necessary to make it of interest. Would have been better off to pay for it and put it on the shelf. Ran "Going on Two" with the Quintuplets with this picture, which drew more comment than the feature. Running time, 76 minutes. Played October 11-12.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. General patronage.

OLD MAN RHYTHM: Buddy Rogers, Betty Grable —Only fair. Disappointed generally and just why we are unable to say. Characters were well taken and there were several very good dance numbers. Running time, 76 minutes. Played September 27-28.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

OLD MAN RHYTHM: Buddy Rogers, Betty Grable —A fair program picture.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

OLD MAN RHYTHM: Buddy Rogers—Nice program picture. Buddy doesn't mean much to us, but picture is O.K. anyway. Running time 76 minutes.—William A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

OLD MAN RHYTHM: Buddy Rogers, Betty Grable —This one clicked. Everybody seemed to like it. It has some good songs and dances and plenty of comedy. Play it. Played October 6-7.—Charles Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

SHE: Helen Gahagan, Randolph Scott—Pictures like this are never box office, story not suitable for the motion pictures; would say it's hard to direct understandably. Many said they didn't know what it was all about. Running time 95 minutes.—William A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

SHE: Helen Gahagan, Randolph Scott—This feature created a very great diversity of opinion. Those who did not like it were very outspoken against it, but those who did like it also spoke very highly of it. We think that nearly every picture of this nature carries hundreds of feet of wasted film and thousands of dollars of cost entirely unwarranted. Running time, 94 minutes. Played September 29-30.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

SHE: Helen Gahagan, Randolph Scott—A big lavish production that was just a big flop at the box office. —W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SHE: Helen Gahagan, Randolph Scott—We played this one against a fair warning, but we had a good crowd anyway. The natives, as well as ourselves, are still wondering about it, but nobody cussed it. It's like the farmer that saw the giraffe, "There ain't no sech animal." Played October 13-14.—Charles Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

TWO ALONE: Jean Parker, Tom Brown, Zasu Pitts—I thought it a rather good picture for our farmer friends, as it was based on simple, rural life of two orphans, but our people didn't like it much. Left a rather bad taste. If you can play another picture, shelve it.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury. Ontario, Can. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BLACK SHEEP: Edmund Lowe, Claire Trevor—Pretty bad for anything but a programmer, but as such it was O.K., but there wasn't enough box office draft. Edmund Lowe without McLaglen doesn't mean a thing, and although he is suave and smooth the public just won't go for it. Played October 9-10.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

COWBOY MILLIONAIRE: George O'Brien—This is a good one. A good story and a good cast. Pleased everyone and it has plenty of action. O'Brien has always been a favorite here. However, methinks it would go good anywhere. Story concerns a dude ranch with O'Brien and his pal as guides. They own a mine and strike it rich and the fun and excitement begin. Played October 6-7.—Charles Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

COWBOY MILLIONAIRE: George O'Brien—Good, but those that like 'em rough will be somewhat disappointed. Played October 9-10.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

COWBOY MILLIONAIRE: George O'Brien—Good western on the usual O'Brien style that brought in the business. Played October 12.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple, John Boles—They came, they saw and they left satisfied, so there you have the whole story. Pulled many whom we had never before seen in the theatre. The littlest star still has the greatest pulling power for us. Running time, 76 minutes. Played October 6-8.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple—Broke our house record for the past five years.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple—A carbon copy of "Daddy Long Legs" that our patronage thought colossal. Excellent business.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

DANTE'S INFERNO: Claire Trevor, Spencer Tracy—The season's prize disappointment. With all the advance publicity on the part of Fox on this picture, one would expect something unusual, but it flopped pathetically at the box office. Settings spectacular, but why not leave this kind of fiction in book form, where it belongs? A few of the socalled intellectuals raved about it, but their minority do not offset the losses one takes on this kind of entertainment. Running time, 88 minutes. Played October 1-3.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. General patronage.

DANTE'S INFERNO: Claire Trevor, Spencer Tracy—Took a big flop! And we blame the producer entirely for it. In the first place, if they had saved themselves (and incidentally the poor exhibitor who paid an unwarranted price) thousands of dollars by eliminating every foot of "Hell," the picture would have been 100 per cent better. In the second place, there wasn't a player's name on any of the advertising, window cards, slide, insert, or anything else. Names such as they had to exploit, would have meant dollars to the box office. For one, we were very much disappointed with the entire production, starting with the way it was sold to us down to the way the company failed to assist the exhibitor in selling it to the public. Running time, 88 minutes. Played October 11-12.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

DRESSED TO THRILL: Clive Brook, Tutta Rolf—Not so hot! Was a great disappointment both in production and at the box office. No drawing power whatsoever. Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 25-26.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

FARMER TAKES A WIFE, THE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Fonda—One of the worst seen yet with Janet Gaynor. What she needs is better stories and Charles Farrell back again to bring to the box office what they once did. Scenery new and different, having a setting along the Erie Canal. Did not draw at the box office. Running time, 91 minutes.—C. H. Collier, Globe Theatre, Drew, Miss. Small town patronage.

GINGER: Jane Withers, Jackie Searl—The picture is entertaining and went over very good.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

HARD ROCK HARRIGAN: George O'Brien, Irene Hervey—Not the type of picture this star's fans expect to see him in, but in this town they are loyal and so turn out whenever we show his pictures. This pleased fairly well and business excellent. Running time, 61 minutes. Played September 27-28.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

LITTLE COLONEL, THE: Shirley Temple, Lionel Barrymore, Bill Robinson—This was our opening picture for the year and it was a good one to open with. But Miss Temple does not have the appeal she used to. Nevertheless, it was a fine picture and everybody liked it that saw it. The color part in the end should have been a little longer and more dancing and more southern music; it would have pleased more of them. We did average business but not what we used to do with Shirley. We also handed out 8 inch by 10 inch pictures of Shirley Temple to everybody who came and that pleased them all. If you get a chance, play it as it will do a good business and you will not lose. Good print and clear. Running time, 80 minutes. Played October 18-19.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

CAPTAIN, ADD THESE TO COMPANY ROLL

From the South and the south Middlewest this week come two new contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me." They are:

C. H. Collier, Globe Theatre, Drew, Mississippi.

Reggie Buxton, Strand Theatre, Ransome, Kansas.

Read the reports of these showmen in the department this week.

ORCHIDS TO YOU: Jean Muir, John Boles—Fair program picture with a somewhat trite story but well performed and entertaining. I didn't play it alone so I can't tell you what its box office strength might be. Played October 13-14.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

SPRING TONIC: Lew Ayres, Claire Trevor—A hodge-podge of nonsense that received satisfactory audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

STEAMBOAT ROUND THE BEND: Will Rogers—This picture broke all house records. Nuff sed. Played October 3-4.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

STEAMBOAT ROUND THE BEND: Will Rogers—The greatest of them all is gone and that they came on what is just a mediocre vehicle for Will is a tribute to his memory. I know that he will have a happy landing in where he has gone and to say that he will be missed by both great and small is saying little. I ran them all from Jubilo, the happy tramp coming down the road whistling "Jubilo," with his Connecticut Yankee for a three times repeat. Certainly where he has gone has gained thereby and with a lump in my throat I will close.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WELCOME HOME: James Dunn, Arline Judge—Hardly up to Fox standards; in fact, we thought it very mediocre. Nothing to the story. Running time, 72 minutes. Played October 4-5.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

WELCOME HOME: James Dunn, Arline Judge—Means nothing at the box office. Double bill material. Running time, 72 muintes.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. General patronage.

WELCOME HOME: James Dunn—Just a fair program picture. OK on a double bill. Played October 6.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

WELCOME HOME: Arline Judge, James Dunn—It is a good program picture that pleased.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

United Artists

BARBARY COAST: Miriam Hopkins, Edward G. Robinson, Joel McCrea—A lusty story of early California days along the waterfront that just about tops any previous film of this type. Good mass entertainment.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

LET 'EM HAVE IT: Richard Arlen, Virginia Bruce—A swell "G Men" story. Far above the average picture of that type. Book with confidence for any day of the week. Running time, 95 minutes. Played October 3.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. General small town patronage.

THUNDER IN THE EAST: Charles Boyer, Merle Oberon—As a rule, these socalled artistic efforts are a complete washout for this situation. But this proved the exception to the rule and not only pulled well but pleased. Story rather difficult to understand, with several situations left amost entirey to the imagination. The photography was tops, but the sound left much to be desired. Running time, 79 minutes. Played October 4-5.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

WE LIVE AGAIN: Anna Sten, Fredric March—Wonderful acting, but very poor business. People liked it, but the masses seem to like action pictures.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

WE LIVE AGAIN: Anna Sten, Fredric March—Curtains for this picture; very depressing. Well acted, but March has lost that something and the story did the rest. Don't like these sordid stories. Below average business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Universal

BRIDE OF FRANKENSTEIN: Boris Karloff, Valerie Hobson—Not as good as "Frankenstein," but okay for them "as likes" this type of entertainment. Did average business. Running time, 73 minutes. Played September 24-25.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. General patronage.

BRIDE OF FRANKENSTEIN: Boris Karloff, Valerie Hobson—Darkened our house and they all got the thrill they wanted. Don't like horror pictures myself, but they seem to have enough followers to make it worth while playing. Don't do any good.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

CHINATOWN SQUAD: Lyle Talbot, Valerie Hobson—This was a real good detective picture which kept interest all through the picture. OK.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

LADY TUBBS: Alice Brady, Douglass Montgomery, Anita Louise—Good entertainment and well liked.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. General patronage.

LADY TUBBS: Alice Brady, Douglas Montgomery, Anita Louise—A grand piece of entertainment for all those present. Good story and good work by all in cast. Well directed. Thanks, Miss Brady, for one we were not afraid to boost the second night.—Reggie Buxton, Strand Theatre, Ransom, Kan. Rural patronage.

NIGHT LIFE OF THE GODS: Alan Mowbray, Irene Ware—This without a doubt was the craziest picture we have ever shown. It did no business. I failed to meet my people going out because of my disgust. Don't play it. Pay for it and be thankful for an honest tip.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

BROADWAY GONDOLIER: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—Dick Powell is popular here and gives his usual good performance in this one. Not so good as "Flirtation Walk," but will please the cash custmers and that is all we ask. Running time, 98 minutes. Played October 2-3.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY GONDOLIER: Dick Powell—Good picture, well liked, and drew some extra business.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

GOING HIGHBROW: Guy Kibbee, Zasu Pitts—Hardly of sufficient B. O. strength to hold down a three-day run for us, but did fairly well and pleased to about the same degree. Running time, 67 minutes. Played September 29-October 1.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

I LIVE FOR LOVE: Dolores Del Rio, Everett Marshall—One of those pictures that brings tears to the eyes, of the exhibitor. The only highlight in this one is the singing. Poor story and the temperamental Del Rio in a rapid fire monologue that fortunately, no doubt, cannot be understood. Wish she would go back to South America or wherever she came from. Did not please many of my patrons. Running time, 64 minutes. Played October 9-10.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

PAGE MISS GLORY: Marion Davies, Dick Powell—Dick Powell good draw in small town. Marion Davies not much. Story weak; too much of Davies and not enough Powell. Played behind competitor; did not swell bank account by playing at all.—C. H. Collier, Globe Theatre, Drew, Miss. Small town patronage.

STRANDED: Kay Francis, George Brent—A surprisingly good picture that everyone enjoyed. Some very exceptional shots of the California Golden Gate Bridge now under construction. Running time, 76 minutes. Played October 4-5.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. General patronage.

WE'RE IN THE MONEY: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farel, Hugh Herbert—A good comedy from this pair with Hugh Herbert holding his own for a lot of laughs. Running time, 65 minutes. Played October 6-8.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. General patronage.

WE'RE IN THE MONEY: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farell—As usual, this pair of fun makers generally satisfied, although we have a number of patrons who do not like them at all. It's hard to satisfy everybody. Running time, 66 minutes. Played October 2-3.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

WE'RE IN THE MONEY: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—An excellent comedy that pleased in every particular. The stars are well known for this type of film and they did just a little more and a little better than was expected. The result was pleasing in every particular. Played October 12.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

Short Features

Educational

HELLO, SAILORS: Buster West, Tom Patricola—This is the best musical comedy I've seen for some time; as much dancing nearly as "Roberta." Play it, you'll like it.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

HIS LUCKY DAY: Star Personality Comedies—A good comedy and not slapstick.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

KISS THE BRIDE: Tuxedo Comedy—Just very ordinary. Do you suppose there will ever be another really good comedy made—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

LITTLE BIG TOP, THE: Frolics of Youth—Fair comedy. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

MOUNTAIN MELODY: Song Hit Stories Series—Rather poor. There was not much to say about it as it did not have any meaning and I thought it was rather simple on the standpoint of shorts, as Educational usually puts out good shorts, but this one was below average. Running time, 9 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

NOSE FOR NEWS, A: Joe Cook—Good. Running time, two reels.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

RADIO RASCALS: Song and Comedy Hits Series—Has the Cabin Kids and other good musical acts. An excellent single reeler.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

STYLISH STOUTS: Coronet Comedies Series—Why don't we exhibitors join forces and absolutely refuse to use any more comedies? Not one in ten is worth throwing on a screen and many of them are a disgrace. This was one of them. All companies whose product we use are the same with the exception of the "Broadway Brevities" put out by Warners. Running time, 17 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Sta Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

TARS AND STRIPES: Buster Keaton—Keaton's comedies have proven favorites with our patrons. This one got the laughs. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

THREE CHEERS FOR LOVE: Sylvia Froos, Warren Hull—A real good college musical, with some good songs and laughs. You can't go wrong on this one, even if your mother-in-law is at the show.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

WHY MULES LEAVE HOME: Terry-Toons—Here is a cartoon that may be played over and over and it still has an appeal with the children. It is very, very good and any exhibitor who does not know just what short to play on a children's program, just play this one and I know that you will not be disappointed as it is just great. Running time, 6 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

MGM

BURIED LOOT: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—This two-reel "Crime Doesn't Pay" is very good. Entertaining and has a good lesson.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

HISTORIC MEXICO CITY: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—Another fine travel colored short with excellent music. This not only furnishes entertainment but is educational and beautiful.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

LUCKY BEGINNERS: Special—An amateur program with enough different kinds of entertainment to please everyone. One of the best and will please on any program. Running time, 2 reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MEMORIES AND MELODIES: Musical Revues—Wonderful colored subject on my "Old Kentucky Home." Many complimentary remarks.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

MIKE FRIGHT: Our Gang—Good. Running time, two reels.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

SOUTHERN EXPOSURE: Charley Chase—The best Charley Chase for a long, long time. Kept them laughing and some stayed for the second showing. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SPRUCIN' UP: Our Gang—Very good "Our Gang" comedy. The new leading lady is good. Running time, 2 reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Paramount

HYP-NUT-TIST, THE: Popeye the Sailor—These Popeye cartoons are well liked by our patrons and this one stacks up to average. Running time, 7 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

MOVIE MILESTONES: Paramount Varieties—A few shots from the oldtimers, "Covered Wagon," "Miracle Man," etc. Pleased.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

POPULAR SCIENCE: Interesting scientific facts, presented in a manner that struck the fancy of our patrons. Done in color. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

RKO Radio

BLASTED EVENT: Edgar Kennedy—Domestic troubles brought the laughs. Recommend it for playing.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

HUNTING SEASON: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—At last RKO has made an excellent colored cartoon. Give this one preferred time.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MAJOR BOWES AMATEUR THEATRE OF THE AIR: No. 2—The first of this series was novel and appealing, but it would seem with the wide variety of amateurs on Major Bowes' program it would be unnecessary to jam it with "sameness" and Hill Billies as in the first of this series. Give us more variety. Running time, 20 minute.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. General patronage.

MARCH OF TIME: Too highbrow for the small towns. Costs double what it should.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

PATHE TOPICS: No. 6—We cannot say enough for these topics. A great filler, educational, entertaining and beautiful.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SALESMANSHIP AHOY: Four Star Comedy—Same remarks as made under "Stylish Stouts" applies here. This was terrible. Running time, 18 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

SCOTTY FINDS A HOME: Rainbow Parade Cartoon—Better than average cartoon.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

SCOTTY FINDS A HOME: Rainbow Parade Cartoon—Not the best colored cartoon but will please.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

United Artists

GRASSHOPPERS AND THE ANTS, THE: Silly Symphonies—This is the third time for us and they all liked to see it again.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MICKEY'S FIRE BRIGADE: Mickey Mouse—A very fine Mickey Mouse that will please all. The duck rather steals the show from Mickey.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

WHO KILLED COCK ROBIN: Silly Symphonies—This is a masterpiece and should rank with the "Three Little Pigs." Jennie Wren as Mae West is a knockout. Give it your preferred time and advertise it.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Universal

HERE'S THE GANG: Mentone Musical Comedy No. 13-A—Good variety type comedy that pleased. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

HOLLYWOOD TROUBLES: Universal Comedy—No excuse for this one. Not a laugh in it. Running time, 19 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

TID BITS: Doane Musical No. 2—Another good variety presentation. Running time, 19 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

TOYLAND PREMIERE: Cartune Classics Series—Play it Christmas week. It's O. K. for kiddies.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

TWO LITTLE LAMBS: Oswald Cartoons—Another swell Oswald cartoon. These cartoons are very popular here. The music in them is excellent, too.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

Vitaphone

BORRA MINNEVITCH AND HIS HARMONICA RASCALS: Melody Masters Series—An excellent single reel that pleased. Running time, 1 reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

BORRAH MINNEVITCH AND HIS HARMONICA RASCALS: Melody Masters Series—If you want a short that will have your customers bouncing in their seats, you can't afford to miss this one. A funnier, faster-moving one-reeler could not be found. In fact, this one almost stole the show from the feature picture.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

DUBLIN IN BRASS: Morton Downey—This was very good, in fact, we very seldom ever get a poor "Broadway Brevity." But, Oh! You Big V. Comedies! —Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

ECHOES: Charlie Davis and Band—Nice musical with some real novel acts and some oldtime songs. People liked it.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

FREDDY MARTIN AND HIS ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters Series—Rather a disappointment. Too much attempted in so short a time. Nothing to write home about.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

LADY IN RED, THE: Merrie Melodies Series—As usual, this Merrie Melody was very good.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

LADY IN RED, THE: Merrie Melodies—A very excellent colored cartoon. Good for your preferred time. —C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MERRY OLD SOUL, THE: Merrie Melodies—A fine colored cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

RADIO SILLY: Cross & Dunn—This short subject is worth emphasizing to every exhibitor for its entertainment merit. After we played it, we screened it for our staff.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

RUBINOFF AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters Series—The Melody Masters are always good and this one is no exception. Running time, 1 reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SOME BRIDGE WORK: Easy Aces—No good for the farmers who don't play bridge. It doesn't suit our situation.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SO YOU WONT T-T-T-TALK: Roscoe Ates, Shemp Howard—Very poor comedy. Can't recommend this one.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

WE DO OUR PART: Radio Reel No. 3—A good one-reel musical, giving the people Gene and Glenn. Play this one.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

WHY PAY RENT? Roscoe Ates, Shemp Howard—Slapstick, house building comedy, pathetic, but everybody laughed, so I guess it was O. K.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

WILL OSBORNE AND HIS ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters Series—A Melody Master that will add class to your program. "Two Cigarettes in the Dark" has everything it takes for high class entertainment. Running time, 1 reel.—Gladys E. McArle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Miscellaneous

BAER-LOUIS FIGHT PICTURES: Excellent pictures of the fight with slow motion of the knockdowns. Pleased and drew additional business.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

FOX NEWS: No. 1—Very fine newsreel. They are remarkable for a newsreel. No other reel of news from other companies can compare with Fox.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

MILLIONS: Here is a picture with free advertising and no rental fee. Obtained by writing Modern Woodmen of America, Rock Island, Ill. Partly in color. All about the World's Fair. People who did not get to see it when it was going, now is the time to see it in full detail. And it is just that, it has some grand pictures of the Fair. The print was in perfect condition. Play it as it means profits. Also, free window cars, as many as you need. We tried it and it made extra profits for us and it only costs you the transportation, so why don't you take a chance? You cannot lose.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

FLEXIBILITY

Now George Henger and Jack Dailey speak up and their opinions on a following page added to letters previously run on the "reporter" style advertising wind up an interesting and informative discussion of the merits and demerits of restraint as against over-enthusiasm in theatre advertising.

Agreement among the writers is quite unanimous against prodigal reiteration of unsubstantiated superlatives. But there is almost as much accord that the "colossal" school still has vitality; that enthusiasm (called by one contributor, the life-blood of show business) can readily and appropriately be defined as a manner of colossal advertising.

Most important perhaps in the forum has been the stress placed upon the manpower value in the construction of the "reporter" ads. Pointed out originally by Elmer Rhoden and confirmed by many of the writers, the success of the "reporter" idea in the final analysis depends almost entirely upon the facility of the pen with which it is set down. As Paul Short says, "The Screen Reporter idea must be handled with kid gloves by showmen who are equipped to do it." And Jack Dailey writes: "It takes a brilliant writer with a sense of humor and possessed of excellent taste. . . ." It also takes, if we may add, a delicate sense of timing, flair for eye-catching layout and, not the least, an ability to choose those picture news items to attract the greatest possible return of reader attention.

However, the consensus of opinion on either side of the discussion leads to no definite decision pro or con, nor is it meant to do so. That such representatives as the Fox Midwest and Standard Theatres showmen have found the "reporter" style of actual benefit is not to be ignored. And that members including Russ Hardwick and Herman Bamberger have used it to advantage, is also to be noted.

If there is a final word, it should be, there is no arbitrary form of advertising to solve the curse of superlatives or to supply the need of them.

The flexibility of the motion picture story in conception and execution should be matched by an equal flexibility in its mode of publicity and advertising.

POSTSCRIPT

Joe Doakes was through. No one would give him a job and his former friends shunned him as though he had the very plague.

True, he wrote fine theatre copy and his newspaper ads were recognized wherever publicity men gather. But the bad break he made could not be excused and overnight his position had gone the way of all flesh. He was "available"—and how.

Joe realized his error had violated all the accepted tenets of theatre advertising procedure and he pleaded for another chance.

But all in vain.

His wife was hungry, his children cried for food. So Joe went on relief and swept leaves together in the park hoping the world would forget.

Six months later he tried again and this time luck seemed to be with him, for he was told to report for duty on his old assignment.

Grateful that his crime had seemingly been forgiven, Doakes appeared the next morning afire with ambition, when, lo, he was told that all bets were off. With a despairing cry, Joe staggered to the river to end it all.

And what did this poor unfortunate publicity man do to turn the world against him? What, oh, what was this heinous crime?

Well, if we must give the horrible details—then we must. He wrote a held-over ad and forgot to include:

"SECOND BIG WEEK."

PLEA FOR BALD HEADS

Now that the nights grow chill and the wintry winds are just around the corner, your venerable chairman representing on his own behalf the legions bereft of hirsute adornment and also those with sensitive necks, pleads for alleviation of that awful annual affliction in the theatre—annoying draughts. It may be tough to keep 'em out, for those icy gusts sneak under doors, dodge through stage entrances, climb down the ventilators and take advantage of every opening.

But smart theatremen realizing there are so many of us who suffer the tortures of the damned when subject to the inquisition of icy wind streams, are digging in right now to repulse the dogged advances.

And for which we bald heads are appreciative no end.

Annoying draughts that spray cranium and vertebrae with chilly breezes should be outlawed immediately by every theatre in the land.

Sends Class Folder To New Residents

At the Plaza, the New York class house that caters to the Park Avenue trade, Manager Milton H. Chamberlain recently created an advertising job strictly in keeping with the tone of the theatre and which was forwarded to the new residents of that neighborhood.

Body of the advertising is a six-page folder, three inside pages carrying complete information and time schedules on three shows making up the following week's programs, outline of story and cast of characters of features topping mention of other units. Other back pages include various comments on a ballot idea Chamberlain recently sponsored to ascertain whether patrons preferred single or double features. Front page carries drawing of theatre and over this is folder with circle in center framing the theatre drawing.

Tipoff on class of patronage house goes after is sample of copy Milt uses as follows: "The Plaza's weekly program is equally noted for its lack of bombast and its complete information including accurate time schedules by which civilized movie-goers can avoid seeing pictures backwards."

And, of Course A Raincheck

Through cooperation of Benjamin Parry, meteorologist for the weather bureau in New York City, RKO Radio's press book for "The Rainmakers," the new Wheeler and Woolsey comedy, suggests numerous weather bureau tieups.

The press book stunts include a homemade rain gauge, instrument displays for the lobby, a sprinkler system which provides a "rainy day" marquee, rain prediction teasers and a rain insurance policy. And, of course, a rain check.

Deadline, Folks

Still time to midnight of Wednesday, November 6, to get those October entries to headquarters for Quigley Awards consideration, and the address is 1790 Broadway, New York. Judges, as announced last week, are S. Charles Einfeld, Phil Reisman and George Weeks. —A-MIKE

Hardwick Puts Over Gag Fashion Parade

Burlesquing the conventional bathing beauty revue and fashion show with men as models for a flock of laughs and a distinct tilt in the grosses is reported by Manager Russ Hardwick, for the Lyceum, Clovis, N. M.

Idea was tied in to Lions' Club for a percentage of receipts for the two nights of the show, the club taking 20 per cent the first night and 15 the second to go to charity fund. In exchange Lions served as models, also plugged the show generally and helped to sell extra tickets.

With the club president, Rus got a lot of merchants to sponsor models, each store paying entry fee of $1.50 with 30 coming in on the stunt. Newspapers of course went strong for the show, staged as would be a legitimate fashion parade, all the participants playing "straight."

A few exceptions were made, such as stage decoration being rough interior with drapes over doors and windows of burlap sewed together from two sacks. Cactus and weeds were used instead of flowers.

Men first appeared in evening dress, trying their durndest to attain the ease of the professional model and thereby gathering plenty of laughs. To help along, Rus dug up a lot of gag wigs for extra giggles. Second appearance was in burlesque bathing suits such as oversize, handmade satins, old style with long drawers and skirts, etc.

Prizes given by voting ballots were also gagged and included brass cuspidors, etc. Run for two nights, Hardwick reports show one of his most profitable ideas with the entry money covering most of the extra costs. Manager also wrote all the publicity, which was much more than usual and aided merchants in layout of burlesque ads that included composite cuts of women in bathing suits topped by men's heads. Theatre ads also contained names of all stores participating and models representing each.

Secures Plugs With Correct Time Stunt

Folks down in Miami, Fla., who have no watches or possess inaccurate timepieces now call the Rex Theatre on a special number in that tropical playground for this information. It's a stunt put over by Manager J. H. Luter now built up to where from three to four hundred calls a day are received, the service working as follows:

Special telephone is installed in box-office with extension to small room where from seven in the morning to eleven girl takes the time calls. Extension charges are less than usual as no outgoing calls are made over this line. Phone company also made available easy number to remember, this being 3-1010, advertised as three-ten-ten.

Service operates from seven a. m. to eleven at night, and after eleven in the morning regular cashier handles the calls at the box-office. When the special number rings, cashier knowing it is for the time service, answers as follows, for instance:

"Good morning, Rex Theatre—showing for the last times today Clark Gable in Jack London's 'Call of the Wild' with Loretta Young and Jack Oakie—the correct time is 11:39."

Luter advertises the stunt with small cards, telephone hangers, etc., and states that though his house is second-run with limited advertising budget, the idea has great possibilities and is developing right along. The peak hours, says Luter, are from seven to eight in the morning and from five to six in the afternoon.

Burkhardt Effects Radio Contest for "Call of Wild"

An essay contest on "Why I would like to have a dog like Buck" was arranged through cooperating radio station by Howard C. Burkhardt at Loew's State in Providence for his "Call of the Wild" engagement. Promoted prize dog was on display in front of theatre, station giving daily plugs to contest and story broke papers.

Beauty store featured an Oberon coiffure, hat store plugged a Gable hat, each merchant mentioning premiere in their ads. Book marks were distributed at all public libraries, plus imprinted book covers.

New Orleans Theatremen Utilize Smart Novelties

From Harold H. Bailey and I. Roy Calamia, who have recently opened their first venture, the Gentilly Theatre, a New Orleans neighborhood house, come a number of interesting ad ideas and effective novelties.

For instance, on "Man Who Reclaimed His Head," an oblong cardboard one-fold herald, size five by three inches, was used, with a teaser angle on the cover (see photo) with copy set as follows:

The block "I" was set the depth of the four lines of copy, each underlined, all printed in light red. Small type below read "see inside" for the turnover, with theatre and picture copy on the inside flap.

To stimulate interest in "Cardinal Richelieu" the boys got out a colored throwaway upon which was carried a trade review on the picture. Ten passes were offered for those selecting what they thought the most forceful sentence in the review with a blank provided for the sentence selected plus name and address of entrant, these to be left in special box in foyer. Bailey and Calamia report favorable returns on this and further audience response on other novelty tieins.

Dannenberg Ties Library Up to "Midsummer Dream"

Sid Dannenberg, Warner's publicity chief in Cleveland planted a special display on "Midsummer Night's Dream" in the city's main library for that opening at the Hanna Theatre.

Exhibit which was placed on large panel in show case off main entrance included depicting highlight scenes with appropriate copy attached. A copy of the book with title page open was set at bottom of case and lying flat on either side were stories dealing with production. Entire display was given special lighting.

Mayor Acts as Judge In "Tarzan" Call Contest

The mayor of Morrilton, Ark., acted as judge in Raleigh Sharrock's "Tarzan" calling contest at the Paramount Theatre. Front page announcements were secured and Raleigh reports the stunt provided plenty of entertainment.

Several colored boys painted with bright colors wearing shorts and carrying spears and knives paraded town carrying a 25-foot banner. Sound truck dressed to represent a jungle with "tribesmen" and cards with picture copy toured outlying districts.

For "Dante's Inferno," an entirely new front was constructed by use of huge devil's head with horns and tusks surrounded by flame effects. Powerful spotlight borrowed from local fire department was operated from building opposite by firemen.

Puzzle Contest Basis of Goethals' "Dynamite" Date

Guest tickets to see "Mr. Dynamite" were offered by George Goethals at the Prytania Theatre, New Orleans, La., in the form of a novelty herald carrying 15 small boxes, each containing a number. Certain six of these numbers when added together would give a total of 21 and to the first 25 submitting correct list tickets were awarded.

Fishkin Ties Tintex To "Becky Sharp"

A neat tieup with the Tintex people was arranged by Louis Fishkin, Alba Theatre, Brooklyn, for "Becky Sharp," for which they supplied a lobby display typifying the beauty of color. An attractive girl sent by the company experimented in booth (see photo) with various color dyes, distributing free samples to every woman, and plugging picture at every opportunity. Tieup was so successful the display was routed over entire circuit.

Beautifully tinted heralds paid for by the Tintex people were distributed house to house, front carried theatre copy and back merchant's ad. Harry Kriegsman cooperated with Louie on the campaign.

Unusual Pressbook On Warners' 'Dream'

Distinctly in keeping with the smart selling campaign on Warner Bros. "Dream" is the exceptional pressbook gotten out by Charley Einfeld, to be used as the cover indicates, for the road show campaigns on the date.

Hard covers are used to bind the impressive spiral-bound volume which measures 14 by 20 inches and decorated in blue and silver. The campaign is introduced under the headings of "The Production As An Attraction" and "The Strategy of the Road Show Campaign." This is followed by editorials and general press endorsements for quote purposes, story of the picture cast of characters and production data.

The exploitation section covers 20 pages and includes class tieups of every description. Complete talk to be made by manager before civic associations is prepared and different is the six-day newspaper strip feature relating story of the actual production. Effective also is the half-hour radio dramatization which presents the highlights in motion picture history from its birth up to production of the "Dream."

Ad section shows the entire newspaper layout for the New York campaign, mostly type, and also makes available complete lineup of pictorial displays. The publicity section includes two full page feature stories. Accessories of all types, banners, block and pictorial paper are shown with pocket on inside of back cover carrying samples of actual advertising aids.

Book is a masterly job in all respects and an extra bow is indicated for Einfeld and the Warner advertising staff who had to do with its creation.

Faces ringed with white circles received tickets.

FAMILY TRADE IN BRITAIN

F P-Canadian Manager Discusses Operation in Provincial Towns; Theatres Aim for Family Trade

BY CHRIS HOLMES
Manager, Royal, Guelph, Ont., Can.

I was very much interested in Mr. Nathanson's address during our recent convention, and particularly in his remarks concerning the operation of theatres as applied to Great Britain.

Having gained the major portion of my theatre experience in England, I can appreciate Mr. Nathanson's observations.

Perhaps a few highlights of the British exhibitor's methods might be found of interest to we celluloid salesmen over on this Continent.

In the provincial towns in Britain, the exhibitor's chief aim is to secure the family trade.

To this end he takes the role of one of the family and imagines himself as living, figuratively speaking, with his patrons. Their opinion of him, of his theatre, of his deportment and conduct as the family's entertainment caterer, of his attractions, and of all the thousand and one items which might come within range of their individual and collective criticism, are all of extreme importance.

Any thoughts he may have of "I like my show, therefore you must like it" are instantly dispelled by the discerning exhibitor. In consequence, he does not indulge in extravagant advertising.

He presents his pictures to his "family" entirely on their merits, but he loses no opportunity of dressing up his presentation, realizing the eye to be the greater part of the appetite.

The British exhibitor credits his public with intelligence and would not dream of insulting it. He is fully aware that the flaws in his pictures are known to his patrons long before he has the picture booked. To extravagantly advertise weak product is just wasted time, effort and expense.

This does not mean that he consoles himself with the thought that the picture is bad, and so slaps it on the screen cold. He picks out the highlights which he knows have some appeal for his "family," and stresses them. Tie-ins, novelties and the infusion of local color he finds invaluable, but cheap ballyhoo he taboos.

Describes Policy

A set policy is adhered to, particularly with regard to prices of admission, to suitable product for various nights of the week and to starting times of performances.

The hey-day of the normal week is Saturday, the day on which the industries pay wages, and the program for that day is usually one built up especially for the family.

The children monopolize the Saturday matinee, and the adults have the evening performances all to themselves.

A and U pictures must be so labeled in all advertising, and A pictures are avoided on week-end bookings, as far as is possible.

The starting times of performances have great bearing on the successful operation of the British theatre.

Despite the continuous performance, the first and second house habituates have not been eliminated by any means. Traditionally, the British public prefers the "twice nightly" idea, and the exhibitor knows he must keep his program within the confines of two hours.

Double billing is very much the thing, so that it requires careful selection in gauging the length of the film to fit into the two hours, because the second complete performance is just as popular as the first, resulting in quite a clearance of patrons between houses.

If the first performance usually starts at 7 p. m., the second must commence at 9 p. m. to be over by 11 p. m. To do this comfortably where the program almost accupies the two hours, all exits are utilized at the intermission, leaving the main entrance clear for the influx.

Systematic ushering, aided by the honesty of the people, not only clears the theatre in record time, but finds that very few patrons are sitting in a higher priced section of the house than the ticket they hold. Familiarity with the layout of the different priced sections through constant patronage has the effect of the patrons making a bee-line for their proper seats. The traditional respect for set rules rarely finds anyone attempting to be a "smart Alec." In addition, respect for the opposite sex makes it easy for the usherettes (girls usually occupy the post).

Prices Vary

A sliding scale of admission prices has been the practice in British theatres for as long as I can remember.

The range usually starts from 10c. in the "provincial" houses, and ends at 40c. Each section of the theatre is designated, such as Stalls 10c., Pit Stalls 18c., Pit 24c., Dress Circle 40c. and Balcony (back) 24c. The 24c. is the popular price. The Pit, Pit Stalls and Stalls form the lower floor, whilst the Dress Circle is our Loge. Some houses have more than one balcony, usually designated by Dress Circle or first balcony, Upper Circle or second balcony, Family Circle or third balcony, and Gallery or fourth balcony.

The higher you sit, the lower the price.

Children are charged half price, excepting Saturday matinees, when the price is usually 6c.

Throughout the post-War depression, prices of admission have remained unaltered and theatres have not indulged in give-aways or like unethical practices to stimulate business. It is illegal anyway. The result has been one of sustaining the public demand for the primary commodity of the theatre.

In comparing theatre operations of two widely parted countries, they both have oppositions of varying natures, but I still advocate getting after the Family Trade as the exhibitor's longest suit in whichever country you are operating.

Doman Arranges "Barbary Coast" Ball

One of the top stunts in Bob Doman's "Barbary" campaign at United Artists Theatre, San Francisco, was ball put on at ace hotel with old-time bar planted (see photo) for atmosphere.

Also effective was tiein on local street pageant put on by Chamber of Commerce. Bob arranging special sequence depicting days of Barbary Coast with scenery constructed from plans of original in film. Float was entered in parade and bannered with theatre copy.

San Francisco being the home of the "Barbary Coast," papers as was expected plugged date with lots of extra publicity and art. Feature was six-day serialization. Theatre front was decorated with real old time playbills used by saloons in the gold rush days.

"Barbary Coast" Old Time Bar

TWO FURTHER EXPRESSIONS

In last week's issue of the Round Table, we reproduced a one-column "reporter" ad run by Standard Theatres, Oklahoma City, under the signature of General Manager Pat McGee, and below is published a letter from City Manager George Henger on the reasons for adopting this style. Following George's opinion is one from Jack Dailey, of Walter Wanger Productions.

Below column to right is another variation of the "reporter" slant as used from time to time by Manager Russ Hardwick, Mesa Theatre, Clovis, N. M., and also illustrated at left is a one-column "colossal" ad run recently by the New York Paramount.

MY DEAR MIKE:

If you will pardon the delay in answering your letter regarding our Movie Reporter. I did so purposely as I was desirous of gaining more information regarding this type of advertising. As you state, we virtually lifted the idea from Elmer Rhoden after gaining his consent to do so. Nevertheless, we have attempted to swing away from the Fox West Coast style into an interpretation of our own. For example, while we have picked up the idea of giving away tickets and of using newsy items to concentrate attention on the column, we have gone into an entirely different Sunday makeup and type style.

As an example of the success that has followed this revolutionary type of advertising, I might cite that we went into the old gag of putting on a "Revival Week" at one of our houses that was very sick through lack of product. We used no display advertising whatsoever in announcing and carrying through what was originally slated to be one week of revival pictures, but just by hammering away well in advance in the Movie Column and keeping it fresh daily, Revival Week spread for seven days to 21 and the end is not yet in sight. The box office receipts were more than gratifying with the theatre in question, doubling its revenue and lowering its cost both in advertising and naturally in film rental.

I shall be very glad to keep in touch with you as the developments unfold through use of the so-called Movie Reporter. I am not so much concerned at present with any radical lowering of newspaper costs as I am in the possibilities of increased business.—GEORGE Y. HENGER, CITY MANAGER, STANDARD THEATRES CORP., OKLAHOMA CITY,

DEAR MIKE:

I'm afraid that as long as theatre personnel is what it is, I shall have to put up with the "colossal" school of advertising.

It takes a brilliant writer, with a sense of humor and possessed of excellent taste ever to attempt to duplicate successfully Mr. Rhoden's "Screen Reporter." Fortunately, Mr. Rhoden has all of these things. Unfortunately, very few managers have them.

Your average manager is much safer on the colossal grounds. There, he has but to garner a few choice adjectives from the pressbook or pull a few from former successful campaigns. Conditions being what they are, there are probably no more than 50 qualified and experienced theatre publicity men in the United Etates.

One might think that Mr. Rhoden's style could be offered in pressbooks or from the home advertising offices of film companies. In that, he would be mistaken. No advertising executive who thinks anything of his job would ever submit such copy to a producer who firmly believes his picture is the greatest.

So, unless theatres start replacing their hard-working practical managers with young copywriters who would be worth $10,000 a year to any advertising agency, I think we should stick to the "colossal." Otherwise, I'm afraid you'll see some God-awful attempts to be brilliant and cute.

Kindest regards.—JACK DAILEY, WALTER WANGER PRODUCTIONS, LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Maybe I'm Wrong—

What would you say? If all the elemental human emotions were dramatized—love, fear, hate, desire, greed, sorrow, passion, tenderness, cruelty and compassion—wouldn't you say a picture should appeal to all?

If it were extremely fantastic and had the aspect of wild adventure—great mystery appeal, and with superb and strange love angles, wouldn't you say it offered an array of entertaining features to please people of all ages and in all walks of life?

If it pictured wonders that had only been dreamed of—a woman walking through a curtain of steam and bathing in fire—an avalanche of ice, carrying humans and animals to destruction — a sabre toothed tiger sealed in a tomb of glacial ice—a tipping rock, delicately balanced over a bottomless abyss, upon which men fight frantically for their lives—a palace carved from the solid granite of the heart of a mountain—wouldn't you say it was spectacular?

We would—and we believe you will.

You'll find it all in "SHE" —story of the amazing life of an increditable woman—told against a background of scenes unbelievable.

"SHE," with a cast of 5000, comes to the LYCEUM starting at the Midnite Prevue Saturday and continuing through Sunday, Monday and Tuesday. Will you come see it—and then tell me if I'm wrong?

RUSSELL HARDWICK.

CLAUDE E. POOLE
is the exploitation manager of Warners' Academy in Hagerstown, Md., working for our good friend Tommy Baldridge. What's the matter boys, we haven't heard from you, particularly Tom, who promised us some time ago when he was up to be more active! Between the two of you, Claude, we'll expect a letter a week.

is managing the Washington Theatre in New Orleans, too. If you two boys don't know each other, it's time you got acquainted and we'll introduce you via this page. How about a little lively competition between the two of you? Between the two of you there's no reason why New Orleans shouldn't be well represented on these pagees.

manages the Y.M.C.A. Theatre in Ware Shoals, S. C. Since you want to join the club, Lewis, and take advantage of the stunts we list, I should think an account of your activities handling the "Y" ought to be mighty interesting. Maybe some of the stunts you are putting over could be applied to other theatres.

is the chief artist for the Palace and Winter Garden Theatres in Jamestown, N. Y., for Warner Bros. Milt's work has appeared on our pages frequently and this will serve as a reminder that we haven't heard from him recently. How's about you, Milt?

is close to home, managing the City Theatre on East 14th Street, New York City, with Sol Schwartz. Listen, boys, if the out-of-town members drop in first opportunity they get when visiting here, there's no excuse for your not coming up to say hello and getting personally acquainted. The latch-string is out, so come on up.

FRANK P. McDONALD
assistant at the Lancaster Theatre, Boston, Mass, admits to be an ardent follower of our pages. His chief, William J. Russell, is also a member, having joined a while back, so between the two of them we expect to have some reports as to what's what up Boston way.

is the general manager and owner of the Grand and Earle theatres, in Mount Airy, N. C., from which town we already have members. We are glad to add your name to the ever-growing list and hope you shall become a frequent contributor.

Paul Binstock Becomes Benedict

A farewell-to-bachelorhood party was tendered Paul Binstock, manager of the Republic Theatre, Brooklyn the other evening at the Valhalla Restaurant. The attractive bride was the former Helen Heller.

Among those present were: Mr. & Mrs. Murray Alper, Alba Theatre, Joe Rinzler and guest, Biltmore; Mr. and Mrs. George Litman, Culver; Irving Berman, Meserole; Irving Gold, Walker; Irving Goldstein, Randforce home office; Charles Steinman, exhibitor; Mr. & Mrs. Lew Preston, general manager Nelson & Renner; Mr. & Mrs. Max Cooper, Fox, Hackensack; John La Barba and guest, Meserole; Mr. & Mrs. Edward Sachs, Lefferts; Mr. & Mrs. Pincus, Maspeth; Mr. & Mrs. Joseph Morse, former Brooklyn attorney; Dave Stern, vaudeville booking agent and Mr. & Mrs. Fred Kazan, photographer.

ED ROSEN
now managing the Vanity Theatre, a Barr and Barr house in Brooklyn, N. Y., started in showbusiness as usher at the N. Y. Paramount, later to be transferred to the Rialto as assistant chief. From there Ed went to RKO Albee and Madison under Bell Mack and then left the theatre game to enter the silk business. However, the lure of the marquee lights was too strong and so we find Rosen happily engaged managing the Vanity.

has had considerable experience around theatres, having started as usher, doorman, stage hand, operator and manager. He is now acting in that capacity at the Ritz Theatre in Centreville, Ala., for W. K. Couch, a showman for the past twenty-five years.

is another manager to join the round table ranks from the Paramount Theatre in Syracuse, where we boast such good members as Gus Lampe at the Fox Eckel and a few others. Ben Blackmon, publicist at the Paramount is another good friend of ours, so you see, Dave, we're not unacquainted up your way.

acts as assistant manager of the Benson Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., a Randforce house and a circuit that is almost solidly Round Table conscious. There are mighty few, we guess, who haven't actually joined, so we are glad to welcome you as another to swell the list from Brooklyn.

is the advertising and publicity director of the RKO Mainstreet Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., and as he joins, asks that we include his assistant, L. B. WILLIAMS, in the round table ranks. This is formal acceptance of your membership and we shall look forward with interest to reports of your activities.

manages the Elgin Theatre in Elgin, Oregon, and he is the first round tabler to join from that city, so the responsibility of letting your brother managers know how shows are put on in Elgin, will rest on your shoulders. We await with interest your reports.

at the Georgia Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., is no stranger to these pages, having contributed from time to time. Brad for the past few weeks was assistant to our good friend E. E. Whitaker at the Fox in that city and was recently promoted to his present position. Best of luck to you and how about some campaigns?

assistant manager of the Boulevard, Jackson Heights, L. I., started in showbusiness at the tender age of fifteen at the Hippodrome in Buffalo. After serving in various theatres around that territory, Art came to New York to go to the Mutual Theatre in Jamaica and thence to his present job.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

JESSE LASKY NOTES BETTER BRITISH FILMS
MARION DAVIES PUSHES COMMUNITY CHEST
DAY AND DATE POLICY UP TO THE COURTS
TEN PICTURES START; NINE ARE FINISHED

EXHIBITORS may look forward to films of markedly higher caliber from England next year, according to Jesse Lasky, just back from an extended vacation in France and Great Britain, inspecting studios by day and seeing foreign films at night.

American technical talent is largely responsible for much of the improvement in British films, Mr. Lasky said. On every lot he found dozens of friends and acquaintances working on visitors' visas. Business for British films is rising so rapidly that theatres are springing up in unprecedented numbers, and Alexander Korda is building the biggest studio in the world, covering 165 acres, to take care of his expanded schedule, he said.

Mr. Lasky predicted a much greater interchange of stars, writers and directors between England and Hollywood than ever before. He also believed that many more British pictures than ever before would be offered to the American public, both those made by British companies and films made abroad by Hollywood producers, with a fair exchange of product and no loss to American producers.

"Entertainment," he said, "isn't a matter of patriotism, after all. The more good films to come out of Great Britain, the better it is for the industry at large."—MILLER.

The Boy Who Made Good Copy

Chic Sales' new MGM short, "The Perfect Tribune," tells how Abraham Lincoln learned of the effect of his Gettysburg speech after he had considered it a failure. It all began when a boy ran into him on a street corner. While visiting Governor Horner of Illinois recently at Springfield, Ill., Chic met the "boy," now more than 80 years old, and heard the story first-hand.

Marion Davies accepted the chairmanship of the artists' division of the Community Chest for the film industry. . . . Bob Sisk has been called to New York by RKO home office executives. . . . Jesse Goldburg, vice-president in charge of distribution for the Derr-Sullivan Productions, planed to Manhattan on sales deals. . . . "Ramona" has joined the list of Technicolor features for the coming year, according to Darryl Zanuck. Production has been postponed temporarily on the film. . . . Whether a day and date policy can be adopted by subsequent-runs will be decided here soon. A temporary restraining order has been issued against the President and Tower theatres here on behalf of Robert Gumbiner of the Cameo theatre, a third-run house, who claims he is prevented from getting "Top Hat" because the two theatres are running the picture, although all houses are in the same zone.

When "So Red the Rose" finishes at Paramount within the next few days, Douglas MacLean, who produced it, will leave the lot and go on a well-earned vacation. MacLean, along with Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, Sr., Mary Pickford and Harold Lloyd, has won distinction as producer and performer. He is also a writer of note. His productions as well indicate a rare versatility. They range from the broad slapstick of "Six of a Kind" to the somber melodrama of "So Red the Rose," a musical, "Melody in Spring," a sophisticated comedy-drama "Accent on Youth," and "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," a homespun yarn.

MacLean said he would take a sea voyage and return to harness in about two months. His future connection has not yet been announced.

Ten Pictures Start

Ten pictures starting in the last week as nine were finished, the production mill ground at a more intense pace than it has for more than a month. Eight studios, majors and independents, account for the new product; six participated in the completed pictures.

Starting three features, MGM is in the vanguard. In "Whipsaw" Myrna Loy and Spencer Tracy are teamed. The support includes Harvey Stephens, Pat Flaherty, William Harrigan, Lillian Leighton, Charles Irwin, Robert Gleckler and Robert Warwick. Sam Wood is directing. Also on the stages is "The Getaway," with Jackie Cooper, Joseph Calleia, Lewis Stone, Dudley Digges, Robert Greig and Jean Hersholt. Chester Franklin is directing. The third feature, "Kind Lady," will present Aline McMahon, Basil Rathbone, Dudley Digges, Nola Luxford, Barbara Shields, Murray Kinnell, Henry Wadsworth, Mary Carlisle, Marjorie Gateson, Donald Meek, Eily Malyon and Mary Forbes. George B. Seitz is directing.

At Paramount, "Give Us This Night" will feature Jan Kiepura, Gladys Swarthout and Jack Haley. Alexander Hall is directing.

Regal Pictures started "Rest Cure," the cast for which lists Reginald Denny, Vince Barnett, Esther Ralston, Eleanor Hunt and Claudia Dell.

At Universal "Next Time We Live" started, with Margaret Sullavan, James Stewart and Wallace Ford featured. Edward H. Griffith is directing.

TRIPLE FEATURING IS VAUDEVILLE SUBSTITUTE

Because of differences with the stagehands' union, the Pitt Theatre, Pittsburgh, which has been taken over by Morse and Rothenberg, has dropped vaudeville after a single week and reverted to a straight picture policy.

But this is a policy the like of which Pittsburgh has never seen before—triple features at the lowest price in town, ten and fifteen cents in the afternoon and fifteen and twenty-five cents at night.

In the three weekly pictures at the house there are one revival and two independent first-runs.

"Backfire" was launched at Warner. The cast lists Patricia Ellis, Lyle Talbot, Ross Alexander, Eddie Acuff, Henry O'Neil, Olin Howard, Egon Brecher, Joseph Sawyer and John Qualen. Frank McDonald is directing.

Work began on "Champagne Charlie" at 20th Century-Fox. James Tinling directs and cast names to date are Paul Cavanaugh, Helen Wood, Noel Madison and Montagu Love.

Majestic started "Firetrap" with Norman Foster, Evalyn Knapp, Sidney Blackmer, Oscar Apfel and Ben Alexander featured under Burt Lynwood's direction.

Nine Films Completed

Paramount completed "Millions in the Air" and "The Bride Comes Home." In the first the cast includes Johnnie and Willie Howard, Wendy Barrie, Bennie Baker, Catherine Doucet, David Chasen, Ernest Cossart, Robert Cummings, Eleanor Whitney, Samuel Hinds, Inez Courtney and Halliwell Hobbes. Ray McCarey directed. The second picture stars Claudette Colbert and Robert MacMurray, supported by Robert Young, William Collier, Sr., Donald Meek, Johnny Arthur, Charles Sylber, Bob McKenzie, William Arnold and Charles West. Wesley Ruggles directed.

Paramount also finished a Western. In "Bar 20 Rides Again," which Howard Bretherton is directing, will be seen William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison, Jean Rouveral, Frank McGlynn, Jr., Howard Lang, Harry North, Paul Fix, Ethel Wales, J. P. McGowan and Al St. John.

Radio finished "It Happened in Hollywood." The cast presents Wallace Ford, Phyllis Brooks, Brian Donleavy, Molly Lamont, Erik Rhodes, Addison Randall, Maxine Jennings, Oscar Apfel, Frank Mills, Alan Hale and Charles Wilson. Christy Cabanne directed. Also "Seven Keys to Baldpate" was transferred to the cutting rooms. In this will be seen Gene Raymond, Margaret Callahan, Eric Blore, Molly Lamont, Moroni Olsen, Grant Mitchell, Ray Mayer, Henry Travers, Harry Beresford and Emma Dunn. Edward Killy and William Hamilton co-directed.

Two pictures were completed at 20th Century-Fox. "Buccaneer" features Claire Trevor, Kent Taylor, Paul Kelly, Pauline Frederick, Helen Wood, Colin Tapley, Henry Kolker, Frank Dawson and Thomas Beck. George Archainbaud directed. The second feature, "Your Uncle Dudley," will present Edward Everett Horton, Lois Wilson, Rosina Lawrence, John McGuire, Russell Wade, Florence Roberts, Jane Barnes, Marjorie Gateson, William Benedict, Alan Dinehart and Katherine Alexander. Eugene Ford directed.

"Splendor," a Sam Goldwyn production for United Artists release, was completed. Miriam Hopkins and Joel McCrea are starred, supported by Paul Cavanaugh, Helen Westley, Billy Burke, Katherine Alexander, Ruth Weston, David Niven, Ivan Simpson, Arthur Treacher, Torben Meyer and Reginald Sheffield. Elliott Nugent directed.

Winding up the list of completed pictures, Warner finished "Miss Pacific Fleet." The cast lists Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell, Warren Hull, Hugh Herbert, Allen Jenkins, Marie Wilson, Eddie Acuff, Minna Gombell, Guinn Williams and Paul Fix. Arthur G. Collins directed.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 288.—John L. Hoskins of New Orleans, La., submits this question: (A) Would it not be possible to connect the monitor so that it would project exactly the same sound as is projected by the auditorium loudspeakers? If this could be done it would at least enable projectionists to detect and remedy some possible faults, though of course not all of them. (B) When there is noise in the sound that we suspect has its seat in some particular sound equipment, and to be due to a partial or light ground, what is the quickest and best way to test the matter?

Answer to Question No. 283

Bluebook School Question No. 283 was: (A) What care should be given sound-three-head drive belts? (B) What effect will a dirty sound screen have on quality of sound reproduction? (C) What care should be given sound screens to insure good sound transmission?

The engineers collaborating in this series of questions answer:

(A) "The most important consideration is to be sure the motor drive pulley and the soundhead flywheel are in perfect alignment with each other. Improperly aligned pulleys will cause excessive belt wear. Care also should be taken to keep belts free from oil and grease. Oil or grease not only produces tendency to slip, but also it is injurious to them, causing rapid deterioration."

(B) "In the perforated type of screen (this also applies to the porous type) clogged holes will of course reduce the loudness of sound and will compel a higher volume control setting on the amplifier. The sound will be muffled. Speech will be made less intelligible, and the higher frequencies of sound will be attenuated."

(C) "It is good practice to examine the screen at frequent intervals and to blow out any accumulations of dust found in the perforations with compressed air."

The following projectionists sent fairly good answers: S. Evans and C. Rau; D. Danielson; G. E. Doe; A. F. Sprafke; J. Wentworth and C. Wentworth; C. Oldham; R. J. Arntson; P. and L. Felt; N. L. Tomlinson and G. Lathrope; S. Carberry; G. Edwards; O. Allbright; T. L. Daniels and G. Samuels; T. T. Golley; F. L. Savlor and G. N. Guidotti; L. M. and C. B. Traxler; O. L. Daris and F. Simms; F. H., S. L. and P. Dalbey; P. Itt; J. L. Grangier; C. Umphrey; H. Urger; T. Turk; D. Howard and J. Jurts B. H. Thaller and S. Spooner; T. T. Davidson and R. G. Crews; A. Richardson and L. N. Haynes; D. U. Granger and L. B. Proctor; T. E. Mantol; R. E. Salisbury; M. H. Thornton; K. L. Knight and M. Henderson; R. and K. Wells; I. L. Lifton and B. L. White; N. Thomlinson; H. T. Adams; R. Bluend; I. B. Bancroft; T. L. Davis and H. J. Goodman; F. Ferguson and D. D. Lally; J. Lansing and R. D. Oberleigh; J. Genson; D. Emmerson; K. Y. Gilbert; H. T. Granger; L. L. Samuels, W. Burns, T. R. Fanning and L. Dennis; R. and K. Wells; D. L. Sinklow; S. D. and W. Love; F. N. Giddings; G. Doty; G. R. Squires; M. M. Sitman; H. Youst; J. White; S. T. Rogers; H. A. Woods and H. T. Farrell; B. Sismann and W. Mallard; L. Daniels; J. L. Moffett.

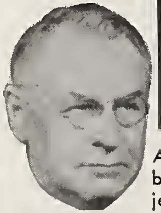
C. Umphrey answers Section A thus:

"First, there are two types of sound head belt, namely, the chain and the composition belt. If it be the latter, then it must be kept clean, free from oil or grease and at correct tension, which means just taut enough to drive the mechanism without slipping. Too much tension will mean excessive wear on both belt and bearings; too little, of course, will not do at all. If means be provided for readily releasing the belt tension, it should be done after the last run each day. Belts treated thus will last longer and in every way give better service.

"If it be a chain drive belt, it must be kept thoroughly lubricated. Opinions vary as to the best lubricant, but I asked the advice of the manufacturers of the chain. It costs only three cents to do so and I believe they should know what is best. Their advice was 'Use a good grade of grease and plenty of it.' Also, one must inspect the chains frequently for possible broken links."

I looked askance at the grease idea at first. It seemed to me a rather light oil would be better. Then I remembered that chains do make some noise, and grease probably would serve to deaden that, so I guess it is all right.

(B) H. Edwards says, "A dirty sound screen affects the quality of the picture by altering its whites to dirty grays in proportion to the amount of deposit or discoloration. By doing this it of course reduces the picture contrast and makes it a 'dead' appearing thing instead of 'snappy' and pretty. As to the sound, it has no effect so long as the perforations remain open and free. But if the perforation areas are reduced by deposits, as often is the case, sound volume is lowered and speech quality reduced."



F. H. RICHARDSON'S NEW BLUE BOOK OF PROJECTION

A new edition of this famous book is now on the press. Projection sound reproduction and trouble-shooting all in one compact, handy volume of 700 pages, including 153 illustrations of hook-ups, wiring diagrams and schematics.

Experts consider it the most up-to-date and practical projection manual on the market. Contains an extremely simple index system for instant use in emergency breakdowns. A book that should be part of every projection room in the country. OUT IN NOVEMBER.

1790 Broadway New York

P. and L. Felt say, "If the dirt deposited be sufficient to close in or reduce the perforation area, then the sound will suffer in quality. I do not know just why, but it will not be clear, as observation has proved to me when listening to sound coming through a badly soiled screen. More than that, the volume will of course be lowered and the effect on the beauty of the picture will be to reduce it in accordance with the amount of dirt."

(C) A. F. Sprafke says, "In order to ensure good sound transmission, the screen should be brushed off occasionally with a very soft brush to remove all dust, etc., as is collected. The type of brush is of high importance. If the bristles are too stiff and harsh, it may ruin the surface by causing streaks. The brush bristles should be very soft; in fact, almost like camel's hair. Also, if any spots are overlooked, they will most certainly show up in the picture. Brushing should occur at least once each week—oftener in some localities."

G. E. Doe says, "To secure good transmission, the perforations must be kept open to their full size. There are several ways of insuring open perforations, but the one I have selected after trying them all is as follows:

"I had a brush made on special order. It is 12 inches wide by three inches thick. Its bristles or hairs are 2.25 inches long outside their bedding. They are very soft—in fact, almost like camel's hair. I don't remember their trade name.

"Their holder, or whatever they call it, is made hollow. That is to say, between the bedding that holds the hair and the part that holds the handle, is a space a half-inch deep, and there are small openings between each wad of bristles. To the lower end of the handle, which is quite light and hollow, is attached an air hose attached to a drum, which I have charged at my gas station.

"When I brush the screen I do it rather lightly, while at the same time air flows through the brush. The combined action of the brush-bristles and air does a perfect job on both the surface and the perforations. There is one fault—they say nothing is perfect—namely, the dust is of course blown out into the air.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1935-36 season.

NEWS NOTES FROM CHICAGO SECTOR

CHICAGO

THE booking-clearance war which waged along the Chicago film row the past few weeks has finally ran its course and now all is quiet.

The conflict started when Balaban and Katz demanded an extra seven days clearance between "C" week and first week of release. The distributors, who had closed many deals for this season's product, were unable to meet these demands without subjecting themselves to numerous legal tangles with those who held the contracts made on the old basis of clearance.

B. & K. tried numerous means to get the clearance but when it proved to no avail gave up the battle for the time being and proceeded to outline plans for the obtaining of this clearance on all product next season.

Conferences probably will be held the first of the year. Most distributors are of the opinion that B. & K. is entitled to the clearance and they will be willing to give it to them on the 1936-37 product.

With the clearance matter settled the regular releases can probably be set on scheduled time and this will be a source of great happiness to many exhibitors who had their schedules upset when releases for November were long delayed as a result of the clearance-booking battle.

The exact date and the theatre to be used will be decided this week for the opening of "Midsummer Night's Dream" in the Loop. So far the Apollo is reported to be the most likely spot. November 21 is the tentative date. Top prices will be $1.50.

Clyde W. Eckhardt, veteran sales manager here for Fox, spent the first of the week in St. Louis on business.

Passengers on the Chief who stopped between trains in Chicago were: Mr. and Mrs. Peter Lorre, Irene Dunne, Betty Furness, Mrs. Edward Knopf, Al Jolson and Mr. and Mrs. Fredric March. The film folk stopped over long enough to have their pictures taken and say a few words for the local scribes. Lorre was going to England for a picture and Miss Dunne to join her husband in New York. March was returning to Hollywood for his next assignment, as was Jolson.

Two deaths took Film Row notables this past week. Charles Leist, for years an official with B. & K., died unexpectedly, as did Frank M. Teter, co-owner of the Tivoli theatre and business associate of Harry Foster.

Allen Usher of Paramount spent the first of the week downstate on business.

"Two Sinners" is the first Republic picture to play first-run in the loop. The film goes into the State-Lake Monday, according to Irving Mandel, exchange manager for Republic.

Lou Reinheimer is reported as having taken over the Vogue theatre in Lincoln.

United Artists, not selling product to B&K for the first time in years, have booked the Essaness houses on the North Side and the Warner houses on the South Side for the initial showings in these sections. The Sheridan will play the UA pictures in "B" week in the north section while the Avalon gets the "B" showing in the south part of town. Both circuits have bought all United Artists product.

Sam W. Morris, ace film critic, is now en route to the Pacific Coast seeing what makes the wheels turn in Hollywood. While there Sam will write a series of special stories for the American here, besides getting material to use at a later date. This is Sam's first trip to the Cinema City and the West Coast lads are planning a royal welcome for him there. He is stopping at the Roosevelt.

The Walgreen drug stores, which started a "daily dividend" plan some weeks ago, dropped the idea last week. The reason for the veto, it is reported, was that interest dropped soon after the novelty wore off because of a lack of showmanship in the presentation of the idea. All drawings were held privately and this did not arouse much interest from the patrons. The fact that many whose names were drawn could not win the money because they did not have customers' receipts for a purchase the day of the drawing and thus failed to win, also were regarded as handicaps to the success of the plan. The only plans of this type which seem to hold their appeal are those at which the drawing is made public.

John Balaban, Aaron Saperstein and Jack Miller, who are in charge of the amusement division of the Community Chest, held a luncheon for film people at the Stevens Hotel Monday to discuss plans for the forthcoming campaign. This campaign is in addition to the annual affair held to raise funds for the Chicago Film and Theatre Relief Fund.

Sol Lesser's latest Tarzan serial starring Herman Brix has been booked into the Essaness houses.

The Blaine theatre has been reopened with J. Steiniger as manager.

Sam Gorelick of RKO is suffering from a cold. It just shows you can't run around in the rain without a top coat even if you have a "Top Hat."

Evelyn Ehrenborg, Universal P.B.X-pert, plans to spend a few months in California this winter. That is, unless she decides to take that fur coat friend husband offered her.

Emma Abplanalp visited with the home folk in Indianapolis again this wek. She looks for a healthy increase in Film Board of Trade activities shortly. Says there is considerable doing.

LaPorte, Ind., has a new theatre, the Tyler. House seats 300 and is managed by S. Stein. It was opened early last month.

Henri Ellman spent last weekend in New York, returning home Tuesday. He arranged for distribution of several new series of pictures.

"Barbary Coast" went into the United Artists theatre last week with a "pink ticket." All advertising carries the line "Adults Only." This is the first picture to get a "pink ticket" here in many months.

Dr. Clinton Wunder, former executive of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, is now crusading for the members of the Townsend Club. He spoke at a big rally held here last week when 6,000 members met to discuss the $200 monthly pension plan.

Numerous changes have been made in the releases for the last two weeks of November. Special bulletins telling of the changes were rushed out to exhibitors by Ed Mager of Allied.

The biggest demands for radio broadcast tickets this town has seen are made for the Jack Hylton broadcasts held on Sunday nights at the Civic Auditorium. Exhibitors are wondering how much this show will cut in on their receipts as the auditorium capacity is rated at 4,000.

Paramount held a trade showing of "Hands Across the Table" at the Roosevelt the other night. The house was packed for the midnight showing and there were many favorable comments.

Mayor Kelly closed "Tobacco Road" so tight that even with a federal court decision in their favor the producers are unable to find a theatre in which to show the play. None of the house managers wants to take a chance of losing its city license. Chances are the play will open in some outlying house that does not come under Mayor Kelly's jurisdiction.

Missing Margot Napier's latest production, "Gold in Them Thar Hills," the other evening was a great disappointment to her ardent admirer and severe critic

DUMBBELL RIGHTS

PRESENT and impending problems of radio, facing the probability of some extensive New Deal regulation and readjustment, afford a significant and interesting arena of action for observation and study by the world of the motion picture. For the moment the motion picture is fortunate in that the radio, as the newest of the media, is drawing to itself meddling attentions that would otherwise tend to concentrate on the screen.

Expressions from Mr. George Henry Payne, federal communications commissioner, recording his notion of the necessity for a quality standard for broadcasting programs and a required proportion of "educational and cultural" material, have brought to him a flood of communications of discontent with the radio from educators across the land.

R. B. Von Kleinschmidt, president of the University of Southern California, thinks that it is the Commission's proper job to keep off the air "the worse than trash that occupies so many hours of every day." W. M. Jardine, president of the University of Wichita, holds that if the radio and its sponsors do not cooperate, "the commission should be clothed with the necessary authority to compel such improvement." Dixon Ryan Fox, president of Union College at Schenectady, says "the air is common property and the granting of a license to broadcast is the granting of a franchise." The requirement of standards on the air, he holds, "can be confused with censorship only in muddled minds."

Most entertaining is the ever militant and positive Walter Dill Scott, the psychologist president of Northwestern University, who cries out that "the radio is a monster that may degenerate into a displeasing but profitable advertising medium, or may develop into a great social asset to America."

One may wonder what Dr. Scott thinks the radio is now!

It would seem then that about now the gabbing scatter brain radio is in for a line of bootstraps culture, with the national hook-ups reformed into frankfurted links of uplift and erudition.

The great inarticulate population of dumbbells in this nation needs now, as never before, a defender. Homo Sapiens was born with the right to sign himself Homo Sap. Being that, he seems never to consciously know that he has a right to be what he is. One of the best ways to ruin the life of the natural born underdog is to try to put him on top. When the motion picture outgrew the chases of the nickelodeon dramas the dumbbells lost their art and they did not get it back again in full until the genius of technology brought them the piffle of the broadcast. The applause cards and the fan mail determined the course of development and the exquisite crystallizations of vapidity which characterize the typical product of the air. Now a gang of cap-and-gown crusaders would emerge from their endowed and ivy mantled strongholds on the hills and dam the valleys of the lowly folks who want to hear and feel without thinking.

The state controlled radios overseas will any night afford the interested investigator opportunity to discover what happens when authority tries to lay its hands on communication and culture. Try England for unalloyed stodgy boiled mutton fare, and try Berlin for a sample of radio-with-a-message.

The art offerings of radio's advertiser sponsors on the air are no lower in their intellectual influences and import than their equivalent and parallel offerings on the printed pages of the newspapers and magazines and window cards and billboards. There is no outscreaming from the professors these days about bad color, bad typography and hellish rhetoric in the great Sunday supplements' appeal to the market for soap, perfume, pickles and breakfast foods. The jumbled window displays of the stores along every Main street of America, with their hideous arrangements of dumbbell merchandise, probably exert a much more immediate and direct influence on the cultural standards of the land than the banalities of the smirking voiced radio elocutionists with their production-line humor. Yet no one has risen up to proclaim that vision on a public street is also common property and the right to erect and operate a show window is therefore in the nature, also, of a franchise.

The operators of the college diploma mills with their football ballyhoos ought to have learned by now that culture is acquired by individual grace, not by mass baptisms.

The motion picture has risen in the intelligence characteristics of its wares by exploring the public. The process is as positive as it is gradual. Radio can perhaps make some progress the same way. Meanwhile, no person or commission of persons can do anything about it.

THE W.C.T.U., having solved all the problems for which it was organized, is now devoting considerable attention to the motion picture with profound opinions about both block booking and double billing. This assures an equally early solution.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

For 'Little Fellow'

Flatly denying reports emanating from organized music circles, the Department of Justice and the National Association of Broadcasters in Washington this week affirmed that the Government is determined to push relentlessly monopoly charges against the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and other defendants with the aim of bringing about relief in music fees, especially for the small exhibitor.

Moreover, it predicted in Washington that after the trial is resumed in New York this winter, ASCAP will make suggestions for a consent decree to forestall possible Congressional legislation.

The National Association of Broadcasters denied also that member stations are being urged to sign new agreements with the music society. These developments and those among the organized music interests in New York are detailed in the story starting on page 13.

Vanishing Print

Opposition by patriotic and civic forces to the spread of Soviet propaganda on the screens of America is growing in intensity, it became evident when the scheduled exhibition of "Chapayev" in Kenosha, Wis., was frustrated. The print of the film "disappeared" after local Communists rebuked a delegation from the American Legion and other such groups who had requested a screening.

The Reds are demanding prosecution of those responsible for "stealing" the print, but no warrants have been issued.

Vladimir I. Verlinsky, president of Amkino, the Soviet distributing agency in this country, meantime is in Hollywood preparatory to shipping studio equipment valued at more than $100,000, as the initial order of the Soviet film industry in this country. Mr. Verlinsky said the Soviets recognize the superiority of American methods and would purchase all such equipment here in the future. See page 18.

Eyes on Coast

Declaring that the results of GB's first year in America were "amazingly good," Mark Ostrer, chairman of the parent company's board of directors, in England, arrived in New York Tuesday, and announced that his program of expansion includes production in Hollywood. He explained that in the last 12 months GB pictures had been distributed in more than 4,000 theatres here.

Mr. Ostrer indicated that GB's American producing unit probably will be organized in conjunction with one of the major producing companies here, and will make from eight to ten films for annual distribution. These will be released, he said, in addition to the 16 taken from the parent company's yearly British-made output of 52. The new organization will have the financial backing of the English company and negotiations are under way.

Mr. Ostrer was accompanied by Michael Balcon, his production chief, who leaves shortly for Hollywood, where he will again sign a number of stars and players for production in England.

Universal Deal

Standard Capital Company, a New York investment firm, and a group headed by Charles R. Rogers, have obtained an option to purchase Universal Pictures Corporation on or before February 1, 1936, for $5,500,000, the option having been given in return for a loan of $750,000 to Universal for heavy production. Work on three major pictures is starting immediately.

Universal Productions, Inc., has been formed with Mr. Rogers as its head to make some pictures under a deal with Universal. See page 23.

More Remakes

Eight of the large producing corporations have doubled the number of remakes of old silent films which they will produce for 1935-36, swelling the list to 54, in keeping with the growing realization that there is great potential wealth in the screen classics of old.

Metro has determined on 14 remakes this season, 20th Century-Fox scheduling nine, Paramount and RKO, seven each, United Artists, Universal and Warner five each, and single remakes from GB Pictures and Republic.

The remakes are listed on page 43, together with all available production credits and release dates, and their early history.

Profits

For the 39 weeks ended Sept. 28, 1935, RKO's B. F. Keith Corporation and the Keith subsidiaries report a net profit of $176,753, after deducting all charges, including depreciation amounting to $486,557 and provision for income taxes amounting to $25,125.

For the corresponding period in 1934 operations resulted in a net loss of $173,603, after depreciation charges amounting to $569,303 and provisions for income taxes of $11,670.

RKO's Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation and subsidiaries reported a net of $172,114, after deducting all charges, including depreciation amounting to $607,940 and provision for income taxes amounting to $38,775.

For the corresponding period last year K-A-O operations resulted in a net loss of $168,546, after depreciation charges amounting to $703,263, and provision for income taxes of $42,320.

Both of the foregoing statements are in part estimated by the respective corporations and are subject to audit and adjustment at the end of the year.

Partners

Decision made for continuance of George Trendle, Karl Hoblitzelle and A. H. Blank as theatre operating partners, Paramount's corporate officers in New York turned their attention to a mid-season sales convention in Los Angeles December 1st to 3d.

At the same time, the receivers and trustees prepared to write their final report of the reorganization and subsequent events. See page 24.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Uncle Sam, Producer

Uncle Sam, giant of all theatrical producers, with a bankroll of $10,000,000, is organizing his Works Progress Administration theatre projects in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles, as the starting points of the huge federal program.

In New York, five projects have been announced to employ between 1,000 and 1,500 actors, technicians, writers and others, and Eddie Dowling is looking for 1,200 musical comedy and vaudeville performers to tour the smaller cities.

That motion picture theatres will bear the brunt of competition from these low priced entertainments is acknowledged even by legitimate managers in New York, some of whom are critical of the entire activity. And Chicago exhibitors are already concerned.

How the Government is going about preparing for its shows is told in the story starting on page 25.

Spitz Heads RKO

The new interests of Floyd Odlum, of Atlas Corporation, and Lehman Brothers announced late Wednesday that arrangements have been made whereby Leo Spitz, of Chicago, will assume the presidency of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, parent of several producing, distributing and theatre operating subsidiaries. Mr. Spitz will come to New York immediately to assume his duties.

Mr. Odlum also announced that Merlin Hall Aylesworth will become chairman of the board of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation. He also heads RCA's National Broadcasting Corporation, and in his elevation succeeds David Sarnoff.

The statement, issued on behalf of Odlum-Atlas and Lehman Brothers, pointed out that "Mr. Spitz is a native of Chicago and has practiced law in that city for the last 25 years. Since 1920 Mr. Spitz's long experience has been identified largely with the motion picture industry."

"Mr. Spitz's long experience as counsel in the motion picture industry," it was said, "has given him an opportunity to know that business from every angle, including production, distribution and theatre operation."

Mr. Spitz became associated with Balaban and Katz when that circuit acquired the Lubliner Trinz interests in 1925. He is the Balaban and Katz general counsel. Although not on the directorate he is known to have taken active part in the Balaban and Katz directors' meetings, and this work has taken him into many phases of industry, including the legal affairs of Paramount Publix. Mr. Spitz and John Hertz are friends of many years' standing prior to Mr. Hertz's connection with Paramount Publix. He was a Paramount executive in 1932, resigning in 1933, to return to Chicago.

The Atlas-Lehman Brothers group obtained a substantial interest in the RKO situation Oct. 11. As of Dec. 31, 1934, Radio Corporation listed its holdings of RKO securities at a balance sheet figure of $14,644,614. When the announcement of the sale was made it was declared that the Atlas-Lehman group had acquired a substantial portion of this investment and options to purchase the balance.

RKO was organized in 1928 as a holding company and acquired various chains of vaudeville and motion picture theatres. In addition it acquired a production organization. It went into bankruptcy in 1933 with assets of $97,000,000.

Examined

Frank Kolbe, president of Pathe Film Corporation, was interrogated this week by Martin E. King, attorney for Pat Casey, in an examination before trial of Mr. Casey's suit for an accounting against the company which alleges mismanagement and dissipation of the assets by the officers and directors.

After sessions on Tuesday and Wednesday the hearings adjourned until Monday. Robert W. Atkins, executive vice-president of Pathe, will be next examined.

Warned

If commercial broadcasters want to keep the present system of privately owned radio stations they will have to improve their programs and change their methods of advertising, George Henry Payne, Federal Communications Commissioner, recently told members of the School of Journalism, at Columbia University in New York.

"If there is evident on the part of the broadcasters an intention to increase the educational and cultural qualities of the programs, if there is observable a desire to reform the advertising methods and inundations with which the public is afflicted, the present system will be maintained, I believe," he said.

"Despite the aspects of radio broadcasting which are unpleasant to the average listener," he continued, "this country is not inclined to accept the British system where the radio is completely controlled by the government, where no advertisements are permitted and where the programs are supported by a tax on radio sets."

In the Courts

The week was a busy one for those of the staffs of the large distributors who are entrusted with guiding their corporations through the maze of legalities and technicalities with which they are frequently faced in the courts of the land.

Outstanding, of course, was the Government's St. Louis case against Warners, RKO and Paramount, on criminal-indictment conspiracy charges that came out of product shortage complaints brought by the Ambassador, New Grand Central and Missouri theatres in that city, as operated by the Harry Arthur-Fanchon and Marco interests. The end of this six-weeks-old federal jury trial was near at hand, the defendants and the Government resting.

Morse and Rothenberg, independents, in New England, filed a $1,000,000 anti-trust suit against distributors and affiliated circuits.

E. M. Loew, Boston, and A. B. Momand, circuit operators, acting in their pending $10,000,000 anti-trust suit against Paramount, moved to have a federal judge and jury trial in New York, instead of a hearing before a special federal court master. Judge Alfred Coxe, however, refused.

The taking of testimony started in suits against distributors that were instituted at Newark, N. J., by LeDirk Amusement Company, and at St. Louis, by the Abraham Lincoln Amusement Company, while in Omaha, Exhibitor Vern Brown's $424,500 action against distributors is due for a hearing on Friday at which the defendants are expected to answer the charges.

The St. Louis details start on page 45.

In Retrospect

Progress made by the Legion of Decency in improving the moral tone of motion pictures during the past year will be discussed in a report to be submitted to the bishops of the Catholic Church at their annual meeting in Washington next Tuesday and Wednesday.

The report will be presented on behalf of the Legion of Decency, organized two years ago, and while its details are not being made public it is expected the situation will be referred to as "under control" and it will commend the producers for the development of films of higher character during the past year.

While the Legion will report that the situation generally is now satisfactory, it is understood a recommendation will be made, nevertheless, that the organization be kept in existence as a guard against any future lowering of standards by producers.

The News in Pictures

PREMIERE LUNCHEON. Celebrating in Philadelphia the opening of United Artists' "The Melody Lingers On," Reliance production, at the Aldine there. Among those shown are Harry M. Goetz, president of Reliance; and Monroe W. Greenthal, UA advertising director.

CINEMACTOR. A word that does very well as a title for this study of Paul Muni, at Warner's among the gadgets of today's theatre craft. "Enemy of Man" is his new picture.

RETURN. Charles Boyer and his wife, Pat Paterson, as they arrived in New York from France. Boyer will resume roles in Walter Wanger productions for Paramount release following an absence of three months.

BRITAIN BOUND. At this point as far as Newark Airport. He is the Paramount star, Cary Grant, who has sailed for London to make a picture over there.

IN LEAD. On the distaff side of Warner's "Enemy of Man," the star of which is noted elsewhere on this page. She is Josephine Hutchinson, former protege of Eve LeGallienne.

ARRIVES FOR ROLE. Merle Oberon, Samuel Goldwyn star, as she arrived in New York from London, to leave shortly for the Coast to begin "The Children's Hour."

MASCULINE LEAD. As it were, since he—Jackie Searle—has been assigned the part opposite nine-year-old Jane Withers, the star, in "Gentle Julia," 20th Century-Fox picture.

FIRST LADY AT PREMIERE. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt arriving with a guest, Mrs. David Gray, at the National Theatre in Washington to attend the opening there of Warners' "Midsummer Night's Dream."

KNOWS HIS SHIPS. Does Rod LaRocque who is credited with construction of the model he is showing in his home workshop. Appropriately enough, Republic has cast him in " 'Frisco Waterfront."

NEW PLAYER. On the Universal roster is Priscilla Lawson (below), who will be seen in support of Jack Holt in "Captain Commanding."

ALL STARS. Including very grown up Victor McLaglen (left). McLaglen and Freddie Bartholomew co-star in "Professional Soldier" for 20th Century-Fox, while Jane Withers stars in the same company's "Paddy O'Day."

ARRANGE LONDON SHOWINGS. A. W. Jarratt, chief booker for Gaumont-British, as he met with Charles Chaplin in Hollywood to conclude a contract for presentation of the comedian's new United Artists picture, "Modern Times," at the Tivoli in the British capital. It opens in New York in December.

THEATRE MAN WINS PARLIAMENT SEAT. Herbert Wilton (shown here with his wife and a niece), manager of the Strand in Hamilton, Ont., who was victorious in the recent elections in Canada. Mr. Wilton, who is also mayor of Hamilton, ran for the national office as a Conservative.

U. S. PUSHES MUSIC SUIT TO EASE EXHIBITOR TAX

Department of Justice and the Broadcasters' Association Deny Government Plans to Drop Monopoly Action

Justice Department Silent on Offer of Publishers' Association to Open Books Before Trial Resumes on January 6

Exhibitors disturbed by statements from the organized music industry, as represented by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, that the Government has relented in its moves to regulate business and plans to drop the monopoly suit pending in the United States district court in New York, were assured this week by the Department of Justice that ASCAP and the Music Publishers' Protective Association would be prosecuted vigorously.

Definite denials came from the Department of Justice and the National Association of Broadcasters in Washington to set at rest reports that the Government was losing interest in the ASCAP suit because of fears the prosecution would fail and was attempting to interest the music societies in a consent decree.

To the contrary, the Government is more than ever determined to proceed with the suit in order to bring about relief from the large fees which the society has been exacting at the rate of about $1,000,000 a year for the performance of music in theatres, and especially is seeking a revision of the royalty fees—or music tax, as exhibitors know it—for the small exhibitor, it was said in Washington.

Official observers in Washington who have been following the case predicted that ASCAP would come forward with suggestions for a consent decree before the trial is over, seeking, by meeting the Government half-way, to forestall any serious effort to obtain enactment of legislation at the next session of Congress which might be far more serious than an admission that its royalty schedules in some instances have been unfair and an agreement to correct the inequities.

Impatient for Trial

Indications in Washington are that the Department of Justice is impatient for a trial, but cannot obtain time for it on the court docket until other cases are out of the way.

At the department it was declared that officials concerned with the case were working day and night in its preparation.

At the broadcasters' association it was asserted that, in conformity with the action taken at the annual membership meeting in July, every possible cooperation is being given the Department of Justice, which acted originally at the instance of the broadcasters, exhibitors and other music users.

The Association further has been informed in writing by the Department that there has been and will be no let-up in the intensity of its drive.

TWO BLOWS AIMED AT AMERICAN MUSIC

Decrees in two countries striking seriously at American music were made public this week in New York by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, on the basis of information received from foreign correspondents.

Germany has banned Negro jazz music as not conforming to Nazi concepts of Aryan culture. The order said that while it was not directed at any foreign country, Negro jazz music could only be considered an ethnological specimen in a museum and could have no place in present day Germany.

Brazil has decreed that one-half of all musical numbers played in that country must be the work of Brazilian composers, that the personnel of two-thirds of all orchestras must be Brazilian musicians, and, among other things, that with the exception of the official opera season, all opera conductors must be Brazilians. This order becomes effective November 10th.

Several factors, it was said, have combined to slow down the prosecution of the suit. One is the delay in getting a hearing, the suit having been postponed last summer and tentatively set for trial for November 4th. More recently, however, it was found that two other anti-trust suits are pending in Judge Henry W. Goddard's court and it was suggested that the ASCAP case be postponed until they are out of the way. The case is now set for hearing beginning January 6 and, so far as Justice Department officials know, it definitely will be brought up at that time.

Seek Acceptance of Stipulation

A second factor, it was explained, is the attempt of the Government to obtain acceptance by ASCAP of a stipulation as to facts, as a means of saving time and expense to both sides. Both the Department and the Society agreed in June that they would attempt to develop a stipulation during the summer. The department submitted a stipulation to Nathan Burkan, counsel for ASCAP, who submitted his objections to some of the items included and offered others which he thought should go in.

It was emphasized that while a stipulation might possibly become the basis of negotiations for a consent decree, it is not in itself a move toward such an agreement. Further, it was made plain, the Government does not initiate negotiations for a consent decree, as it is rumored to have done in this case.

A third factor appears to have been a misrepresentation of the department's views with respect to the signing of new contracts. This matter came to the attention of James M. Baldwin, Washington head of the National Association of Broadcasters, some time ago and he wrote the department, asking where it had authorized any statement to the effect that broadcasters should not undertake to negotiate contracts with the music society on terms better than those they now have.

A reply from the department flatly denied that it has or will authorize any statement to that effect.

As reported in New York, the Department was supposed to have told the broadcasters that if they could get new contracts with better terms they would be wise to sign up.

Contracts Expire December 31

Other reports, also believed to have originated in New York, were to the effect that the Association had advised members that the ASCAP situation will be made the subject of a letter, apparently urging them to sign up, and that many stations are signing ASCAP contracts. Both of these rumors were denied by Mr. Baldwin, who declared that the Association's information indicates that the Department has every intention of strongly pressing the case and that if member stations are signing contracts no information to that effect has been submitted to Washington headquarters.

Existing contracts with ASCAP expire December 31, and a majority of broadcasters have been holding off signing new five-year agreements pending the outcome of the suit.

Exhaustive inquiry in Washington failed to establish any basis for reports that Andrew Bennett, special assistant attorney general, has been taken off the case. On the contrary, it is declared that Mr. Bennett is devoting much of his attention to this particular matter, although it is suggested that the court proceedings may be conducted by another official who has a high record as a trial lawyer.

This, however, is no indication that Mr. Bennett's connection with the suit will be severed, since the preparation of material for a trial is at least as important as the conduct of the trial itself. Rather, it was indicated, the Department is teaming up its best men.

Much of the confidence voiced by those

WASHINGTON TO PRESS MUSIC TRIAL

speaking in behalf of the defendants is said to be based on the fact that the Department of Justice is not seeking dissolution of ASCAP and the inference that, because of this, the Government has little on which to base its case. This is not the fact, according to men who are in a position to speak.

The only reason the Government does not seek to dissolve the society is the belief that an organization of this nature can do much good for composers and authors. But the fees which the organization charges must be amended so as to give the "little fellow" a break, it is asserted. In all probability, it is admitted, under a reassignment of charges the organization might get in about as much revenue as it now obtains, but the bulk of it would be paid by those users of copyrighted music who can best bear the burden.

Department officials say they are fully conversant with the tremendous amount of propaganda being put out on behalf of the music society. Department rules, however, forbid any counter-attack or any discussion of pending cases. As a result, the music folk have had the field to themselves, but the Government is confident that the material submitted at the trial next year will adequately support its charges, was the word given out in official quarters.

Publishers Offer Their Books

Meanwhile the Department of Justice has not indicated that it will avail itself of the offer made by John G. Paine, chairman of the Music Publishers' Protective Association, to have its books and records thoroughly investigated before the trial resumes.

The thought back of this invitation was that the Government would find nothing to sustain its charges of combination in restraint of trade against the MPPA, and after a study of the music publishers' operations would dismiss the prosecution with respect to it. Mr. Paine informed the Department that he would even provide office space for the investigators and would give them "every cooperation." Before the start of the trial last summer, a Government agent investigated the Association's books but took out of them only such information as would support the Government's case, said Mr. Paine.

The Government charges that the music publishers' group operates in the same manner as ASCAP with respect to electrical transcriptions and synchronization for motion pictures. Denying the accusation of illegal restraint, Mr. Paine said this week that there is no price-fixing involved in the Association's operations, and that each copyright holder fixes the price for each single composition used, the MPPA merely acting as the clearing house and agent for its members.

Mr. Paine said he was willing to make a full disclosure to the Government regarding the music publishers' operations, and if the Government would accept the offer "it would see that there was no case."

Members of the Music Publishers' Protective Association took steps to obviate any further litigation being brought against them individually when they decided to change the status of their trade association from a voluntary to an incorporated group. The members now will not individually be liable for any judgments. At the same time, they decided to abandon the Association's fair practice code. Officers are to be elected about the middle of this month, and it is considered likely that Mr. Paine will continue as chairman, with Louis Bernstein as president. Mr. Bernstein also is vice-president of ASCAP.

Exhibitor interest in the Government's move to smash the hold of ASCAP on the performance of popular music continues in high pitch. From San Francisco comes word that Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, again urged exhibitors to cooperate with the radio stations and other amusement industries in obtaining a revision of present copyright laws, through passage of the Duffy bills, so that the ASCAP fee problem could be solved.

The Duffy bill, which is pending in the Senate, the various legislative moves against ASCAP in several states, revision of the publisher's classification system and other important matters came up at a semiannual meeting of the Society's members in New York last Thursday.

Threatened breakup of the society by internal dissension flared up when it was revealed that none of the music publishers controlled by film companies have as yet signed new contracts and that song writers may establish their own performing rights company. Gene Buck, ASCAP president, said the dissension was a graver threat than the Government suit. Benee Russell, writer, said that if the publishers fail to sign, the Songwriters' Protective Association would set up its own licensing society.

Since it would base distribution of income on frequency of performance, the recommended changes would be to the advantage of motion picture companies with music publishing subsidiaries, such as Warner Bros., MGM, and Paramount, because of the wide use made of film songs over the radio, by dance bands and other exploitation.

AMPA Tribute Paid to Eberhardt's Memory

A resolution memorializing Walter Eberhard, press representative for Electrical Research Products, Inc., who died last Sunday, was adopted by members of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at the organization's weekly meeting at Jack Dempsey's restaurant off Broadway. The meeting was dedicated to the one-time president of the association.

John C. Flinn, the only speaker at the gathering, recalled that he first had employed Mr. Eberhardt at Paramount.

Film Commission In Italy Extends Film Restriction

by VITTORIO MALPASSUTI
Rome Correspondent

The Council of Ministers, controlling body of the Italian industry, met recently in Rome and passed several new regulations dealing with imported pictures as well as with native product, it has been revealed.

The new regulations are as follows:

The prohibition to project in the kingdom foreign pictures dubbed abroad is hereby extended to films of a length of less than 1,000 meters.

The dubbing tax, hitherto established at 25,000 lires per dubbed picture, is now fixed in reason of 10 per cent on the entire amount of the quota due to the distributing companies. For films over 1,000 metres in length, the tax cannot be less, in any case, than 15,000 lire for each picture.

The producers of national films projected in public for the first time after the date of issue of this provision will have the right of exoneration of the aforesaid tax on five Italian dubbed foreign pictures up to the amount of 15,000 lires.

The importing companies which invest the sums for exclusive rights will have an allowance to the extent of 50 per cent of the dubbing tax in proportion to the amount invested.

Two-thirds of the proceeds of the dubbing tax will be to improve and increase Italian production.

The committee also raised the importation quota for October and November from 25 to 40 per cent, subject to change.

Western Pictures to Aid Independent Groups

Western Pictures Corporation in Hollywood, which finances the Harry Sherman Productions, will soon offer financial backing to a group of independent producers on a large scale, it is reported. Nicholas Ludington, Jr., is the Coast representative of Western Pictures and William L. Fiske is eastern representative. Mr. Ludington has opened offices at the Prudential Studios in Hollywood.

With J. Cheever Cowdin, president of Standard Capital, and Lawrence Fox, also a Standard executive, acting as silent partners in Western, it is said in Hollywood that there is planned a large development of the financing of a group of independent producers for major release.

Colonel Joy Signs New Contract

Colonial Jason Joy has signed a new long-term contract with Twentieth Century-Fox in Hollywood, where he has been in charge of public relations for the past three years.

Philadelphia Votes For Sunday Show; State Is Divided

The voters of Philadelphia have indicated that they want motion pictures on Sunday. Elsewhere in the state, with reports incomplete, indications were that the reaction of voters on Tuesday was about equally divided. Among the larger cities voting against Sunday films were: Harrisburg, York, Allentown, Sunbury and Uniontown. Voting in favor were: Warren, Meadville, Sinesville, Fort Marion, Fort Allegheny, Dubois, Cambridge Springs and Hawley. Voting in referenda on the question of Sunday films, occurred in 276 municipal subdivisions.

With 28 out of 50 wards reported in Philadelphia the result was approximately 118,000 for motion pictures on Sunday with 31,000 against. This overwhelming "yes" total gave clear indication that the fight waged there over a long period by motion picture interests, battling the vigorous opposition of church organizations in particular, had finally met with an unquestioned success.

The 276 municipal subdivisions, each of which decided for itself the issue in Tuesday's balloting, included one first class city, Philadelphia; one second class city, Pittsburgh; one second class "A" city, Scranton; 40 of the state's 44 third class cities; 204 boroughs and 29 townships. The municipalities are distributed through 57 of the state's 67 counties, and represent a total population of 5,850,000.

The question requiring a "yes" or "no" answer, as it appeared on the ballots, was: "Do you favor the conducting, staging, operating and exhibiting of motion pictures, regardless of whether an admission charge is made or incidental thereto or whether labor or business is necessary to conduct, stage, operate or exhibit the same after two o'clock post-meridian, on Sunday in the city (or borough or township) of—"

In each municipal subdivision voting, a majority vote decided the issue for that locality. A second referendum cannot be held before 1940 in any district that voted the question Tuesday. To get the question on the ballot in any district it was necessary to obtain a petition signed by at least five per cent of the number of persons who voted with the dominant party in the last preceding election, or through an order from the municipal authorities.

The law, authorizing the holding of referenda, was adopted in the last Legislature by a House controlled by the Democrats and a Senate controlled by the Republicans. The law includes a mandatory penalty of $50 and costs for violation in muncipalities where the old Sunday blue law was retained, and a fine of $100 for conducting any other form of amusement in connection with motion pictures on Sunday where the vote was for films.

Sunday Movies

THROUGH an emphatic expression of public opinion at the polls motion picture exhibitions on Sunday in Philadelphia are made legal.

The Philadelphia vote represents nothing in the way of a sensational development in liberalism. It is simply a wise and commonsense recognition of the need, especially in centers of large population, of wholesome entertainment for the public on every day of the week, including Sunday.

Motion pictures on Sunday in Philadelphia were opposed by various interests, some impelled by a blind fanaticism and some who joined the opposition mechanically without taking the time or trouble to think the question through. The charge that the exhibition of motion pictures on Sunday amounts to a commercialization of the Sabbath is quite without reason or judgment. Many of the forces which stubbornly fought the coming of pictures on Sunday were in reality seeking to defeat precisely the cause of public morality and welfare which they imagined they were serving.

In a great center such as Philadelphia the wholesome employment of leisure time by the many thousands who in this day are virtually without the personal resources necessary for self-entertainment becomes a serious problem. To imagine that by closing the theatres these many thousands are driven to an employment of the day in sanctified pursuits is absurd.

As a matter of fact it is only to the fanatical mind that there even appears to be a moral problem in Sunday movies. If attendance at any particular motion picture is wrong on Sunday, it is likewise wrong on every other day of the week. If the picture to be viewed is of a character rendering it unfit for exhibition on Sunday it is similarly unfit on every other day of the week.

But the problem of Sunday pictures in Philadelphia and in every other large center is not merely a negative one—one which is not detrimental to the public welfare. In the public interests motion pictures should be shown on Sunday because human ingenuity has not yet developed any form of entertainment which is as capable of attracting and holding the attention of vast numbers of the public. And when the pictures are of right moral character they afford the greatly needed relaxation and diversion which the public of a great city requires and at the same time they divert the public from the generally recognized evils of idleness and worse.

The Goldwyn Act

SOMETHING more than a year ago when the industry found itself confronted with an enormous weight of public protest over the moral character of some of the motion pictures, and when it was exceedingly busy in putting its house in order—meanwhile seeking to allay undue apprehension in the minds of some of those who wondered how it was all going to come out—Mr. Samuel Goldwyn contributed his dependable quota of trouble by proclaiming that while he had purchased the very objectionable story, "Barbary Coast," he intended to hold it up until the storm blew over.

When the picture was eventually made, a new story was used and there remained with Mr. Goldwyn only the original title for his purchase price. Goldwyn-like, the producer felt he was being made the victim of an injustice when his picture "Barbary Coast" was gone over with a finetooth comb by those persons whom he had put on notice about his intentions of holding up production of the original "Barbary Coast" story. The incident created complications and doubtlessly has kept many persons out of the theatres playing the Goldwyn picture.

Mr. Goldwyn probably had no serious intention of producing the original story at any time and the picture in question was probably made just about as soon as it was possible for him to get to it, irrespective of his public statement. But the suspicion lingers that while he did not intend producing the original story still he was not averse to getting whatever attention for his picture might be induced by the reputation of the original story.

Now, it is disclosed quite publicly that Mr. Goldwyn has purchased the New York play, "The Children's Hour," and that he intends making a picture of it. Again he probably has no serious intention of trying to put into a picture the underlying theme in the play, "The Children's Hour." But unless all indications and the record fail we may now await a repetition of the Goldwyn act. He will probably have seriously in his mind an acceptable story motivated by the subject of gossip—gossip about anything other than that in the New York play. He will of course want to use the original title, getting what he can in attention out of it. He will want decent pictures—a title associated with an impossible subject for motion pictures and a picture which is in itself unobjectionable.

And when some persons are unintelligent enough to suspect that he is not playing the game he will feel that a grave injustice is being done to him and to his picture.

Half-Done Job

THERE is one very important factor in the question of better screen entertainment which many of the more clamorous protagonists of wholesome films lose sight of. Various of these groups seem to feel that as spokesmen for sectors of public opinion their sole function and opportunity is to rise up noisily in high indignation when a picture comes along that does not exactly suit their ideas of what it should be. Instead of being constructive propagandists they resign themselves to the activities of a police patrol.

For any persons of reasonable intelligence it should not be difficult to understand that, irrespective of how great may be the industry's determination and how great the anxiety for better pictures on the part of educators and the clergy, high standards are not going to be possible unless there is reasonable public support at the box office. Hence, when there is criticism of any deflection from right standards only a part and probably the lesser part of the real work is being done. The other part—and a vitally important function—is to encourage the good pictures both for the purpose of enabling the industry to make them and also for the purpose of assisting the public to cultivate and to hold an appreciation of the right kind of entertainment.

Recently a person representing an important group which is committed to the goal of better pictures, who doubtlessly considers himself a real propagandist in the cause, was invited to assist in promoting public interest in "The Last Days of Pompeii." His reaction seemed to be that he was being called upon to do the producer a favor, losing sight of the fact that whatever incidental benefit might accrue to the producer a very real service would be performed in behalf of the cause which he represents.

When protagonists of better pictures, especially when they undertake to tell what they want to see produced for youth, recite their formula for better pictures it comes close to what is offered in "Pompeii"—a tactfully and shrewdly handled story and grand spectacle, all of historical material which is made known to the child in the classroom.

It might be argued that if these spokesmen for public opinion have a right to demand certain standards in motion picture entertainment, then the industry has the right to demand their support for subjects that comply with these standards. But as a practical matter this is not necessary. It is necessary only that these spokesmen be impressed with the fact that failure to promote in all reasonable ways the best in pictures is leaving their job less than half done.

Republic Picks Executives And Department Heads

Executive and department heads of the newly organized Republic Studios in Hollywood have been announced by Trem Carr, vice-president of Republic Pictures Corporation, and the personnel list includes Al Levy as general manager of production, Herman Schlom, assistant production manager; H. K. Bachelder, business manager for westerns; Sol Siegel, business manager for serials; E. R. Hickson, technical director; Leonard Fields, assistant to Nat Levine; Fred Steele, comptroller; Wallace MacDonald, story editor, and Gordon Molson, casting director.

Supervisors are: I. E. Chadwick, Colbert Clark, Ken Goldsmith, M. H. Hoffman, Paul Malvern, Barney Sarecky, Armand Schaefer, Robert E. Welsh and Victor Zobel.

Other department heads are Harry Grey, music director; Joseph Lewis, chief film editor; Joseph Walters, head of still department; Lindsley Parsons, studio publicity director, and Bernard Bernbaum, in charge of studio exploitation, advertising and editor of the Republic house organ, The Cooperator.

Mr. Levine, who is head of the production activities, has also assigned 40 writers to work on 29 features on the program.

Edward A. Golden, who has just closed with Butterfield Theatres, Inc., operating in Michigan, the Pitts Circuit in Virginia and the Fishman circuit in New Haven, for his company's product, is leaving St. Louis, where he has been attending the trial of the Government's anti-trust action against Warner, Paramount and RKO, to visit Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Washington and Philadelphia, returning to New York next week.

Harrison New Staff Member

Robert Harrison, formerly with Charles H. Tobias, Inc., has joined the advertising staff of Quigley Publications and has been assigned to Better Theatres.

Two Exhibition Leaders in Field

With presidents of Allied and MPTOA national organizations touring the field to acquaint members with new policies, six of their state affiliates were active this week on problems affecting their own local situations, these units including Allied Theatres of Michigan, Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana, Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California, Allied Theatres of New Jersey, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania and the Independent Theatre Owners of Northern California.

In addition, exhibitor organization interest was turned to an intimation that the national MPTOA, for the first time in years, would eliminate its annual convention in 1936, in favor of local discussions.

Ed Kuykendall was winding up a series of discussions with MPTOA state organizations, acquainting them with his theories regarding the establishment of exhibitor-distributor arbitration systems in each key city.

Sidney E. Samuelson, Allied's president, was explaining to state affiliates the purposes for creating an independent Allied producing company, visiting the convention of the Western MPTO, at Pittsburgh, and arranging to discuss the idea with Allied Theatres of Michigan, at its convention, in Detroit, November 12th and 13th. Columbus will follow, this occasion being the Ohio Independent Theatre Owners' convention, on November 19th and 20th.

MPTOA on 1937 Convention Plans

If and when the MPTOA decides to forego a national convention next year, all effort will be concentrated on the 1937 meeting, invitations for which have already been extended the organization by San Francisco, Chicago, White Sulphur Springs and Pinehurst, N. C.

Allied of Michigan will delve into block booking at its November 12th convention, and expects some 400 members of women's clubs and parent-teacher associations, to participate.

The convention last week of the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana witnessed the re-election of R. R. Bair as president, and the election of the following: Maurice Rubin, northern vice-president; A. C. Zaring, central vice-president; Oscar Fine, southern vice-president; Frank Sanders, treasurer; Helen B. Keeler, secretary, and Charles R. Metzger, attorney.

The elimination of premium games in exhibition was a highlight discussion of the southern California exhibitors' meeting, held over the weekend at Los Angeles, and attended by some 65 owners.

Davis Elected at Pittsburgh

William Davis, of Pittsburgh, was elected president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania at its convention in Pittsburgh last week. Other officers named were: William Lispie, vice-president; Fred Herrington, secretary, and Gellman Duquesne, treasurer. Abram F. Myers, national Allied chairman, and Mr. Samuelson were guest speakers.

A united front of theatre owners, exhibitor organizations and representatives of auxiliary industries to protect the industry from legislative attacks was urged by Mr. Kuykendall at the banquet last week of the Northern California Independent Theatre Owners, climaxing a convention of 300 members, at the William Taylor hotel in San Francisco.

Mr. Kuykendall characterized the Pettengill anti-block booking bill in Congress as "a wedge toward government regulation of the theatre industry," and called for a national committee to coordinate efforts throughout the country.

Westward Bound Editor Finds Double-Billing Even on Ferry

Giovanni Blames Auto Radios; First-Runs Doing Well on the Better Product

By TERRY RAMSAYE

Terry Ramsaye has closed his desk on Broadway and has gone out to visit America. As he rambles across the country, en route to a close-up inspection of Hollywood, he will contribute to these pages observations of what is going on in and about the theatres. The first article in the series appears herewith.

Terre Haute, Indiana

WESTWARD bound out of the Silvermine valley of Connecticut, bright and fair of a Sunday morning, with a pause at Mulberry Ledge to inspect Colvin Brown's new lily pool and the militant pupful progeny of Lucky-the-wirehair, another pause for a glimpse of Maurice McKenzie's chrysanthemums at Lockwood's Corners and thence on to the Hudson for a plunge into all that big America that is west of Broadway.

ABOARD a rusty old packet they call the Tarrytown-Nyack ferry, the problems and progress ot the amusement industry at once become apparent in the concerns of Mr. Giovanni Bagicilupe, vendor of sweet music rendered on a piano-accordion.

Giovanni makes a living of sorts, yes, but those damn "radio de automobila" they cut in on the passengers' attention and the dimes are harder to get.

The music, it seems, she is not enough. Giovanni has had to add a dash of acrobatic humor to his performance, and a touch of dancing—double billing, you might say—to keep going. Even so, things are so tough he is considering taking up another career, and then the Tarrytown-Nyack voyagers will be left to machine-made art.

Giovanni's problems are world problems, but happily he does not know it. He is a victim of technological unemployment, the vacuum tube and Ben Bernie.

SUNDAY Jersey is working—alive with Indian summer holiday drivers, apparently most of them out to verify, if possible, the current motor car makers' claims about acceleration and speed. In the main the motors seem to make good, but happily the brakes are even better.

Up hill and down dale, we come presently to Schooley's Mountain, to be remembered for the moment as that remote refuge where the late and lamented J. D. Williams spent his last winter of discontented ambition.

This is old William Penn territory and the coloration of Pennsylvania Dutch lies over the landscape as conspicuous as the autumn reds. Schooley's Mountain seems to be populated most by the Swackhammer family. "As thick as Swackhammers on Schooley's Mountain" would do for a line in somebody's act.

Anyway, this lush countryside makes one feel that it would be better to be a Swackhammer on Schooley's Mountain than a lamp post on Broadway. Out here if you're a Swackhammer you're somebody—otherwise not.

THE rich and peaceful countryside of Pennsylvania, orderly farms with great stone houses and barns, bright with whitewash and paint against the greens and browns of well kept fields, rolls past.

The country folk are luxuriating in the delights of hog killing time, with new made headcheese, scrapple redolent with Dutch spicing, sausage, the new kraut, the first batch of mincement. Meanwhile the curse of imitation is upon the taverns, hostelries and restaurants that bid for the wayfarer's patronage with canned caviar, homesick osyters and travel-worn lobsters, all in imitation of the metropolitan hotels' imitations of Continental menus. This country just now needs a new declaration of independence, a reassertion of indigenous cuisine—no, not cuisine, just local produce presented in the manner of the soil from which it is produced.

Double bills, if one may judge by fleeting glimpses of lobbies, seem settled standard policy—standard double billing, a good one and another one not so good.

Showmen hereabouts with stage facilities are all agog over Major Bowes' attraction, anxious to book it and screaming aloud the while that his booking office is operated by the toughest, etc., that it has been their pleasure to exchange telegrams with. It seems that the Major is asking them one and all five hundred dollars a day and a fifty-fifty split, one day or a week, and no concessions, whatsoever, ever. The Western Union's famous Communications Code of Decency is being strained to the limit.

UP-GRADE through the Cumberlands and Maryland fried chicken. At every turn one discovers that "Mutiny on the Bounty" is coming this way. M-G-M has posted the paper, giving the local showmen permission to snipe it with their playdates. The sniping has been most enthusiastic.

This is the old National Pike, an original piece of boondoggling by the late Henry Clay, better known now as a cigar than a statesman. If one may credit the wayside traditions repeated by the greybeards who loaf about the old toll house museums, Mr. Clay was of the earth earthy.

Speaking of boondoggling and road making—with engineers running around to find geographical pigeonholes for the special and favored classification of "farm-to-market" highways, brings to mind the fitness of suggesting a pike in Pennsylvania from Pottsville to Chamberburg, and another from the town of Pancake, Ohio, to the village of Coffee Pot, Ind. If you are in one place you are sure to want to be in the other.

OUT here the first-runs are doing well on the better product, surviving on the mediocre. Meanwhile the box office curves of the second and third-runs almost precisely follows the waves of disbursement of relief and employment relief work funds.

Those who have quarters seem to have them most of the time, but the people with dimes have them only as the largess of the New Deal is dealt out to them. When they have a dime they go to a show, which is possibly one of the reasons that they never get a quarter.

Ahead is the big broad level land of the Hoosiers, the Indiana of corn literature and politics.

COMMUNISTS CHARGE FILM THEFT; U.S.S.R. TO BUY ALL EQUIPMENT HERE

Communists at Kenosha Charge Theft of Print, Attack by Legion Officer; Demand Policewoman Censor Resign

Opposition to the showing of Soviet propaganda films in the United States flared into open warfare in Kenosha, Wis., last week when Communists and local patriotic and civic forces came to grips, with the aftermath that Communist sponsors of an engagement of "Chapayev," Russian film, are demanding prosecution of well known Kenoshans for "stealing" the print.

This was the first instance of such action in the widespread opposition by patriotic groups to the dissemination of Soviet propaganda in this country, and follows closely on the ban of "The Youth of Maxim" by police and court order in Detroit.

"Chapayev" was the first Soviet film advertised for general exhibition in Kenosha, under auspices of the Communists, who number about 150 in a city of 50,000 population. The scheduled showing was in charge of J. C. Blair, Communist leader, who was to open a two-day run at the Cameo, small neighborhood house, and had sold about 200 tickets in advance at 25 cents admission.

Legion Asks Advance Screening

At the request of representative members of the American Legion post, Policewoman Beulah McNeil, who acts as the local film censor, asked for a screening for a committee. Mr. Blair consented, and Policewoman McNeil named Mrs. George Cook, the Parent-Teacher reviewer, and the district attorney, John P. McEvoy, as the others interested in the preview. However, a delegation of about 30, including those mentioned, were on hand at the scheduled time.

Mr. Blair then asked the district attorney if it was compulsory to hold the screening under the law. Mr. McEvoy replied there was no law compelling the special showing, whereupon Mr. Blair called it off. After some argument between the opposing committees, the district attorney left the theatre.

Mr. Blair and other members of his committee then discovered that the print of the film was missing, and he rushed out and accused several members of the American Legion delegation, who were still outside the theatre, of appropriating the print. Mr. Blair charged that one of them, whom he named as John D. Alexander, a national guard colonel, seized a member of the Reds' group and shook him, then all left. The film never was recovered.

Communists Demand Warrants

Later a committee of Communists appeared at the office of District Attorney McEvoy and demanded two warrants, one charging Colonel Alexander with assault, and the other for the Rev. Paul Chropuvka, former national chaplain of the Forty and Eight, social organization affiliated with the Legion, and a Lutheran church minister, whom they accused of "stealing" the film.

When, however, the district attorney called in the Reverend Chropuvka and six others for questioning, Mr. Blair was unable to identify any one of them as having taken the print. He said "there must have been some mistake." Whereupon the former national chaplain threatened his Communist accusers with prosecution for malicious libel, and added that if his congregation heard he was involved in anything like this he might be unfrocked. The district attorney told Mr. Blair and his committee to return that afternoon as at the moment he was questioning witnesses in a murder trial. The men never returned for any warrants, Mr. McEvoy said.

Demand Policewoman Resign

The same committee of Reds headed by Mr. Blair appeared before the city council at the next meeting, demanding that the council ask the resignation of the policewoman. The council referred the committee to the police and fire commission, with no recommendation.

Organized labor in Kenosha, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, condemned the local Communist group for its propaganda activities, and Felix Olkives, president of the Kenosha Trades and Labor Council, the central labor group, said his organization would have nothing to do with them.

The Reds, however, are seeking to make an issue of "Fascism" out of the incident, and in New York, Vladimir I. Verlinsky, president of Amkino, which is distributing "Chapayev" nationally in this country, commented, "Such action is unheard of; I thought such a thing could happen only in Germany."

The print of "Chapayev" was obtained from Sam Handelsman, Chicago distributor. Mr. Handelsman was in New York last weekend conferring with Mr. Verlinsky regarding the missing print.

Mr. Verlinsky said that while the print of "The Youth of Maxim," confiscated by the police censor in Detroit, had not as yet been returned, he believed it would be.

Shown at Revolution Observance

That the propaganda films of the Soviets are linked directly with the Reds' subversive activity in the United States was demonstrated when "Patriots," "Spies" and other pictures from the Soviet studios were being shown late this week as part of the celebration commemorating the eighteenth anniversary of the Russian revolution, held in several large cities under auspices of the Communist Party of America.

This coincided with a nationwide student "peace strike" movement on November 8th, promoted by college faculty and student elements which have been protesting certain films to which they object as anti-Communist, pro-war and anti-labor. The agitation against American-made films is scheduled for discussion at the Third Congress of the American League Against War and Fascism to be held in Cleveland January 3 to 5. The League has been acting as the spearhead in the war declared by Communists and pacifists on most of the news reels and a number of feature films.

Film production in the Soviet Union and England is to be discussed by Miss Evelyn Gerstein, New York film editor for the Boston Evening Transcript, at the Abundance House, New York, Friday night. The lecture is sponsored by the New Film Alliance, Inc.

Her talk is to be accompanied by the initial public screening of several reels of film taken in the Soviet Union by William Halsted, mainly concerned with the motion picture and theatre industries there.

Miss Gerstein recently returned from abroad where she made a study of production conditions. While in Moscow she spoke on films in a nationwide broadcast.

$100,000 Initial Order for Printing and Laboratory Apparatus, Cameras and Projectors Placed; 30 to 60 Day Payment

Convinced that American motion picture equipment is superior to any other, the Russian film industry, comprising 19 studios, has decided to purchase all such equipment in this country hereafter, and initial orders totaling more than $100,000 already have been placed and will be shipped shortly to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

These disclosures were made by Vladimir I. Verlinsky, president of Amkino, on arrival in Hollywood late this week to complete final details of the shipments. While there he will also extend invitations to laboratory and sound technicians on behalf of the Russian government for work in the Soviet union.

Chiefly Laboratory Equipment

While in the past the Soviet film trust purchased the bulk of its equipment in Europe, chiefly in Germany and, more importantly and recently, in France, the trip made here last summer by officials of the Soviet central film office, headed by Boris Z. Shumiatsky, influenced them to make all future purchases in this country, said Mr. Verlinsky.

The order consists chiefly of equipment for printing and other laboratory work, with the aim of improving methods and stepping up the output of the Russian laboratories, Mr. Verlinsky said, pointing out that the studios there lead in the number of prints turned out. He said that the Soviet studios made 900 positive prints on "Peasants," for distribution in that country alone, and that a commensurate number of prints has been placed in circulation on other recent films.

Payment in 30 to 60 Days

The equipment purchased includes Moviolas for print editing, rear projection machines supplied by Trans-Lux, Bell and Howell 16 mm. and 35 mm. cameras and projectors, and other special laboratory equipment. Mr. Verlinsky said the Russian government is seeking no credit and the terms approximate cash, payment being made in 30 to 60 days.

While Amkino, the distributing agency in this country, is entirely independent of the Soviets, Mr. Verlinsky said, at the same time he acts as the Russian film trust's purchasing agent here, representing Soyuskino Export of Moscow and being compensated on the basis of a percentage of the orders placed.

Mr. Verlinsky said the number of technicians to be invited to the Soviet studios is as yet indefinite. He expected to remain in Hollywood a week.

NEW COMPANY GETS OPTION TO BUY UNIVERSAL PICTURES FOR $5,500,000

Standard Capital Co. and Group Headed by Charles R. Rogers Obtain Three Months' Option in Return for $750,000 Loan Standard Capital Company, a New York investment company, and a group headed by Charles R. Rogers, producer, have acquired a three-months option to purchase Universal Pictures for $5,500,000, subject to outstanding indebtedness, in return for a loan to the corporation of $750,000.

The arrangement, completed in Hollywood last Friday, provides that if the option is exercised, a down payment of $1,500,000 in cash will be made, the remaining $4,000,000 to be payable in annual installments of $500,000 over a period of eight years. It is understood the prospective purchasers have agreed to pay off the outstanding debts, which are close to $2,000,000, the largest of which is a $1,000,000 mortgage held by Consolidated Film Laboratories on Universal studio property.

An integral part of the new financing is a new company, Standard Productions, Inc., headed by Mr. Rogers, which will make some forthcoming product for Universal.

Cowdin Enters Film Field

The official announcement in Hollywood over the weekend said merely that the two groups had made a deal to finance Universal's current production program, and added that "further developments in connection with the future policy of the company will be announced at an early date."

The option signalizes the entrance of J. Cheever Cowdin, president of Standard, in the motion picture field. The company was formed in Delaware January 15, this year, and the three voting trustees are George N. Armsby, Mr. Cowdin and Lawrence W. Fox, Jr., the last-named of Los Angeles. Capitalization was placed at $1,600,000. The company opened offices last summer at 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York, and announced it was prepared to finance motion picture producers.

With financing obtained, Universal immediately proceeded to fix budgets on forthcoming pictures and prepared to start active production. In the group are "Sutter's Gold," "Showboat" and "Spinster's Dinner."

Rumors of impending mergers or of a sale of Universal to various companies and individuals had been bandied about for weeks.

First Preferred Unchanged

The option is to purchase the majority holdings of the common stock, but the first preferred will remain unchanged, it is understood. The stock is closely held by a few individuals and is controlled by Carl Laemmle, Sr., who reported holdings to the Securities and Exchange Commission last February as follows: 1,115 shares of first preferred; 15,702 shares of second preferred; 7,016 common shares, 58,692 voting trust certificates and 120,126 voting first certificates of common stock, as of November 30, 1934.

The new groups would seek to retain Mr. Laemmle as chairman of the board, should he choose to accept.

Mr. Rogers has two pictures to make for Paramount before his contract expires, and it is reported he is seeking a release from that commitment.

Universal Productions Chartered

Universal Productions, Inc., a wholly-controlled subsidiary of Universal Pictures Corporation, was chartered last Thursday in Delaware with 100 shares of no-par capital stock. Mr. Rogers will be the producing head of all pictures made by the new company.

It was emphasized in high quarters that competent Universal employees who have "delivered" will not in any way be affected by the new arrangement.

Mr. Armsby and Mr. Cowdin were formerly chairman and vice-president, respectively, of Bancamerica-Blair Corporation. Mr. Cowdin formerly was closely associated with E. A. Pierce and Company of 40 Wall street, New York, and is a director in a number of aeronautical corporations.

Mr. Armsby, also of 40 Wall street, is a director of 27 corporations, including those in which Mr. Cowdin is listed as a director. Mr. Armsby also is a member of the board of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and of the Capitol Theatre Corporation.

What effect Standard's entrance into Universal will have on its other motion picture interests remains to be decided. Word comes from Hollywood that Mr. Cowdin and Mr. Fox are silent partners in Western Pictures Corporation, which finances Harry Sherman Productions, releasing through Paramount, and that Western is planning a large development of independent producers with a major release.

Organization Intact

Willard McKay, Universal attorney, said that pending exercise of the option, Standard will not be represented in Universal personnel, and the New York organization is expected to remain intact under administration of R. H. Cochrane.

Denying reports that the option already had been exercised, Mr. McKay said on Wednesday that it will be a month or more before Standard completes its examination of Universal's books and that no provision as yet has been made for Mr. Rogers to start activity on the Universal lot. The terms and the option provide that before it can be exercised a substantial amount must be deposited with Mr. Laemmle and that notice must be filed directly with Mr. McKay.

Mr. McKay, who figured in the Hollywood conference, returned to New York on Wednesday, when Mr. Cowdin also returned.

James R. Grainger, Universal general sales manager, returned early this week from a four-months' trip in which he covered most of the company's exchanges, besides a week's stay at the studio.

J. Cheever Cowdin, President of Standard, and Geo. N. Armsby, Trustee, Formerly Bancamerica-Blair Executives

"Throughout the country I found conditions more encouraging than on my last trip," he said. "The better feeling and the encouraging outlook are reflected in Universal sales, which are several hundred contracts ahead of last year at the same time."

Universal's sales progress is indicated in the fact that 7,600 exhibitor contracts have been signed to date.

Chicago Circuits Extending "Screeno" to Other Houses

"Screeno" as a box office stimulant at the Balaban and Katz theatres evidently continues to hold well, resulting in the circuit extending the practice to other theatres in Chicago and to its affiliated Publix Great States Theatres, contrary to a Chicago dispatch, appearing in the HERALD on November 2nd, in which it was reported that B & K's experience with the device might cause the circuit to abandon the idea.

Too, Chicago's Essaness Circuit has altered its contracts with Screeno Amusements, franchise holders in that city, whereby the game, weekly heretofore at the Sheridan, Buckingham and Embassy, will be extended from two to four nights a week.

Celebrity Announces New Feature Series

Celebrity Productions, Inc., has announced that in addition to the present series of "Powers ComiColor Cartoons" which it releases, in the future it will also distribute a group of features on the independent market. These will be known as "Celebrity Productions" and the first two, to be released shortly are "Kiss Me Goodbye" and "For Love of You."

PARAMOUNT PARTNERS CONTINUE OPERATION

Trendle and Hoblitzelle Contracts Determined; Trustees Write Final Receiver Data

Determination of the basis for continuing arrangements with important theatre operating partners was made this week by Paramount's corporate officers in New York, in the cases of George Trendle, A. H. Blank and Karl Hoblitzelle, and involving several dozen theatres. Mr. Blank's contract was extended to December 1 and the new deal with Mr. Trendle is for 18 months, with renewal options.

And as Adolph Zukor, Charles D. Hilles, Eugene Leake and Charles Richardson set out to write, on court order, their final report as trustees and receivers, the management itself was planning to transport all home office sales executives and the 11 district field managers to Los Angeles next month to take up problems of the season to date and policies that are to be followed.

There were a few unimportant arguments in court over claims under the reorganization.

Patterson Leaves Trendle

At the request of George W. Trendle, president of United Detroit Theatres Corporation, which Mr. Trendle conducts as a Paramount operating partner, Willard C. Patterson was brought into the operation two years ago during the period of reorganization. This reorganization now being completed, the operation will be handled in the future exclusively by Mr. Trendle. Mr. Patterson, at his request, has been granted a three months' vacation and at its expiration he is to be reassigned by Paramount, with which Mr. Patterson holds a contract that still has some time to go.

Hoblitzelle, Blank Continue

At the same time agreements were reached to continue Karl Hoblitzelle and A. H. Blank as Paramount theatre operating partners, Mr. Hoblitzelle in Texas and the Southwest, and Mr. Blank in western Illinois and Iowa. Mr. Blank will visit Paramount's New York offices next week for the negotiations. Mr. Hoblitzelle is already in Manhattan.

There still are some minor contractual details to be handled in the three cases before complete arrangements will be made known. They are the last operating contracts to expire at this time, and have been in force under a 30-day extension. The Wilby-Kincey and Lucas and Jenkins partnership contracts had been renewed to July 1, 1936, while the Hamm and Charles arrangement in Minnesota was relinquished.

Court Orders Receivers' Report

In ordering the final report of their activities in connection with and subsequent to Paramount's reorganization, Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe, in New York, limited the expenses for the preparation by the receivers of the accountings to $5,000 and indicated that he excepts from writing reports on the undisposed of claims and causes of action expressly reserved to Mr. Hilles and Mr. Leake for further action.

In the matter of disputed claims, Judge Coxe ended the move of Jacob J. Lesser to obtain a reargument on his claim for $75,000 in connection with his work on the reorganization. Judge Coxe previously had disallowed Mr. Lesser's claim in entirety and this week refused to grant the requested rehearing.

An agreement between Paramount and Joseph H. Cooper, theatre operating partner in the southwest, which reduces Mr. Cooper's claim of $79,891 which was filed against Paramount during the company's bankruptcy proceedings, to $69,000 and allows the claim for that amount has been approved by Federal Judge Coxe.

Zukor Gets Appeal On His Income Tax

Deficiency taxes amounting to $207,580, and assessed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in Washington, against the 1931 income of Adolph Zukor were disposed of late last week by the United States Board of Tax Appeals in a decision holding that the compensation in addition to Mr. Zukor's salary from Paramount Publix for 1929 was not turned over to him until 1932 and therefore should not be taxed in his 1931 account.

Under his contract with Paramount, the board found, Mr. Zukor was to receive $2,500 a week and seven and one-half per cent of the net earnings of the corporation. The salary item, however, was not involved in the controversy. The contract also provided that the additional compensation was to be held by the trustees "until December 31, two years subsequent to the expiration of such calendar year."

The practice, however, was not to turn the compensation over to Mr. Zukor until after the end of the second succeeding year.

Mr. Zukor's compensation, addition to his salary, consisted for 1928 of $7.73 in cash and 4,597 shares of stock with a fair market value on Dec. 31, 1928, of $52.726 per share, but on January 2, 1931, when it was turned over to him, of but $39.50 per share. The total of $181,589.23 was included in the 1931 return.

For 1929, Mr. Zukor received $28,940 in cash and 14,000 shares of stock valued in April, 1930, at $52 per share, but on Jan. 6, 1932, at but $7. The stock and cash turned over to the trustee in 1930 totaled $728,000 but amounted to only $126,940 in 1932. It was this latter amount which was held by the board not to have been received until 1932 and so not taxable in the return of the previous year.

Exhibitors Lose "Top Hat" Fight

RKO won an important decision, first of its kind in the controversy, in common pleas court of Cuyahoga County, Ohio, last week, when Judge Lee C. Skeel denied to exhibitors in four separate suits, their petitions to demand delivery of "Top Hat" under the terms of their 1934-1935 RKO contracts. Jerome Friedlander, counsel for the independents, indicated there will be no appeal.

Judge Skeel dismissed the petitions upon the determination that the subject matter was not included within the time designated by the contracts and entered final judgment in behalf of RKO on the merits of the case after full trial lasting two and a half days.

"Top Hat," in the opinion of Judge Skeel, is a 1935-36 feature picture by reason of its production number and also its national release date, it having previously been agreed that the motion picture season opens officially on September 1st. "Top Hat" was released September 6th.

Plaintiffs seeking delivery of the picture on last year's contract were the Broadvue, Cedar Lee, Doan and Ridge, all of Cleveland. Each type of '34-'35 contract was represented by the plaintiffs, so that the decision covers conditions contained in all types of RKO contracts for the 1934-35 season.

Dismissal of the Ridge theatre petition was ordered at the close of the plaintiff's case upon the theory that its owner, Herman Smith, had contracted for the entire RKO 1934-35 product without naming stars or titles.

The Cedar Lee contract involved a split first subsequent run contract, definitely excluding "Roberta." The Doan theatre involved also a first subsequent run split contract with other stipulations regarding "Roberta." The Broadvue had a second run subsequent run split contract. The Ridge had a 100 per cent product deal.

It was the contention of the exhibitors that their contracts included an Astaire-Rogers feature picture to follow "The Gay Divorcee," designated on their contracts as "Number Two Astaire-Rogers"—"Radio City Revels." This picture was not produced. However, "Top Hat" was produced. It was the claim of the plaintiffs that although there was a change of story, they were entitled to the "Number Two Astaire-Rogers" picture regardless of story or previously announced title.

Confining the case to discussion of contracts, Judge Skeel ruled that "Top Hat" is a '35-'36 feature picture and therefore is in no way affected by any of the terms of the '34-'35 contract.

RKO was represented by Thomas Kirby and G. H. P. Lacey of Squire, Sanders and Dempsey, Cleveland, and by William S. Savage of the RKO legal staff.

Cleveland exhibitors were represented by Mr. Friedlander, Ernest Schwartz and Isaac Koperlik, of Cleveland.

Sonotone Shows Net Profit

Reports of the Sonotone Corporation and of the Sonotone Credit Corporation for eight months ending August 31, indicate a net profit of $70,000 after depreciation, federal taxes and other charges. The net sales totaled $1,109,992.

EQUITY PROTESTS WPA'S THEATRE PROJECTS AS DIRECT COMPETITION

Association Endorses Tryouts in New York Area But Not in Manhattan; Producers' Director Sees Exhibitors Affected

Chicago Exhibitors Prepare to Protect Their Investments; 25 to 50 Cents To Be the Chief Admission Prices Throughout

The Government's Works Progress Administration theatre projects will be in direct competition with established theatres, Actors Equity Association declared this week. The Association, while endorsing the plan for a tryout of potentially commercial plays in the New York region, specified that none of these must be in Manhattan, where they would compete with Broadway legitimate houses.

The scale of 25 cents to $1 top set by Elmer Rice, regional director of the theatre project, with the tariff as low as 15 cents for some of the experimental plays, was seen by the legitimate managers, however, as offering more serious opposition to Broadway's motion picture theatres.

Dr. Henry Moskowitz, executive director of the League of New York Theatres, the manager-producer group, while emphasizing that private producers were vigorously opposed to anything smacking of Governmental competition, believed the plan to charge admissions would cause little trouble for the legitimate theatre.

"It will more nearly compete with the motion picture theatres," he said.

Chicago Exhibitors on Guard

In Chicago, although no projects have been definitely announced by the WPA, film theatre executives are conferring to safeguard their investments. Their understanding is that the shows, or many of them, will be free. Jack Miller, head of the Chicago Exhibitors Association, is one of those active in behalf of exhibitors against the expected competition.

Both Equity and the American Federation of Actors, the vaudeville performers' union, have approved the proposed admission scale for New York, with the understanding that special arrangements be made for the unemployed and no charge at Civilian Conservation Corps camps. For school children the prices may be 10 to 25 cents.

25 to 50 Cents General

The general policy throughout the country, it was reported, will be to sell the greatest number of seats for 25 and 50 cents.

The Administration, with $10,000,000 at its disposal for theatre relief projects, thus at one stroke becomes the largest producer in history as well as the most formidable competitor to theatres.

Directors hope to ring up the curtain on their first productions by December 1 in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles, and it is expected that 5,000 will be employed in those three areas alone, 10,000 nationally.

Film producers see one possible benefit in the tryout theatre, saving them from large investments in determining a play's screen possibilities.

Whether members of Equity will support the project as endorsed by the Equity Council will be learned November 25th at a canvass meeting.

The Council, in giving its sanction, was guided by these suggestions of Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, federal theatre director: Tryout units are to be limited to three, only one in Manhattan; not more than 10 per cent of the casts are to be paid by the managers; tryout periods are to be limited to three weeks; control of the project, as all other units, is to be vested in a representative of the federal theatre director, and admissions are to be taken in through a bonded representative of the Federal Treasury.

GERMANY HAS OWN THEATRICAL PROJECT

Germany, too, appears to have its WPA theatrical project.

Hans Hinkel, the Nazi Commissar for Cultural Affairs, announced this week that the Reich Government was spending 12,000,000 marks yearly in subsidies to theatres. He cited this as proof of National Socialist (Nazi) encouragement of cultural activities, and contrasted it with the 220,000 marks that he said Prussia had spent in theatrical subsidies before the National Socialist regime came into power.

However, Commissar Hinkel did not mention the millions spent under the old regime by municipalities, which then provided their own subsidies, adds the New York "Times."

Though the Actors Forum, known as the militant "left wing" within Equity, has demanded prevailing Equity wages for the actors, the Equity Council made no decision on this point, and it was reported that the Government's security wage was regarded as satisfactory. In New York it is $103.40 monthly for actors, stage hands and other technicians, and $145 for directors and supervisors. In Chicago, Los Angeles and elsewhere the wage will be lower, with a "security wage" of $94 maximum.

Five projects calling for employment of between 1,000 and 1,500 have received the approval of the New York regional director.

First of these is "The Living Newspaper," a theatre sponsored by the New York Chapter of the Newspaper Guild, designed to present one-hour shows of dramatized news stories, employing 350 and under supervision of Richard Watts, Jr., film critic of the New York Herald Tribune.

A second unit, "The Negro Theatre," employing 250, will be sponsored by the New York Urban League for dramatic and musical productions in Harlem.

There will be two experimental theatres, to develop American writers and new production techniques. There is also a research and publicity project, to employ 350. Several other projects, including a dance unit, a Yiddish theatre and a second Negro theatre are being developed.

Existing drama activities under the WPA, which include a circus, marionette and other entertaiment units and about 25 dramatic and vaudeville units, will continue to function until the necessary changes can be effected.

Six units are being formed under the direction of Eddie Dowling, stage and screen actor, who is national director of the musical comedy, variety and vaudeville branches of the WPA project. These groups will play one-night stands in cities of 250,000 or less. It is expected that 1,200 persons will be employed in Mr. Dowling's organization and the productions will start in six weeks. Admission will be below a dollar.

Mr. Dowling, incidentally, is credited with suggesting the Federal Theatre Project, since shortly after the inauguration of President Roosevelt he launched a campaign for federal stage relief.

Mr. Rice said it was the intention to make all the projects self sustaining, and as soon as any of them become permanent, the prevailing, or union, wages will be instituted.

If the Forum policies win at the November 25th meeting, Frank Gillmore, president of Equity, and Paul Dullzell, executive secretary and treasurer, have announced they will resign.

The Forum denied it had obtained legislation by the "stampede method," as Mr. Gillmore had charged.

There are many other caustic critics of the federal project among legitimate producers, managers and actors. Eve Le Gallienne, founder of the Civic Repertory theatre, called it "downright bad theatre." John Golden, producer, while accepting a place on the national advisory committee tendered by Mrs. Flanagan, questioned the methods by which the project was to achieve its goal.

Thousands are attending free performances of WPA indoor circuses in the New York area, and a move has been started by WPA officials and the American Federation of Actors to develop similar units throughout the country.

2,500 at First Opera

Opera, too, is being offered under WPA auspices, the first public performance—"Carmen"—drawing 2,500 to the Brooklyn Musuem last Saturday, and repeated Sunday in the Bronx.

In Los Angeles, Gilmor Brown, regional director, was organizing projects including traveling shows for California, Nevada, New Mexico, Colorado, Arizona and Utah. Admissions as low as 10 cents may be charged.

The dominance of "Little Theatre" representatives on the Chicago regional directorate, including Maurice Gnesin of the Goodman theatre, director, has provoked a protest by a local committee of profesionals to Harry Hopkins, relief administrator in Washington. K. Elmo Lowe of Cleveland is organizing the vaudeville project in Kentucky, Ohio and West Virginia.

The American Federation of Actors' "Save Vaudeville" campaign to restore stage shows in film theatres has been endorsed by mayors in a number of cities, among them New York, Bridgeport, Pittsburgh, Erie, Milwaukee and Boston. Erie has restored vaudeville; Pittsburgh and Minneapolis theatres have reinstated stage attractions. The Federation is sponsoring a benefit in New York November 10th. Horace McNab, former assistant publicist at Keith's Memorial in Boston and later publicity manager at the Majestic, is directing the campaign in New England.

KORDA WILL AID NEW HUNGARIAN COMPANY

Joint Production Aims at World Market; Studio Shots in London; First Film Set

by ENDRE HEVESI

Budapest Correspondent

A Hungarian company, under the guidance of Nicholas Horthy, Jr., eldest son of Hungary's Regent, has come to an agreement to found a Hungarian film company in cooperation with Alexander Korda's London Film Company. The new concern will be registered as Budapest Film, Ltd., with Nicholas Horthy, Jr., as president, and Lorant Goldschlaeger, a Hungarian banker living in London, Ernst Pathy and Count George Hessenstein on the board of directors.

The founders of Budapest Film, Ltd., wish to have a film producing company on the same high artistic level as Mr. Korda's London Film. They argue that as Mr. Korda, himself a Hungarian, made London the Hollywood of Europe, it would not be difficult to make Budapest a Hollywood of the Continent, the more so as film production is less expensive in Hungary than anywhere else in the world. A host of foreign film producers have come to Hungary in the last few years for outdoor shots of their films, both for the considerable economies thus made and because they have found Hungary's country scenery eminently suitable. Parts of "Bulba Taras", for instance, a French-English production directed by Granovsky, have been shot on the Hortobagy, Hungary's vast steppe which greatly resembles the endless Russian steppes.

Budapest Film, Ltd., will produce chiefly for export, a great change in the Hungarian industry, which hitherto has produced Hungarian pictures for local releases only and a small number of German talkers for export. The new company plans to produce English sound pictures as well as Hungarian and thus invade the markets of the world.

Studio Shots in London

"After weeks of discussion I finally agreed with Mr. Korda that he should produce jointly with the Budapest Film Company, the English and Hungarian version of 'Tragedy of Man," said Mr. Horthy, Jr. "Sixty per cent of the outdoor shots would be done in Hungary, but the studio shots have to be made in London as we have not yet a studio big enough and technically perfect enough. Mr. Korda agreed to start work in a year, and it has been proposed to spend 250,000 pounds sterling on production."

"Tragedy of Man," one of the pearls of world literature, has fired many a screen manager's imagination because of its film possibilities. But though the play frequently figures on the program of the Budapest National theatre and has been translated into German and performed at the Vienna Burgtheatre with enormous success, so far no film company on the Continent seems to have had capital enough to make an ambitious picture of the masterpiece.

It is the work of Imre Madach, written between 1850 and 1860, and only now, 75 years later, has it started to conquer the world, though critics compare it with Goethe's "Faust." Its chief characters are Adam, Eve and Lucifer. Eve eats the apple and she and Adam are driven out of Paradise. Lucifer wants to show them the futility of human life and happiness, and leads them through scenes in Egypt, Athens, Rome, in Byzantium at the time of Crusades. He takes them to the Court of Hapsburgs, to industrial London, to the Paris of the French Revolution, to the Utopians, to the bleak world of the Eskimos. He shows them the stupidity and vileness of the masses who sneer at the liberating ideas of great men. Adam disillusioned, is on the verge of committing suicide, when his faith is renewed by God's voice, uttering the moral of the play, contained in its last word: "I toldst thou man: strive and believe!"

Laughton as Lucifer

It has been announced in a Budapest publication that "Tragedy of Man" will be produced in three versions: English, French and Hungarian. According to this paper the casting already has been settled. Charles Laughton will be the English Lucifer and Harry Baur the Satan of the French version. Leslie Howard and Merle Oberon are supposed to play the Adam and Eve roles in the English version, Charles Boyer and Annabella in the French version.

The new film company also wants to build a new, modern, technically perfect studio, much on the same lines as that of Korda. The Hungarian film industry has grown beyond the possibilities given by its two studios, the estate-owned Hunnia and the recently added Filmiroda. If Budapest Film, Ltd., carries out its plan of building the new studio, this not only will help foreign producers to make pictures less expensively, but, through sound competition, will give a chance to Hungarian producers as well.

Marlene Dietrich Offered Highest Salary by Korda

What is said to be the highest salary ever paid a Hollywood actress to appear in an English film is reported by the Hearst newspapers to have been offered Marlene Dietrich by Alexander Korda for her services in a film he will make at his London studios. It is reported that agreements have already been drawn up between Korda and Harry Edington, Miss Dietrich's manager in Hollywood, whereby the star would receive $300,000 plus the foreign income tax, for her services. All that is delaying the signing of the agreement, it was said, is the lack of a proper vehicle for the star.

Westcott Death Brings a Ban on Star Polo Playing

Polo playing by players under contract, particularly while they are engaged in active production, is to be barred by major studios in Hollywood in the future, it is reported. The recent death of Gordon Westcott, who suffered a fatal skull fracture when thrown in a game last week, has brought about the decision of the studios.

Warner Brothers have five players under contract who are prominent in Hollywood polo circles and RKO Radio two, but there are approximately fifty members of the film colony who are actively engaged in the sport, including Jean Muir, who was said to be contemplating organizing a girl's team.

Accidents have been frequent on Hollywood polo fields during the past, but the death of Westcott is the first fatality. Hal Roach, Aiden Roark of Twentieth Century-Fox, Guinn Williams and Walt Disney, are among the few polo players in Hollywood who have received recognition by the National Polo Association, and who have been honored with handicaps, have all suffered injuries in the past that were of serious nature, and it is the result of these past accidents and of the recent fatal one that the studios are prohibiting their contract players from indulging in the sport.

Westcott, who was 31 years old, was playing with the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer team, opposing one led by Disney, when his horse fell on him, crushing him. He was rushed to a hospital where it was discovered his skull was fractured and he died without regaining consciousness.

His real name was Myrthus Hickman. He was born on a ranch near St. George, Utah. He first studied for the ministry at the State University but later enrolled at the School of Journalism, Columbia University, New York.

Westcott's first theatrical venture was eleven years ago, when he wrote a play produced by a stock company at Salt Lake City. Later he played stock in Los Angeles and then in New York and London stage productions, including "the Great Necker," "The House of Fear," "Hollywood Party" and "The Devil Passes."

His most recent pictures were "Two Fisted" and "This Is the Life." His other motion picture work included roles in "Fog Over 'Frisco," "Registered Nurse," "Convention City," "Voltaire," "Dark Hazard" and "Lily Turner."

First Division Almost Set On National Distribution

The nationalization of First Division Exchange's distribution will be completed in about two weeks when Harry Thomas and Al Friedlander return to New York from the present tour which they are now making of all key cities, it has been revealed.

Prior to its recent reorganization under Pathe, First Division distribution was carried on by its own sixteen exchanges. The arrangements now being effected by Mr. Thomas and Mr. Friedlander, however, will give the company outlets in thirty key cities.

Thalberg's Genius Tops One Of The Greatest Films Of All Time; B. O. Records Assured

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer now comes to the front with one of the greatest pictures of all time in Irving Thalberg's production of "Mutiny On The Bounty." A picture that will definitely elevate the industry in every country of the world, and, one that is certain to establish new money records through massed attendance and long runs. Its importance far surpasses anything that has been made in years, made possible by the great faith of Thalberg in fine productions and the unlimited backing of this faith by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Twelve years ago Frank Lloyd compelled world-wide attention with his direction of "The Sea Hawk," accounted at the time a milestone in motion picture progress, now with his masterful direction of this great epic drama of the sea, the world has a chance to see what amazing progress has been made in the art of the screen and to witness the maturing of a great talent.

The picture-going public is not so easily startled as it was in 1923, but this masterpiece can scarcely fail to be a universal "must." There is little need to appraise its box office value. Such great pictures sell themselves. And "The Mutiny" has as many strong exploitation angles as a porcupine has quills. Few theater patrons will be willing to miss it.

Heavy Cost and Time Spent Justified

With the full resources of the Metro organization and the production genius of Thalberg behind him; with upwards of $1,800,000 spent and months and months of actual shooting, Lloyd justifies it all. The picture is long, running just over two hours. Much of it is desperately grim, brutal and violent. But it has the epic sweep of the sea itself, "the hurl and the heave and the crash of the combers wind-hounded," and it holds almost breathless interest through every one of its 12,000 feet.

The celebrated book and its sequel, "Men Against The Sea," of which this is a close picturization, is virtually a historical document, the re-creation of one of the most dramatic of all true sagas of the sea. The writing of this Nordhoff-Hall book, which has been read by millions, is itself a fascinating story.

The picture is divided into six strongly-contrasted episodes, not counting a brief prologue showing preparations in England for the Bounty's history-making voyage. First is the long voyage itself around Africa to the South Seas, its progress punctuated by animated maps. The little full-rigged frigate is on its way to gather 1,000 breadfruit plants in Tahiti and transplant them in the West Indies, a two-year job. She is in command of Captain William Bligh, a great seaman but a domineering and merciless master, taking sadistic pleasure in the torture of his men for slight or fancied infractions of his brutal orders.

This terrifying character is magnificently presented by Charles Laughton. Throughout "The Mutiny" he is every inch the master of men, with never a flicker of softening even at his final humiliation at the court-martial in England.

Next in command was Fletcher Christian, master's mate, now admirably brought to life by Clark Gable. This mate too was a great sailor and no weakling, trained to accept the harsh sea code of the period, a born leader. But he cannot stomach the increasing cruelties of his master. He warns of the smouldering resentment of the crew, semi-starved and overworked, only to be as harshly scorched 'as the lowest.

Thus the growing tension is built up through the months of the long voyage, to brood over the little ship like a black fog, till suddenly land is sighted. They have reached Tahiti. The first chapter is closed in the nick of time.

In a Paradise

They are in a paradise. The natives, under a friendly chief, welcome them with lavish hospitality. The hardships are forgotten in the protracted shore-leave allowed for the gathering of the plants. Only the mate is kept aboard (except for one brief visit in which he and an island maiden fall in love) and thus his growing sense of injustice is further fanned.

Of the three midshipmen one Byam, admirably played by Franchot Tone, of whom more anon, goes ashore to compile a dictionary of the language and he too succumbs to a lovely native.

Then the voyage to the West Indies. Bligh's brutalities grow past human bearing. Gable leads the mutiny. The crew is about evenly divided and there is a fight, which the mutineers win. The captain and those who want to go with him are turned adrift in an open boat, with food, water and navigating instruments, thousands of miles from a port of call. Byam refuses to join Gable and his mutiny but is held by the mate. The Bounty is headed back to Tahiti.

After almost incredible hardships, marvelously pictured, the indomitable Bligh reaches port and eventually England.

Scenes in Tahiti

The mutineers and Byam reach Tahiti, marry natives and raise happy families. One day an English sail is sighted. Gable hurries most of his men and their families aboard the Bounty and they sail away. Byam, still loyal to the service, stays behind and boards the Britisher, to find Bligh in command burning with the passion to catch Gable and get revenge. There is a hair-raising chase among the reefs. The Britisher is wrecked but those on board escape.

The Bounty reaches an uncharted and uninhabited island, now famous as Pitcairn, and is deliberately driven ashore under full sail and burned to the waters edge. The party is to start a colony but it disappears from the story and was lost to the world for more than a century. That is another story, and with MGM owning "Pitcairn Island." it is wide open for a sequel with audiences ready made for it.

Byam is taken back to England, tried and convicted of mutiny on the evidence of Bligh He is allowed to speak and delivers a scathing indictment of the barbarous code of the sea that wins him a king's pardon and brings about many humane reforms. This is the stirring climax of the story and its intensely dramatic recital by Franchot Tone will bring spinal thrills to anyone, while the British public can almost be counted on to rise from its seats and cheer. This scene splendidly climaxes a finely consistent and manly portrayal. It is Tone's best work to date and marks him up for high credit.

Fifty Speaking Parts

There are some fifty speaking parts in the admirable cast and but a few can be mentioned. Herbert Mundin, as the captain's steward, furnishes the only light touch on the voyage and also delivers laughably on the island. Dudley Digges is outstanding as the drunken but humane ship's doctor, as is Donald Crisp, playing a soul-tortured sailor. Eddie Quillan, a young and tender member of the crew, torn from his wife and baby to serve the king, elicits sympathy with a moving performance. The Tahitian parts are beautifully played by natives, recruited during the filming in the islands. There are several smaller characterizations of high excellence. Ian Wolfe as Maggs, who is tortured to his death, Ivan Simpson as Morgan, DeWitt Jennings as Fryer, Stanley Fields as the hard-boiled Muspratt and Wallis Clark as Morrison, the muscular wielder of the lash, all stand out. Henry Stephenson, as Byam's very British father, and Francis Lister, president of the court-martial, are also excellent.

The screen play by Talbot Jennings, Jules Furthman and Carey Wilson is faithful to the highest standards and evidences meticulous care and fine feeling for the spoken word. The picture is photographed with brilliant distinction by Arthur Edeson. The art contribution of Cedric Gibbons and Arnold Gillespie is notable, and James Havens, with expert knowledge of ships and the sea, has given invaluable guidance in that department. Sound plays a vital part in the telling of this story, as does the background music, and unstinted credit must go to Herbert Stothart for a distinguished score. Add to all this the wise and unflagging supervision of Albert Lewin through many months and the total score is—a masterwork.

The picture, advertised and publicized for months as one of the most expensive ever made, is cheap at the $1,800,000 cost. Its great value to the British market alone would make that expenditure possible.

Exhibitors would do well to clear the booking sheets for additional days and weeks for this picture because it will take a longer run than the ordinary house has ever had, to accommodate the great number of people who will want to see it. It's fine entertainment and a great business builder, attracting, as it most assuredly will, patrons who only come out for important shows.

Not that it MATTERS

by Helen Gwynn

Hollywood may have its photographers and autograph fiends, but New York has its photographers, autograph fiends AND colyumists. Colyumists are everywhere not only because the rivalry among them is so great that they must be everywhere at once, but because the late spots need their comment to keep going. The situation is such that undoubtedly a play will be written about it some day because right now things are so amusingly bad, that if you mention the fact that the weather is nice, a colyumist will immediately ask, "Who tipped you off and who's in on the plot?"

However, the night clubs add fuel to the fire. F'rinstance, two of the more popular places are the Stork Club and the Versailles. Lately the colyumists have been hanging around the Stork Club more and as a consequence it's had more publicity and the reason it attracts the boys is because they have a "Hot Seat" in the Twentieth Century-Fox's New Play Company to Use Stage as Proving Ground; Exhibitors Say Patrons Are Beginning to Protest Against Chance Games; Eleven Features Completed, Seven Start; Laemmle Predicts Great Results from Edgar A. Guest's Down-to-Earth Films

HOLLYWOOD money has been invested heavily in New York stage shows for a number of years, but now a studio is preparing to use the stage consistently as a proving ground for picture material.

The Twentieth Century-Fox Play Producing Company plans to launch at least five new plays a year, and to give them runs, not only in New York but in San Francisco, Chicago and Los Angeles, so that their audience appeal will have a nation wide check before they reach the screen.

Henry Duffy, who heads the newly formed subsidiary of the studio, has had wide experience with audiences through his chain of legitimate theatres on the West Coast. Casting will be done in Hollywood. So far as possible, players who will appear in the screen version will be used in the stage cast. The studio plans full cooperation in this phase, feeling that after the show has opened in San Francisco, has had a New York run, a short Chicago engagement and has returned to Hollywood, the supporting members of the cast will have been equipped to give far finer performances than would be possible under ordinary shooting conditions.

Just recently the Marx Brothers used a road tour to try out gags for their current film, "A Night at the Opera," and found the method highly satisfactory in timing, selection of material and development of ideas. Their tryout trip was confined to smaller cities and to towns, so that they had a wider check than afforded by a New York run only.

The stage thus is being used by Hollywood as an ally instead of a rival, and local exhibitors feel that the new enterprise may prove one of the notable steps forward in discovering hit film material.—MILLER.

Protest Chance Games As Displeasing Patrons

Exhibitors operating theatres in metropolitan areas in this territory are convinced that "Bank Nite," "Buck Nite," "Screeno," "Radio Giveaways" and the like must soon fall of their own weight. Patrons of these theatres already are beginning to express their disapproval, they said, and many have told house managers in no uncertain terms that they attend theatres only to be entertained.

What is still more to the point, these patrons are registering their displeasure by staying home on nights when the drawings take place. As an example, a neighborhood house in one of the choice spots in Los Angeles offered a studio feature preview, chance game, and a major feature on the same bill one night last week. In addition, one of the lesser stars made a personal appearance to supervise the prize drawing. When receipts were counted, it was found that business was below normal for an ordinary week night.

EDGAR A. GUEST

This same theatre also is giving away a radio bar (a small combination drinking bar and radio cabinet) in a tieup with a neighboring merchant. By the time the audience had sat through an explanation of the mechanics of the giveaway, which was given by the house manager in person, and also flashed on the screen by a trailer, those that had come envied their friends who had remained away.—MORRIS.

Edgar A. Guest to Appear In Universal Family Film

Canny Carl Laemmle, who has brought more screen stars to fame and fortune than any other film man, is planning big things for Edgar A. Guest, poet-philosopher, recently placed under contract and soon to appear in a family drama bearing the tentative title of "Home." Mr. Laemmle knows that Universal for years has made much of its revenue from directing production at family trade and he knows too that since the League of Decency came into the picture the public is expecting more and more pictures extolling the virtues of simple, truthful Americanism and American home life.

Some weeks ago he sent two studio executives out to look for a man who could best represent the typical American family man on the screen. The two scouts made but one test and Edgar A. Guest was signed to a long term contract to make three pictures a year. The choice seems to have been a wise one, for Mr. Guest has had other offers since and he has obtained more publicity for himself than any other already established Universal star.

For 40 years Mr. Guest has been a writer. Since 1909 he has had at least one of his homely verses printed every day. He has written more than 12,000 bits of verse and they have had a circulation into many millions. One of his 12 books of verse has enjoyed a sale in excess of 1,250,000 copies which is quite a bit better than any best selling novel. Besides, he added radio to his list of public contracts four year ago and in the last two years moved from 48th on the list of popular programs to ninth, being only one vote behind Will Rogers on the last annual poll. Speaking dates before hundreds of clubs and churches and civic groups have added to his prestige, and with 200 newspapers printing his verses daily (and most of them his picture), Edgar A. Guest needs no introduction to the American public and he brings to motion pictures a reputation for sincerity, a fine commercial asset to his pictures.

Mr. Laemmle knew all this and that such a man should bring into the theatre hundreds of thousands of men and women who are not regular film patrons and who have been unbelievers. Now, out at Universal City, where tests have been made, Mr. Laemmle has learned that Mr. Guest is a darned good natural actor, and enthusiastic about motion pictures.—WATT.

11 Features Completed; Seven Others Started

Results of the activity that kept the wheels of the production mill turning at a merry pace the last few weeks were reflected as November 1st saw eleven features completed. As this number came off the stages seven pictures were started. Accounting for the completed total, each of four studios finished two features. In the new work, but one studio has two pictures going.

MGM completed "Tarzan Escapes." Long in production, it features Johnny Weissmuller and Maureen O'Sullivan, with Benita Hume, John Buckler and William Henry. James McKay directed.

At 20th Century-Fox "The Littlest Rebel" moved to the cutting rooms. Shirley Temple is starred, supported by John Boles, Jack Holt, Karen Morley, Guinn Williams, Bill Robinson, Willie Best, Bessie Lyle and Hannah Washington. David Butler directed.

"Captain Blood" finished at Warner. Directed by Michael Curtiz, the lengthy cast features Errol Flynn, Olivia de Havilland, Robert Barrat, Lionel Atwill, Henry Stephenson, Basil Rathbone, Ross Alexander, Guy Kibbee, J. Carroll Naish, Frank McGlynn, Jessie Ralph, Donald Meek, Hobart Cavanaugh and scores of others.

Universal completed two pictures. The more important, probably, is the elaborately produced "Magnificent Obsession." Irene Dunne and Robert Taylor are starred. The support includes Charles Butterworth, Betty Furness, Sara Haden, Ralph Morgan, Henry Armetta, Gilbert Emery, Arthur Hoyt, Craufurd Kent, Inez Courtenay, Cora Sue Collins, Beryl Mercer, Arthur Treacher and Maidel Turner. John M. Stahl directed. "The Invisible Ray" also was finished. Boris Karloff and Bela Lugosi are featured, supported principally by Frances Drake, Frank Lawton, Walter Kingsford, Beulah Bondi and Violet Kemble-Cooper. Lambert Hillyer directed.

"Sylvia Scarlett" and "We're Only Human," formerly "Husk," were completed at Radio. "Sylvia Scarlett" features Katharine Hepburn with Cary Grant and Brian Aherne. In support are Edmund Gwenn, Natalie Paley, Mrs. Pat Campbell, E. E. Clive, Olaf Hytton, Mae Beatty, Colin Campbell and Nola Luxford. George Cukor directed. The second feature will present Preston Foster, Jane Wyatt, James Gleason, Harold Huber, Mischa Auer, Moroni Olsen, John Arledge, Jane Darwell, Arthur Hohl, Hattie McDaniels, Christian Rub, Charles Wilson and Guy Usher. James Flood directed.

Paramount completed two features, both of which are action adventure pictures. In "Bar 20 Rides Again," a Harry Sherman production, will be seen William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison, Frank McGlynn, Sr., Harry Worth, George Hayes, Howard Lang, Jean Rouveral, Frank Layton, Ethel Wales, J. P. McGowan, Paul Fix, John Merton and Al St. John. Howard Bretherton directed. "Drift Fence" presents Larry Crabbe, Katherine DeMille, Tom Keene, Benny Baker, Glenn Erikson, Stanley Andrews, Walter Long, Effie Ellsler, Chester Gan, Dick Alexander, Richard Carle and Jan Duggan. Otho Levering directed.

Warner Starts Two

Two pictures started at Warners. In "Colleen," which Alfred Green is directing, are featured Ruby Keeler, Joan Blondell, Jack Oakie, Hugh Herbert and Paul Draper. Principal players in "Man Hunt" are Margaret Churchill, Ricardo Cortez, William Gargan, Chic Sale, Dick Purcell, Claire Dodd and Russell Simpson. William V. Clements is directing.

Sol Lesser Productions started "Whispering Smith Speaks." George O'Brien is featured, supported by Irene Ware, Kenneth Thomson, Victor Potel, Spencer Charters, Frank Sheridan, Edward Keane, William V. Mong and Maude Allen. David Howard is directing.

Work began on "Two O'Clock Courage" at Radio. Being directed by Ben Stoloff, it will present Walter Abel, Margot Grahame, Alan Hale, Eric Blore, Addison Randall, Phyllis Brooks, Erik Rhodes, Ray Mayer and Arthur Hoyt.

Republic started "Sagebrush Troubadour." It features Gene Autry with Barbara Pepper, supported by Smiley Burnette, Hooper Atchley, Julian Rivero, Frank Glendon and Denny Meadows. Joseph Kane is directing.

At 20th Century-Fox "Gentle Julia" has started. The cast includes Jane Withers, Tom Brown, Marsha Hunt, Myra Maish, Astrid Allwyn, Jackie Searl, Harry Holman, George Meeker, Hattie McDaniel and Francis Ford. John Blystone is directing.

Variety Club Holds Pittsburgh Banquet

A thousand reservations are reported from men of every branch of the amusement industry who will attend the Seventh Annual Variety Club Banquet at the William Penn hotel, Pittsburgh, on Sunday. Many of the guests will arrive a day earlier to attend the Pitt-Army football game.

The banquet is in honor of the retiring Chief Barker and his associate officers: Mike Cullen, chief barker; Frank Smith, 1st assistant chief barker; Art Levy, 2nd assistant chief barker; Dr. L. G. Beinhauer, doughguy; James G. Balmer, property master; C. J. Latta, Joseph Blowitz, Steve Cox, Albert Barnett and George D. Tyson, canvasmen, and Harold Lund and Dr. A. Wise, delegates to the national convention.

John H. Harris, chairman, announced reservations received from Governor Nice, of Maryland, and his executive staff, as well as from William G. Conley, former governor of West Virginia, and the present governors of Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio.

The entertainment will consist of several bands and thirty or forty well known vaudeville acts, besides several speakers. The entire profits will be used in the club's charitable activities.

Among those who have notified Mr. Harris that they will be present are: L. Howell Davis, chairman of the Pennsylvania censor board; Joseph Bernhard, general manager of Warner Brothers theatres; "Rip" Collins and Joe Whitehead, of the St. Louis Cardinals baseball team; T. W. Carrol, general manager of Western Union; Herman Robbins, president of National Screen Service; Sam Dembow, of National Screen Service; George Dembow, of National Screen Service; Mayor William N. McNair of Pittsburgh; William Rodgers, of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; Charles Margiotti, Pennsylvania attorney general; David Lawrence, secretary of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; George Skouras, president of Skouras Theatres; Mayor Frank Couzens, of Detroit; Jules Levy, vice-president and foreign sales manager of RKO and Ed Lowry, vaudeville, and radio star.

Warners' Father Dies

BENJAMIN WARNER

BENJAMIN WARNER, 79, father of the Warner brothers, died Sunday night while visiting his daughter, Mrs. David Robins, at Youngstown, Ohio. Burial was at Los Angeles, beside his wife who died one year ago. The entire family first attended services, on Monday, at the Home of Peace chapel, Youngstown, where Rabbi S. M. Neches officiated.

The elder Warner, a resident of Los Angeles, had been staying at the Youngstown home of his daughter and son-in-law for several days. Prior to his sons' entrance into motion pictures, he conducted a delicatessen store and later a meat market at Youngstown, where the Warner boys had their start in motion pictures, operating a circuit of old "nickelodeons".

In addition to Harry M., president of Warner Brothers Pictures; Major Albert, vice-president, and Jack L. Warner, vice-president in charge of production, Mr. Benjamin Warner is survived by two other daughters, Mrs. Louis Halper and Mrs. Harry Charnas, of New York.

No Production Holiday for Next Six Months: Zanuck

With an assurance to his studio workers at the Twentieth Century-Fox studios in Hollywood that there would be no "traditional" production holiday during the next six months, Darryl F. Zanuck, production head, announced nineteen features will reach the cameras before January 1.

Five of these films scheduled to start immediately are: "Captain January," starring Shirley Temple; "A Message to Garcia," starring Wallace Beery; "It Had to Happen," starring George Raft; "Everybody's Old Man," the first Irvin S. Cobb production, and "King of Burlesque,". with Warner Baxter and Alice Faye.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Ungilding "Diamond Lil"-y

MAE WEST is not the originator of the widely heard "Come up 'n' see me some time!" No siree, for we have Junior Cornelius Vanderbilt's word for it that the author was one of the many wives of a Salt Lake City Mormon of the old school that once practiced plural marriage under the teachings of their founder, Joseph Smith, a Vermonter.

He was said by his followers to have translated, through "the gift and power of God," a sacred history of the ancient inhabitants of America that was supposed to have been found, on golden plates, hid in Cumorah Hill, near Palmyra, New York, by Moroni, one of the ancient prophets. Heavenly messengers were supposed to have been sent in a dream to Young Smith for that purpose. However, one of the unlooked for results, as we shall presently see, was the "Come up 'n' see me some time" that has since been broadcast by Mae to the four corners of the world on Paramount motion picture sound tracks.

Riding hell-bent-for-election in his "Flying Trapeze" land yacht through desolate valleys and over mountain ranges of California, on one of those writin' expeditions for Rob Wagner's Script of Beverly Hills, Junior Vanderbilt—he's 37—finally got down around the edge of the Great Sale Lake, as blue as the Mediterranean. From there he breezed leisurely into Salt Lake City, along its broad boulevards, to his favorite Hotel Ambassador, where he learned, eagle-eyed and sharp-eared as he is, that the Ambassador was built by the United States Government a score or more years ago to house the wives of the Mormons. But, only one of the "polygamies" took advantage of the hotel residence, and she was nicknamed "The Ambassadress." She's the gal who, we're told, first chirped "Come up 'n' see me some time."

Every important executive of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and the parent Loew company sat at table the other evening in New York's thickly-carpeted Waldorf Astoria Hotel on swanky Park Avenue, there to break bread with, and as a testimonial to their departing Dave Loew. There were many flowery words spoken in high praise of the people and, inferentially, the product of the great Lionized organization that is Metro. But the organ that was providing dinner music poured forth only the hit tunes from RKO's "Top Hat" and "Roberta."

Great pain would be spared us from the agonies inflicted on our all too sensitive ears by some of those wobbly warblers who echo nightly over the networks if we only had in this country the memory of a Tan Sen and some of the neem trees that are native to India.

The anniversary of Tan Sen, who was Akbar the Great's court musician, is still observed in India. He has been credited with superhuman musical powers, and every year a big fair is held at his grave, at Gwalior, the place of his birth 400 years ago. In the shadow of the tomb musicians from all parts of India assemble on the anniversary and eat the leaves of the neem tree which stands on it, in the hope of improving their vocal powers.

A shelter belt of neem trees wouldn't be a bad idea.

The newsreel managements probably will not admit it, but they're all sitting around twiddling their thumbs wondering if and when they're going to receive a single actual up-front trench war shot of the Ethiopian conflict to compensate them for all of the $150,000 which they already have spent to equip, transport and maintain their camera expeditions over there. It seems that they can't get the Ethiopians and the Italians to stay close long enough for a good old-fashioned "over-the-top" slugfest.

But they really did not need to spend all of that actual cash. They could have given their war correspondents bars of salt or cartridges to spend in those parts of Ethiopia where salt and slugs are used for currency.

Or they should have remembered that Italy and Ethiopia signed a treaty of "perpetual friendship" on August 2, 1928, at Addis Ababa.

Regardless, the newsreel men assigned to the job are learning much about little known customs of that country. For one thing they now are aware how strictly the old Biblical law of a life for a life is applied.

Notwithstanding the motives or the circumstances, a man found guilty of killing another man must pay for the act with his own life, and to the heir or members of the family of the murdered man is intrusted the execution of the killer.

Not many air-raids ago, an upper-class Ethiopian, a personal friend of the Emperor, who accidentally shot and killed his close friend, found himself on the threshold of execution by the dead man's 10-year-old son and direct heir, who, under the law, was granted the right to kill his father's killer.

Because of his own friendship with the condemned man, Emperor Haile Salassie sent for the young son and offered the lad 1,000 thalers—a huge sum in Ethiopia—to release the condemned man from the death penalty. The boy refused the money and went through with the execution.

Mary Pickford's ascension to bald-pated Al Lichtman's presidential throne at United Artists may not have caused any noticeable change in the corporate conduct of the company, or in its intricate sales procedure, but the influence of "America's Sweetheart" has been great on the sartorial improvement of some of the newborn lotharios in and about the home office, where "Our Mary," as they call her, sways gently in the swivel chair that is the flying trapeze of that distributing corporation.

Lawrence Lehman, manager of RKO's Mainstreet theatre, and son of Martin Lehman, one of the founders of the Keith circuit, is recuperating, slowly, from an attack of laughitis which came on suddenly when a good-natured barb that was thrown by him turned right around and hit him square in the solar-plexus, or some place.

It all happened when Lawrence strolled for a bite to the counter of a nearby lunchroom. Noting the very Italian countenance on the face of the proprietor, and that a very large darky was industriously mopping the floor, Lehman observed conversationally to the owner, "Heh, Tony, I see you have an Ethiopian spy here!"

"Oh, no, boss!" the owner contradicted. "We got strumberrys pie, and punkeens pie and happles pie, but no Ethiopians pie."

A Chapter of Chapliniana

WE were not unaware until the other day that the shoes which Charlie Chaplin ate in "The Gold Rush" were made out of sheets of licorice sewed by hand into perfect shoes complete with candy laces and patches.

They say that Charlie's newest, "Modern Times," has many hilariously funny sequences, typical being the incident during which a truck loaded with explosives passes near a factory and its warning red flag falls in the street. Chaplin picks it up, runs after the truck to return it to the driver, and when he chases it round a corner encounters a parade of reds, police in pursuit. He is swallowed up in the mob, police break through and, since he is the only one carrying a red flag, he is arrested.

They say that a fortune, many times over, has gone forth from Charlie's pockets to the production staff he constantly maintains regardless of the long years between productions. But let him even suspect that a neat sum has been spent for unnecessary props and he comes running.

When "The Gold Rush" was in production he demanded of Joe Van Meter, his purchasing agent, if it were true that he had ordered a carload of cornflakes for the snow scenes.

"No," lied Joe, "just three bags full."

Just how six weeks of snow scenes could come out of three small bags Charlie never thought to ask.

There's something peculiar about it, maybe it's the visualization of a cold statistician of an iodine-and-pill department of the very, very technical telephone corporation fluting a flute. He'll probably play that stirring "When It's Investigating Time in Washington, Commissioner, Will You Be Probing A. T. and T."

PROTEST FAVORITISM IN NEWSPAPER SPACE

Chicago Theatremen Hint at Dropping Ads Unless Given Same Attention as Taverns

by BILL CROUCH
Chicago Correspondent

Chicago theatre men are hinting at a sharp conflict with local newspapers unless more publicity space is given them. The theatremen say that they do not get the amount of space they should, in comparison with other advertisers in the amusement sections of the daily press.

The thorn in the side of the theatremen is the many "breaks" given to beer taverns and small-time night clubs. These concerns, which have floor shows of cheap entertainers, are placing pictures and stories in Sunday amusement sections in far greater quantity than are the theatres which buy a great amount of space and have advertisements in the papers every day.

During the past few months dozens of beer taverns and small night clubs have sprung up and each has a small floor show of sorts. These advertise mostly in the Sunday editions and refuse to give out any advertising unless they get a publicity "break". As the taverns are usually somewhat of a temporary proposition, the papers figure to get the advertising while they can. The theatres, which are permanent, depend largely on the newspaper ads for their success and they protest that the newspapers are taking advantage of this situation.

Floor show reviews are carried daily in the columns of the newspapers, the same as theatre reviews. The difference is, however, that while the reviewers go into raves about the floor shows in the tavern and night clubs they feel free to criticize the pictures offered at the theatres in no uncertain terms. One local night club reviewer on a morning newspaper here has never been known to give anything but a favorable review, adorned with superlatives, about the night clubs he visits, while its generally agreed that three out of ten places offer what is poorer entertainment than low priced vaudeville playing at the grind film houses.

Threaten to Drop Advertising

Theatre men say that unless a change is made in the newspaper policy soon they will pull their advertising and find some other means of telling the public what they have to offer. They do not pretend to tell the newspapers what publicity they should get for their advertising, but they do insist that they should have as much consideration, at least, as is given to the taverns and night clubs which do not spend as much for advertising and who demand and get more publicity. They also want fair play when it comes to handling of reviews of the entertainment offered.

Among the many reasons given by theatre men as to why the present situation is unfavorable are the following: the reading public of night club fans is a small minority of the newspaper readers; stories about night club entertainers as ground out by the press agents and night club editors are often very dull reading; entertainment in the theatres has to be of an acceptable standard while that offered in a night club knows no bounds.

Theatre men are not waging this fight for a reduction of space rates. If the fight gets too embittered, the theatres will probably bring to light the amount of publicity given free to professional sports events and show the unfairness of this policy to theatre operators.

Theatre men are of the opinion that the high rates they have to pay are unfair when one considers that what they have to offer is open to any sort of criticism the newspaper wishes to give it, while other advertisers all get superlative publicity regardless of whether or not what they offer the public is as advertised. The newspapers, they say, do not come out with a byline article telling what is wrong about other advertised articles, as they do in reviewing pictures.

Some local night clubs, the ones with good dance bands and name stage attractions, buy considerable space and offer fine entertainment. The theatre men are not against the attention these places get, feeling that they are deserving of what they get, as much as the theatres. It is about the fly-by-night business that the theatre men are complaining.

Definite action is expected to be taken within the next 30 days unless amusement page editors and those who handle the policy of this part of the newspapers change their attitude.

Navy to Aid Filming Of Two Features

Navy Department officials in Washington have advised the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association of their approval of navy cooperation in the production of two pictures, "Follow the Fleet" and "United States Smith."

In expressing approval the department said it considered "Shipmates Forever" one of the "finest navy pictures ever produced."

Studio Manpower Is British Problem, Says W. A. Bach

The English, in their endeavors to compete with Hollywood in the making of high-grade motion pictures, have run into a difficult problem of studio manpower, in the opinion of William A. Bach, president of Audio Productions, Inc., industrial-producing subsidiary of Electrical Research Products, Inc., who recently returned from England. There is money in abundance in England, he said this week, and the materials necessary for production on a large scale can be obtained, but there are few expert craftsmen manning the studios, "consequently salaries for these craftsmen —studiomen, cameramen, sound engineers, and so on—are going up at a terrific rate and have drawn technicians from other countries, including the United States."

Shown in British Theatres

In the United States, Mr. Bach said, the socalled advertising or industrial picture is shown principally in clubs, salesrooms, schools and the like, but in England it is accepted fare in the cinema and runs 500 feet or less on the regular theatre program. The theatres, however, charge fairly high rates for showing industrial pictures and because they are shown only once on a program it is hard to convince advertisers to spend money on them, he said. On this side, Mr. Bach said, a great deal more money is spent on industrial pictures and they are of a higher calibre, though there is a tendency over there to raise the standard of industrial pictures.

Business conditions in England in general are very good, and definitely so on the industrial side, Mr. Bach said. "There is a boom period on; manufacturers are way behind time in filling orders. A big electrical development is underway with the trend towards a unified system. Amazing change in climatic conditions, warm summers, the rapid increase in the number of motor cars, industrial changes and the availability of money are rapidly putting England on its feet."

Intrigued with Color

The English, Mr. Bach said, are decidedly intrigued with color in the industrial field. In England they react more to color in pictures than do Americans, he added, explaining that because brilliant color is comparatively lacking in England and the climate is very dull, the people are more prone to regard color favorably. Walt Disney, he said, is still extremely popular in England.

Mr. Bach said that Audio Productions' "Musical Moods" will gross higher in England than they will in this country.

His company is now engaged in a series of industrial pictures for Public Service of New Jersey, one for General Motors nearing completion, two for Westinghouse nearing completion, two for Ford Motors, and two for Metropolitan Life Insurance Company.

Frank K. Speidell and C. H. Bradfield, Jr., have been appointed vice-presidents of Audio Productions, Inc. Mr. Speidell was formerly director of the industrial division and will continue this supervision. Mr. Bradfield was formerly treasurer.

Frank J. Murray, the last few years associated with Fox Film Corporation in the publicity and advertising department, the Fox-Hearst Industrial Division, the Far East Productions and Affiliated Studios, has joined Audio in the sales and creative department.

"I am MARY BURNS, FUGITIVE"

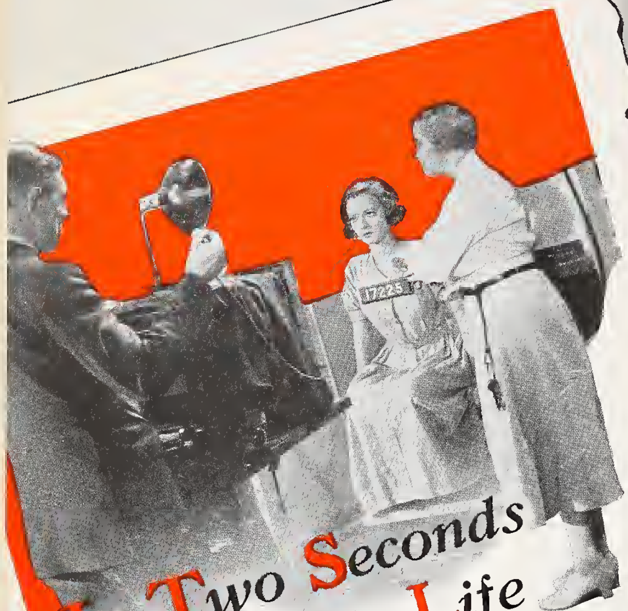
Read these unforgettable revelations of a girl guilty of nothing but love.

"I Didn't Know He Was a Killer!"

"When I met Don Wilson, I fell in love with him. He was tall, good-looking, an ex-college hero, an all-American football star, with plenty of money. I promised to marry him. Now the police tell me Don is a Public Enemy, and I'm in the hands of the law for helping him. All I did was love a man and help him when he was in trouble. Does that make me a criminal?"



“In Two Seconds My Whole Life Changed!”

“One moment I was Mary Burns, who never harmed a soul. The next instant all was changed. They took away my name and gave me a number. Said I was guilty of aiding, abetting and harboring a criminal. But all the law and all the judges in the land can't make me a crook. If I am guilty, then all I'm guilty of is love. Did they have the right to give me fifteen years in the Penitentiary for that!”

"Loved by a Murderer!"

"Hunted by the police...driven from pillar to post. Wanted by Don Wilson, murderer . . . the man I couldn't love. That was me Mary Burns, who only wanted a chance to live my life...to be let alone. I'll never forget the terrible day when Don, himself, followed me to a church in Salt Lake City and got away from the Federal men after forcing me to go with him. When the chase got too hot, Don left me by the roadside, with orders to join him later. I was heartsick . . . desperate . . . at my wits' ends!"

STUDIO SCHEDULES REVISED TO INCLUDE 54 HIT REMAKES

Producers Double the Number of Sound Pictures Planned from Box Office Performers of Silent Days

Realizing the potential wealth in the box office reputations of silent screen classics of the old era, the eight large producing corporations have further revised their feature schedules to provide for the making this season of no less than 54 productions which in days of long ago were outstanding performers at box offices.

The trend has been pointing strongly toward remakes since the companies at the beginning of this season first indicated they then had made plans to re-produce in 1935-36 at least 29 hits of silent years. The increase in new remakes is 25 or more, nearly as many as the original number announced. The position of the eight companies in this connection now stands as follows.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer—fourteen remakes.
20th Century - Fox—nine.
Paramount—seven.
RKO—seven.
United Artists—five.
Universal—five.
Warners—five.
GB—one.
Republic—one.

The production values as compared with the old days, must take into consideration the difference in casts, added technical improvements, including sound, developments in production technique, as well as story elements which might need revision in the light of requirements or to command present day audience attention. But, the interest that prompts the return of well-remembered films is akin to the audience friendliness which greets stage revivals—the appeal of well told stories of romance and adventure, types of dramatic material which are perennially popular. And, basically, there is the fact that some of the old films were huge grossers, achieving figures never approached by hundreds of features released since.

Gauge for Exhibitor

Too, the exhibitor has a gauge for determining to some extent the potential value of the new version to his box office, in the reception of the original silent form.

That there is considerable wealth in the widespread international publicity which attended the showing of dozens of the pictures when they played as silents appears to be a foregone conclusion in the distributors' home offices in New York. In almost all cases the public and the buying exhibitor are reminded of the production quality and dramatic appeal of the predecessor.

Remakes this year will reach a record for all-time. The practice is by no means a new one, but in previous seasons remakes rarely exceeded a half-dozen or thereabouts.

Whether the producers today are influenced in swelling their remakes because of a dearth of good material is not conceded.

Remakes now scheduled for 1935-36 follow:

GB Pictures

Passing of the Third Floor Back. Cast: Conrad Veidt, Renee Ray, Anne Lee. Originally produced by First National in 1918. Story by Jerome K. Jerome. Already completed, to be released in November or December, 1935.

FRED ASTAIRE WINS SCREEN GUILD AWARD

Fred Astaire, for his performance in "Top Hat," Merle Oberon for her portrayal of Kitty Vane in "The Dark Angel" and Robert Donat for his work in "The Thirty-Nine Steps" all divide the honors in the September Poll of the Screen Actors' Guild for the Best Performances of the Month, it was announced in the Screen Guild Magazine recently.

Competition for the Screen Writers' Guild Award for the Best Screen Play of September was exceedingly close, with first place going to Stephen Morehouse Avery and Don Hartman for their original, "The Gay Deception." First Honorable Mention went to Lillian Hellman and Mordaunt Sharp for "The Dark Angel" and Second Honorable Mention to Jack McGowan and Sid Silvers for their screen play of "Broadway Melody of 1936."

More Censorship Evident in Paris

Further evidences of political censorship in Paris appeared with word passed along to operators of motion picture houses not to show clips of British warships in the Mediterranean or of Anthony Eden, British Minister for League of Nations Affairs.

The move is credited to a desire to avoid any demonstration against Great Britain.

Corporation Acquires Theatre

The Atlas Theatre Corporation, Denver, has taken over the lease of the Golden Gem theatre, Golden, Colo., from Mrs. Barbara Preuss and R. A. Preuss, who operated the house since 1928.

Reorganization of GTE Furthered

Decision was reserved by Chief Justice Daniel J. Layton in Chancery Court at Wilmington, Del., on a motion asking the court to approve an agreement between the Chase National Bank and United States Senator Daniel O. Hastings, of Delaware, receiver for General Theatres Equipment, Inc., after an all-day hearing last Thursday.

Hearing on a plan for reorganization of GTE in the Court of Chancery has been set for November 13th.

Senator Hastings said that the estate in receivership would be improved $306,000 if the settlement is consummated. Chase National Bank is the largest creditor of GTE.

The proposed agreement would release Chase, its partners and directors, from any claims in consideration for which the bank would reduce its claim against GTE about $3,500,000. In this matter the Amerex Holding Corporation, formerly the Chase Securities Corporation, a Chase Bank subsidiary, would deliver to the receiver, Senator Hastings, GTE debentures in the principal amount of $1,500,000. Chase National Bank financed the organization of GTE.

Percival E. Jackson, New York, representing one of the GTE stockholders, controlling a small number of the company's bonds, objected to the agreement, alleging that purchasing syndicates formed for the corporation now in receivership, diverted profits to themselves which should have gone to the corporation and its stockholders. He placed these profits at more than $10,000,000. Mr. Jackson volunteered to act as counsel for the receiver to recover the profits.

Meyer Kraushaar, a New York attorney, appeared for the Sabath Congressional Committee, and asked Chief Justice Layton to adjourn the hearing for six weeks in order that he might report the findings of his committee to the court. The scope of his committee he considered "broad enough to cover this situation." Mr. Kraushaar said his committee has investigated the case, but because of the multiplicity of cases involved it was unable to present a report to the court at this time. The committee will start hearings in New York this week.

Chief Justice Layton added that the court would proceed with the hearing.

Ralph S. Harris, New York, numbered among the counsel for Senator Hastings, insisted there is no cause for court action between the receiver and the Chase National Bank and therefore the proposed settlement would be of great benefit to the estate of the receivership.

Robert H. Richards, Wilmington attorney, representing the committee on reorganization for GTE, spoke in favor of the agreement. The committee has approximately $12,000,000 in bonds already on deposit in favor of the reorganization plan.

ST. LOUIS SUIT NEARS END, BUT SIX MORE INVOLVE DISTRIBUTORS

Million Dollar Action in New England; Momand and E. M. Loew Lose Plea to Place Cases Before New York Jury

Government and Defendant Companies Rest in Conspiracy Trial After Brief Rebuttal Testimony by Prosecution

Independent theatre owners further entangled the large distributors in the courts this week on charges alleging violation of the United States anti-trust laws by reputedly conspiring in restraint of trade, acting on several fronts as the Government's case in St. Louis against Warner Bros., Paramount and RKO was about to reach the jury after six weeks.

Morse and Rothenberg Circuit, independent, in New England asked $1,000,000 anti-trust damages of Columbia, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, RKO, 20th Century-Fox, United Artists, Universal and Warner Brothers-First National, and the Shea Circuit and Paramount's Maine and New Hampshire Theatres.

E. M. Loew Circuit, Boston, and A. B. Momand, Oklahoma exhibitor, sought to have their $10,000,000 anti-trust suits brought by the two against Paramount tried before a federal judge and jury in New York, but failed in the move.

The taking of testimony started in Le Dirk Amusement's anti-trust suit, in New Jersey, against Paramount, 20th Century-Fox, RKO Radio and Warner Brothers-First National.

Depositions were taken in St. Louis in the suit brought by the Abraham Lincoln Amusement Company against Paramount.

Major-distributor and circuit defendants in the Vern Brown $424,500 suit in Omaha are expected to answer on Friday.

Defendants Warner Brothers and Paramount and RKO all denied conspiracy in the Government's criminal - indictment St. Louis anti-trust case, and then rested. The Government also rested and the jury was ready to hear the summation and the judge's charge.

In the new court fight launched in New England against the large corporations there was evidence that there might be some sympathy of interest between the plaintiffs Morse and Rothenberg and E. M. Loew and A. B. Momand, inasmuch as George S. Ryan, Boston attorney, was prosecuting the actions for all of them.

Morris and Rothenberg, asking some $100,000 from each of the eight distributor defendants and the two circuits, apparently intend airing their complaints specifically against activities involving the competitive Maine and New Hampshire Theatres, controlling some 40 theatres in New England, and the Shea Circuit. Triple damages and counsel fees are sought under the Sherman Act.

Monopoly and Restraint Charged

Monopoly and restraint of trade are alleged by Morse and Rothenberg in behalf of their Aetna Amusement Enterprises, Inc., and the Commonwealth Amusement Enterprises, Inc., two M. and R. subsidiaries operating, respectively, the Arcadia theatre at Portsmouth, N. H., and the Park Theatre, in Nashua, N. H.

Morse and Rothenberg charge that Maine and New Hampshire Theatres, through their Colonial, Olympia and Portsmouth theatres at Portsmouth, not only demand unreasonable protection, but that the plaintiffs find themselves unable to obtain films that the defendant circuits will not play at their three theatres.

This condition, the complaint says, necessitated the shifting of M. and R.'s Arcadia theatre to a vaudeville policy. Similar charges are made for M. and R.'s Park at Nashua.

Furthermore, it is charged that Shea Chain, Inc., sought to buy the plaintiff's Park theatre for a figure much below its reputed worth, and threatened to see that the Park's city license was revoked if such an arrangement was not consummated, continued the complaint.

On Wednesday, however, Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe in New York, as court officer with jurisdiction over Paramount's bankruptcy proceedings, instructed Mr. Loew and Mr. Momand to liquidate their claims by obtaining court rulings on the validity of their anti-trust actions for triple damages and on which the claims are based.

Both claims, therefore, will have to be liquidated in the federal courts at Boston and Oklahoma City, respectively, and if the exhibitors are successful in obtaining court judgments for sums in excess of what they seek as actual damages, they have been instructed by Judge Coxe to return to him for a ruling as to the amount of claims to be allowed them.

Plaintiffs Morse and Rothenberg are understood to have previously sought relief, but Judge Lowell in United States District Court, at Boston, declined to grant the plaintiffs an injunction against the defendants. The case was not pressed at that time, for several reasons, one being that the plaintiffs felt that no immediate relief seemed possible by that means, it is understood.

If Morse and Rothenberg are at all successful in their New England conspiracy actions, a rapid succession of similar actions in that territory may be looked for, according to exhibitor interests in that section. It was learned that at least three other exhibitor groups already are framing such actions. The general scrapping of clearance and zoning board decisions is held at Boston to be the chief reason for such exhibitor discontent in New England.

Typical of the situation in the territory is the action of the Independent Exhibitors of Massachusetts, an Allied States affiliate, calling a special meeting for Tuesday, November 12th, at headquarters on Shamut Street, Boston, to discuss an alleged extant and increasing product monopoly.

Ryan Acting in Loew and Momand Cases

The decision of E. M. Loew, New England circuit owner, and Oklahoma's A. B. Momand in instructing their attorney, George S. Ryan, to have their anti-trust suits for $10,000,000 against Paramount tried before a federal judge and jury in New York, in the near future, is attributable to their desire not to have adjudication made by a special master.

Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe, of the United States district court at New York, has reserved the right to decide whether the suits may be prosecuted for triple damages, as instituted, or only for single damages, as this phase of the action is based on disputed claims filed by the plaintiffs against Paramount in that corporation's bankruptcy and reorganization proceedings over which Judge Coxe has had and continues to have jurisdiction.

Special Master John E. Joyce, who heard the Loew-Momand anti-trust claims, ruled that only single damages without attorney's fee could be sought of a bankrupt estate.

Objections to Mr. Joyce's report were then filed by Attorney Ryan, for Loew and Momand, and by attorneys for Paramount Receivers Hilles, Leake, Richardson and Zukor, with the result that Judge Coxe reserved the right to determine whether the judgments could be proved in any amount in excess of the actual damages, if any, found to have been sustained by the claimants.

It was said that in endeavoring to have the cases heard by a federal judge and jury in New York, rather than by a special federal court master, Counsel Ryan felt that triple damages and attorney's fee may be included in any settlement obtained. His briefs setting forth his position were forwarded to Federal Judge Coxe in New York last Saturday.

Testimony Taken in Two Cases

The Newark anti-trust action instituted by Le Dirk Amusement Company, against Paramount, 20th Century-Fox, RKO Radio and Warner subsidiaries, reached the point where a special master was appointed to supervise the taking of testimony and depositions in the move made by the defendants, in Newark federal court, to have the complaints quashed on the grounds that the defendants' subsidiaries are not under the jurisdiction of the Newark court.

Before Special Master Jacob Newman, presiding at a hearing at the home office of Warners in New York, Louis Nizer, defense counsel, interrogated Don Jacocks, Warner New Jersey zone theatre head. On hand, besides those mentioned, were Israel B. Greene, counsel for Ledirk; Merritt Lane, of defense counsel, and Harold Bareford and Stuart Aarons, attorneys for Warner Brothers. The taking of testimony will be resumed on November 15th.

Depositions were taken in St. Louis in the injunction and damage suit brought by Abraham Lincoln Amusement Company against Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., for alleged refusal to provide motion pictures to the Lincoln company during the period it sought to operate the Odeon theatre in St. Louis. The house, at the time playing to Negro patronage, has since burned down.

The plaintiff sought this week to obtain depositions from George J. Schaeffer, vice president and general sales manager for Paramount, and Louis Phillips, Paramount counsel, serving them with subpoenas several days ago. However, both claimed immunity to such service as they had entered the jurisdiction of the St. Louis federal court in connection with the government's anti-trust suit against Paramount, Warners and RKO, now on trial.

Omaha Case Up This Week

Following ten days additional time granted defense attorneys in the Vern Brown suit at Omaha for $424,500 damages against the large distributors and some 28 defendants, the defense answer is expected to be heard in Omaha federal court on Friday.

Mr. Brown was formerly manager of the Rialto theatre at Missouri Valley, Iowa, and filed suit last June, charging conspiracy, restraint of trade and conditions which forced him into bankruptcy.

Among the defendants, besides the film distributors, are the Omaha Film Board of Trade, the local MPTO unit and Evert R. Cummings, Omaha district manager for the A. H. Blank Circuit.

The St. Louis Case

The United States Government's federal grand jury trial in St. Louis of Warner Brothers, Paramount and RKO on federal indictment conspiracy charges virtually came to an end suddenly at 11 o'clock on Wednesday morning and the preliminaries of summations and the judge's charge to the jury were about to be disposed of swiftly, paving the way for the passing of judgment by the 12 jurymen.

And in the jury's hands rests the verdict of whether the three distributing corporations and certain of their subsidiaries and officers conspired to prevent a flow of product from reaching the independent Ambassador, New Grand Central and Missouri theatres of the Harry Arthur-Fanchon and Marco interests.

The government first rested its case, tried before Federal Judge George H. Moore, and immediately counsel for the various individual and corporate defendants also announced they rested.

Counsel for the defense then presented once again the demurrers to the government's case and the motions for directed verdicts of not guilty and dismissal of the indictment which Judge Moore overruled two weeks ago at the termination of the government's case in chief.

The government's rebuttal testimony on Wednesday was very brief. Thomas N. Dysart, chairman of the Bondholders Protective Committee; former St. Louis Mayor Frederick H. Kriesmann, a member of that committee, and Joseph Grand, local counsel of the committee, testified that the name of Harry Koplar was not mentioned at various conferences of the committees with Herman Starr and other representatives of Warner Brothers.

John S. Leahy, attorney for Allen L. Snyder, and Edmond Koeln, former city collector and now federal trustee for the St. Louis Fox Theatre, testified that Mr. Arthur was present at the New York Plaza Hotel conference with Ned E. Depinet, president of RKO, on April 7, 1934. Mr. Depinet had testified that he did not see Mr. Arthur at the meeting.

The trial this week reached its most dramatic stage, and its most important, with defense counsel and Department of Justice attorneys interrogating Harry M. Warner, who denied all charges; Herman Starr and Gradwell Sears, both of Warners, who denied threats charged by Government witnesses; and George Schaefer and Neil Agnew, of Paramount, among others.

Briefly, as the case now stands, all of the defense witnesses have denied specific charges or inferences of government witnesses. And, a complete denial was entered of the indictment charges. The combined testimony, in thumbnail, was that Warner Bros. leased the St. Louis Orpheum and Shubert Rialto theatres as their local show windows because they could not get together with the bondholders' committee for the Ambassador, New Grand Central and Missouri theatres on a fair and equitable plan of reorganization; that the theatres were acquired lawfully and that there had not been any collusion among Paramount, RKO and Warners in effectuating any product arrangements, which the complaining independent operators charge deprived them of product for the Ambassador, New Grand Central and Missouri.

"PROFITS ALL GOING TO HOLLYWOOD"

One of the matters emphasized by Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA president, during the field tour which he is now making in the interests of a localized arbitration structure for adjusting trade complaints, is the increasing difficulty experienced by exhibitors in making a profit from their operations, for the reason that all of the returns are going one way—to Hollywood and the producer. The drift of revenue in that direction is taking it away from theatres, in Mr. Kuykendall's opinon, who said they cannot survive if the "lopsided" situation continues. He is stressing the point that circuits are being affected as seriously as independent owners.

While not opposed to percentage pictures as such, the MPTOA president appeared to be firm in his belief that the amount of those percentages at the present time is generally exorbitant and unfair.

President Warner, called to the stand Wednesday afternoon, told dramatically of his personal rise from a newsboy and bootblack to a dominant figure in the motion picture industry; of how with his brothers he had envisioned the possibilities of talking pictures and transformed the business. And he climaxed his short but very inclusive testimony with a positive denial that Warner Brothers, Inc., or any of its officials or agents had entered into an agreement or understanding with RKO Distributing Corporation and Paramount Pictures Distributing Company or the other defendants to corner the motion picture supply for St. Louis or to prevent any other exhibitor from obtaining a supply of pictures.

He recalled that his brothers, Sam and Jack, back in 1912 had produced motion pictures at the Battery A Armory on South Grand boulevard, in St. Louis, making among other pictures "The Perils of the Plains" and "Raiders on the Mexican Border." This reference brought back to many of those present the boast of the late Eddie Dustin that "St. Louis was making motion pictures when Hollywood was a vacant lot."

Mr. Warner told how Sam and Jack later went to California to produce short subjects (comedies) and serials and of the incorporation of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., in 1923. His own motion picture career started in a nickelodeon in New Castle, Pa., back in 1912 and prior to that he had sold pickles and sauerkraut.

The jury hung on Mr. Warner's every word as he tersely told the romantic advent of sound picture development and the important part of Warner Brothers therein; how they gambled with the possibilities of sound when larger companies held off for fear of ruining their investments in connection with silent pictures.

He said that Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., first entered the exhibition field in St. Louis when, late in 1926, they leased the Capitol theatre at Sixth and Chestnut streets to show "Don Juan," a synchronized sound picture and a number of shorts, including the Philharmonic orchestra of 110-pieces. He said that after that engagement Warner Brothers was able to induce Skouras Brothers to put sound equipment in its theatres and then "The Jazz Singer" was given a run at the New Grand Central. Subsequently, in the fall of 1928, Warners bought control of Skouras Brothers Enterprises, which owned the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central and the St. Louis Amusement Company circuit of neighborhood and second-run houses.

He testified that after the properties got into financial difficulties he said that every move made by Warner Brothers through its attorneys, Abel Cary Thomas and Sam B. Jeffries, was intended to save Warner Brothers' large investment there, which he estimated at $4,000,000, and to make the bonds on the theatres valuable to the bondholders and said positively that every move made by Warner Brothers in connection with its various reorganization proposals was made in good faith and that the company was ready, willing and able to perform in the hope that some day it might be able to restore the situation to such an extent it could salvage in part its investments.

On cross-examination he denied that Warner Brothers' investments in first and second mortgage bonds was intended to either harass the bondholders' protective committee's plans or to depress the market for such bonds; the contrary was true, he said, these purchases having a tendency to stiffen values. Warners never sold any of these bonds, he added.

He frankly admitted that he had given orders to Herman Starr and Gradwell Sears and other Warner officials that under no circumstances would Warner Brothers have any business dealings with Harry Koplar or any company in which Mr. Koplar was associated. He said this was due to the litigation against Warner Brothers, which Mr. Koplar is accused of being responsible for. He told of efforts to have him consider a settlement of those suits, but he refused to do so, saying he had stated he would spend every penny he had to disprove the charges made in them.

Chief Aim to Aid Small House

In discussion of the company's decision to develop sound pictures, after Sam Warner had told him he thought he could make the innovation commercially possible, he testified that they were fearful talking pictures would not be accepted by the public because several previous steps in that direction had failed. He added that their chief purpose in developing talking pictures was to enable the smaller theatres to compete with the deluxe houses with their big orchestras and stage shows. However, the introduction of talking between the characters in "The Jazz Singer" changed the entire aspect and then "The Lights of New York," the first all talking picture, was made and became an instantaneous success.

Russell Hardy, special assistant attorney general, objected to any testimony by Mr. Warner mentioned his company had $55,000 invested in the St. Louis deal.

He said that there was nothing that would start Abel Cary Thomas on a storm faster than the mention of Harry Koplar, and that when he learned from Mr. Arthur that Mr. Koplar was in the deal, Mr. Thomas hopped off the couch and talked at some length, expressing his views of Mr. Koplar and troubles he is alleged to have caused the Warners. He added that Mr. Arthur kept insisting there was a war and that it looked like he was the lamb to be slaughtered. 'Well, you were 21 years old and knew what the situation was in St. Louis, or should have.' I suggest that you go to the bondholders' committee, the people you do business with, as there is nothing we can do for you,' Mr. Starr told him. Mr. Sears said that Mr. Starr might have said that it looked to him like a bondholders' committee were trying to perpetuate themselves by Mr. Arthur and Mr. Partington, but he denied other statements credited to Mr. Starr.

Mr. Sears said that he was present at the meeting in Spyros Skouras' room in the Blackstone hotel in Chicago, Ill., on either February 27 or 28, 1933, at which Mr. Skouras and Mr. Starr had an argument concerning Skouras' part in the bondholders' protective committee plan for the reorganization of the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres. He said that Mr. Starr did not approve of what had been done, saying that it looked to him like everybody had been taken care of but Skouras Brothers' Enterprises, a Warner subsidiary.

Cites Heated Argument

He testified that he and Mr. Skouras had had a heated argument at the Blackstone hotel and said that in that conversation he had said that it was evident to him that some one was trying to get Warner Brothers out of St. Louis at one clean sweep, but that they weren't going to succeed. He added that he also had asserted that Warner Brothers would get other theatres and meet any sort of competition that was thrown their way and that if a price war was started and the opposition went down to a 10-cent admission Warners would go right down with them.

Warner, Paramount Close Cases

Warner Brothers and Paramount completed presentation of their cases Friday, each calling three witnesses, as the fifth week of the anti-trust trial was brought to a close. The session was the liveliest yet held and marked by a spirited argument between Judge Moore and Russell Hardy, prosecuting attorney. Mr. Hardy subjected Mr. Schaefer to a protracted memory test.

Judge Moore's argument with Mr. Hardy arose when Mr. Hardy insisted on discussing certain records after the court had ruled them out. Charles Cella, a Warner witness, had produced documents given him by Warners since the company took over operation of the Orpheum and Shubert-Rialto. Counsel Wood asked that the testimony and records of Mr. Cella's theatre be stricken out and Judge Moore held this should be done. The question of the Orpheum data then came up and the court ruled they could be admitted only as to admission prices and not as to daily and weekly grosses.

The lengthy memory test to which Mr. Schaefer was subject concerned the Paramount executive's recollection as to who were present and what was said and done at a Code Authority meeting in New York on March 12, 1934.

Mr. Hardy told the court he was "testing the veracity and memory of the witness in regard to the sale of Paramount product to Warners for St. Louis." Mr. Schaefer had been thoroughly interrogated on his three week vacation in the Roney Plaza Hotel, Miami Beach, Fla., and about conversations he had had with Spyros Skouras and Herman Starr in connection with Paramount's commitments in St. Louis. The witness was pretty sure of what happened in all three instances, but could not recall the Code Authority business of that day.

FIRST FILIPINO FILMS ANNOUNCED

The first Filipino producing company will soon be launched by Parlatone Hispano-Filipino, Inc., of Manila. The company plans to make twelve features next year in Spanish and will aim at all the Latin countries as an outlet for the product. Distribution will be handled by the producers and through a New York company which is not, as yet, selected.

Mr. Starr, who had preceded Mr. Sears to the witness stand, proved anything but the big bad bogey man various Government witnesses had seemed to picture him. He revealed that he came to the motion picture world via a want ad in a New York newspaper in April, 1920, was employed by Warner as a bookkeeper, and he has been with Warner Brothers ever since.

He denied that at the March 1, 1934, meeting he had told Mr. Dysart that Warner Brothers would use every means in its power to keep Fanchon & Marco from getting pictures, but that he had said Warner Brothers would get a theatre to show their pictures. He also denied that he had referred to Fanchon & Marco as "fly-by-nights," saying he had spoken favorably of their experience as vaudeville people, but doubted their ability to handle so large a deal as that with the committee. Likewise he denied that he asserted Warner Brothers would prevent any other lessee from operating the theatres successfully.

Mr. Schaefer, who said he is 47, was on the stand for two and a half hours. He gave an account of his schooling and said that he first started to work at 17, when he joined an oil refining company as stenographer. He said he joined Paramount in the fall of 1920 as salesman. Categorical denials to all charges in the indictment of January 11, 1935, were made by the Paramount officer as well as all statements attributed to him in Mr. Arthur's testimony. Mr. Schaefer said he had had no telephone conversation with Arthur between March 6 and March 10, 1934, nor before April 1.

The conference referred to was the one in which Mr. Arthur testified he told Mr. Schaefer, "You told me you weren't going to sell Warners in St. Louis." The Paramount vice-president also denied having remarked, "They put the pressure on us because they threatened to upset our Detroit reorganization plans and this circuit is being carried on the books for $14,000,000."

Mr. Schaefer said new leasing arrangements with the landlords of the Detroit houses had been completed in 1933 and this group of theatres has been on the books at no higher than $5,000,000. He later testified he had been in Detroit on March 13, 1934, accompanied by Frank Freeman and Sam Dembow, for a conference with George Trendle on the theatre situation in that city.

He said Mr. Arthur had been anxious to get Paramount pictures for the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central, but he had had to turn the offer down. Mr. Schaefer further testified he had told Mr. Arthur that if he wanted the company's pictures so badly he should have come to him before signing the lease, to see whether Paramount product was available. He admitted trying to help Mr. Arthur out with Warners. Unable to contact Harry M. Warner, who was out of the city at the time, Mr. Schaefer said he talked to Mr. Starr, who told him nothing could be done.

"Good Business Deal"

Mr. Schaefer testified the Warner deal was "good business." He also gave the same reason for the contract with F. & M. for "Belle of the Nineties" at the Missouri. When Mr. Hardy asked him whether it was the fact that the Warner circuit had bought Paramount product and the Paramount circuit had taken Warner films had anything to do with the St. Louis sale, he said it had. He also brought out that Warners had been the first to make a bid. The prosecutor pointed out Warners had not had the three houses at the time. Mr. Schaefer answered, "Neither did F. & M."

Neither Paramount nor Mr. Schaefer ever had bought any bonds in the local theatres, the witness said and the product deal with Warners had not been made for the purpose of "cornering the market"; the St. Louis situation had never been discussed by him with Adolph Zukor, Sam Dembow, Ralph Kohn, A. W. Smith or Albert Warner.

Mr. Agnew was the next and last witness. He was on the stand for about a half hour. As had Mr. Schaefer, he denied the indictment charges and other allegations. He said he never had told Mr. Arthur that Warners probably would turn the Paramount deal down because of the stiff prices asked; that he was Santa Claus, or that he ever had disparaged F. & M. or threatened anyone.

He explained the reason for turning down Mr. Arthur on second runs was because it was felt that if the product played at the Missouri, the St. Louis Amusement Co. and other subsequent houses would be affected. Some of the circuit's houses had been sold on percentage and the revenue would have been reduced if such a scale had been made, he said. He conceded he had told Mr. Arthur that Warners had until August 15 to sign and that he could not sell away until that date. Silver and Bond negotiated the contract for Warners, he said.

The Paramount sales manager said he had never told Mr. Arthur that Paramount had received $71,000 for its product in 1933. Instead, he testified, the company got $140,000. Mr. Hardy, on cross-examination, asked Mr. Agnew about three questions.

After Mr. Cella, Warners put on the stand Miles Alben, home office attorney, who had attended several meetings on reorganization plans for the three theatres. He was examined by Wood on charges allegedly made by Mr. Starr at sessions with J. M. Ulmer, Cleveland lawyer; Mr. Dysart and Joseph Grand. He emphatically denied all allegations. Mr. Hardy asked him one question. That was how long he had been with Warners. He answered, "Since 1929."

Arthur Simpson of the legal firm of Jeffries, Simpson & Plummer, likewise said he had never heard Mr. Starr make any threats or charges at meetings in the Grand office on April 5, 1934, and Dysart's office on June 6.

George L. Weigand, treasurer of the St. Louis Amusement Company, was the last Warner witness. He testified to a list of pictures which had played eight first-runs since August 15, 1932, to January 10, 1935. There was a total of 422, he said, shown at the Ambassador, Missouri, Fox, State, Grand Central, St. Louis, Shubert-Rialto and Orpheum. The witness said the information had been obtained from ads in Sunday papers.

Joint Defense Rests

With the completion of RKO'S case and the introduction of exhibits by Warners and Paramount, the joint defense rested on Tuesday.

Ned E. Depinet and Cresson E. Smith were the only RKO witnesses to testify. RKO attorneys were satisfied.

Harry Koplar's appearance in court, under subpena, for the first time since the anti-trust trial began six weeks ago, caused some excitement.

Both Mr. Depinet and Mr. Smith denied they had refused to sell Arthur in St. Louis because of Mr. Koplar or anyone else. The RKO president said that when Mr. Arthur came to him to negotiate, the product already had been committed to Warners. He then related the difficulties experienced with Famous Amusement Co., which operated the St. Louis. Mr. Depinet also told of the alleged troubles with Mr. Arthur when the latter joined Koplar. Particular disagreement arose over collection of weekly short subject payments and inaccurate percentage reports.

The RKO head said that when he committed the pictures to Warners he "sold to the best customer," Mr. Arthur having previously given him reason to believe he was dissatisfied. "I also sold Warners because I thought them the best account under the circumstances," Mr. Depinet testified. He added that RKO sells to Milton B. Arthur, Harry's brother, in Massachusetts, California, Utah and other places and that there is "no proscription against the Arthurs."

"I don't believe I every sold Arthur, but I would have no objection in so doing. If the pictures are open in his territory, I would be glad to deal with him," he explained.

Smith Denies Statements

Mr. Smith also held that statements attributed to him by Mr. Arthur were erroneous. He said Arther never came to his office in July, but it was the latter part of August and that the conversation pivoted about second runs in St. Louis. The RKO southern and western division manager said that when the first Government witness conferred with him Mr. Arthur mentioned his intention to reopen the Missouri and Grand Central as second-runs. He wanted to know if he could get pictures. Mr. Smith said he told Mr. Arthur of negotiations with the St. Louis Amusement Co., and would inform him of the status of the deal.

"I did not promise to sell him," Mr. Smith testified, "and when Arthur called me a week later I told him RKO was selling to Nelson Sunliff, trustee for the local suburban circuit." Denial was also made that he had told Mr. Arthur that Warners objected to a second-run deal with F. & M. He said, "We conduct our own business and don't ask Warners what to do."

TAX REDUCTION IS PROPOSED IN SPAIN

Minister of Finance Chapaprieta of Spain has presented to the Cortes a decree, effective January 1, calling for a reduction from 7½ per cent to 4 per cent of the gross turnover tax on films, and to 1½ per cent on films made in Spain.

The decree is considered a victory for the Camara Defensa Cinematografica. The measure, if passed by Parliament, is expected to save distributors thousands of dollars in taxes.

In rebuttal, Russell Hardy brought in the testimony of Mr. Smith before the grand jury.

Questioned Koplar Bid

Emphasizing that no direct request had been made to him, the witness said he had not believed Koplar's $80,000 offer for second-runs was bona fide because, "I don't know how they could have paid this sum when they couldn't pay $60,000 for first-runs. I didn't think it was a genuine offer.

Mr. Depinet recited in detail the experiences RKO had with Mr. Koplar in several dealings, the asserted trouble on "Little Women," and how the reductions and cancellations of features and shorts cost RKO more than $20,000.

The RKO president explained that although the films were originally bought for the St. Louis when Mr. Koplar had it, and the only reason Mr. Koplar got it for that house was because Julius Glazer and Aaron Waldheim signed as guarantors, that they had been switched with his permission to the Fox Missouri, Ambassador and Grand Central.

Mr. Arthur, the witness said, had complained of losing $33,000 on RKO product, and "if we gave him our pictures for nothing he would just break even."

He said up to Dec. 8, 1932, RKO had operated the St. Louis. When the circuit lost the house it took the Missouri, which it held until April 30, 1933. On April 1, 1933, a deal was made for RKO first-runs with Clarence M. Turley and Spyros Skouras, acting for Tom K. Smith, receiver for the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central. The agreement provided for a four-month playing arrangement with two yearly options, he said.

Mr. Depinet insisted he never made a contract with Mr. Arthur. He declared he committed the company's output to Warners on March 29, 1934, after Clayton Bond and Joseph Bernhard had conferred with him.

The only time he talked to Mr. Arthur about St. Louis, Mr. Depinet said, was on the phone after the Warner commitment. The F. & M. head apparently wanted to confirm a report he had heard on the street, the witness said, but he never suggested buying the pictures.

"Even if he did I couldn't have sold him. I couldn't sell twice in the same situation," the RKO chief explained. Mr. Depinet gave his picture of what transpired at the Plaza hotel session in New York on April 7, last year.

He said John S. Leahy advised him the contract signed with Warners was illegal "and apparently wanted me to break it and sell to his clients." In answer to a question put by George S. Leisure, Mr. Depinet denied Mr. Leahy ever mentioned "Arthur is a long-standing friend," adding he has known the F. & M. head about 10 years and the acquaintanceship "has not been intimate."

Between 10,000 and 14,000 contracts are sold annually by RKO, Mr. Depinet testified, and so far this season about 9,000 have been signed, 600 of which were closed in March.

"We have no rules about selling. We keep our sales force working around the calendar. Our business is like the newsboy who sells his paper every day, including Sunday," Depinet said. After preliminary talks, the RKO president dropped out of the Warner deal, he declared.

Mystified, and admitting it frankly in open court, Mr. Hardy told Mr. Depinet that he could not understand why RKO, if it did have trouble with Famous Amusement Co. and Koplar, should refuse to sell F. & M. Leisure again objected and was upheld.

Rogers Memorial Fund Drive Starts

With Vice-President John Nance Garner acting as chairman, with more than 15,000 banks throughout the country ready to serve as depositories and with the official sanction of the Governors of forty-seven states, the nation-wide campaign to raise funds for a perpetual memorial to Will Rogers got under way Monday, the fifty-sixth anniversary of the birth of the late humorist.

The campaign is beginning with the single object of providing an opportunity for the countless friends and admirers of Rogers to participate in the creation of a permanent memorial. Those in charge of raising the fund have set no monetary goal and no quota is to be reached and as yet no decision has been made as to the form the memorial will take other than it will not be "a cold shaft of marble, or a dead lump of bronze."

To focus national attention on the opening of the campaign, a one-hour radio program in tribute to the late comedian was presented last Saturday night over the combined complete networks of the National Broadcasting Company and the Columbia Broadcasting System. The program, which originated in New York, was also broadcast abroad and George M. Cohan acted as master of ceremonies with the speakers including former President Herbert Hoover, Lady Astor from England, Captain Eddie Rickenbacker and Harold Talbott. Music was furnished by the orchestras of Rudy Vallee and Frank Black.

President Roosevelt's message, in the form of a letter written to Mr. Garner, was read from Washington by Jesse Jones, Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, who is serving as treasurer of the Will Rogers Memorial Commission. A letter was also read from the Prince of Wales.

Mutiny on the Bounty

(MGM)

Melodrama

Thousands of theatre goers, made familiar with the story through reading the novel, and hosts of exhibitors equally familiar with the production through advance announcements are looking forward to this picture. "Mutiny on the Bounty" is melodrama, the ripping, tearing power of which leaves one breathless. There's no sugar or syrup to it. There are only a few semi-romantic recognitions of love interest and one that is entirely passionate. Always, until the final sequence, it is a melodrama of man's cruelty to man and man's rebellion to cruelty.

Expensively produced, not one single detail necessary to emphasize the motivating story in all its vividness being ignored, the show is a remarkable demonstration of complete picture making technique. It puts right up to the individual showmen the responsibility of selling a valuable piece of screen merchandise, which is almost sure to encounter some adverse reaction on the part of the public, in the same courageous, straight-from-the-shoulder manner in which it was made.

The Bounty, a British warship, sails from London to the South Seas, its crew composed of men who are either products of the slums or jailbirds, or torn from their homes and families. Captain Bligh, a perfect symbol of vicious naval discipline, is in command; Fletcher Christian is executive officer and Byam, steeped in the tradition of Britain's sea power, a midshipman. At once Bligh, recognizing that only through fear and cruelty can his riffraff crew be made competent seamen, starts his continued rounds of floggings, starvings, spread-eaglings and killings that rouse his desperate crew to terrorized fury. Amid magnificent picturizations of the sea episodes in storm, fair weather and calm, the hell ship reaches Tahiti. Christian, openly and secretively, has tried to soften Bligh's harshness. In Tahiti the crew revels in association with native women and there is a semblance of legitimate romance between Byam and Movita. Christian through the kindly offices of the Chief, is permitted to land. His association with Mamo, a glorious dream to her, is that of passion of a man long confined.

The Bounty again sails. Bligh's cruelty becomes more vicious. Part of the crew, led by Christian, mutinies. Bligh and his loyal but still fearful supporters, who dread the vengeance of the Navy more than they do a continuation of his harshness, are set adrift to make their epic crossing of thousands of miles of open ocean in a small boat. Byam is made the captive of Christian and his mutineers. Back to Tahiti goes the Bounty, where the men again mingle with the natives, and a child is born to Christian and Mamo. Comes Bligh in another ship to capture the mutineers. Warned, Christian and his crew sail away. Byam, Ellison, Muspratt and several others, taken by Bligh, are placed in irons as Bligh scours the seas in search of the Bounty. Wrecking his ship, his iron will making him impervious to the pleadings of fellow officers to give up the chase, he is returned to England where Byam and his mates are tried and convicted of mutiny. Meanwhile, Christian, finding the inaccessible haven of Pitcairn's Island, burns the Bounty so that there can never be hope of escape or discovery of the survivors of the mutiny and their native women wives and friends.

Flashing back to England, the story tells how Byam, being asked if he has anything to say before sentence, unfolds the tale of Bligh's cruelty. Itself a condemnation of the man and his methods, it is a more bitter condemnation of the methods whereby England recruited its Navy. As a result, the days of fierce cruelty are forever ended and Byam, pardoned by the crown, is welcomed back to his ship, the crew thrilling to a new spirit of patriotism as the fleet takes off to the Mediterranean to "sweep the seas for England."

Few pictures have had such stark stuff for their ingredients as is the substance of "Mutiny on the Bounty." It's men on a boat at sea; desperate, dangerous passions seethe, hope dies and men give up their spirit under the lash of fury. It's strong and meaty. But Laughton is a villain for everybody to hate; Gable is a real man who is sure to win everybody's admiration, and Tone is the hero out of whose words a new British navy was born. As there is but meager love interest in the light of a selling factor, there is also comparatively little comedy, which is contributed by Herbert Mundin. The entire crew will win universal sympathy.

The picture will take its audiences on a vivid journey, through a series of imagination-shattering melodramatic incidents over wide expanses of ocean to strange lands and strange people. With artistic camera work making the entire production a photographic masterpiece, the illusions it creates are as vivid and impressive as its realisms.

In every way the picture is worthy of and demands the best of showmanship brains and ability. So much that is new has been placed at one's disposal that its selling resolves itself into a knowledge and understanding of local reactions. Sure to be widely talked about, with discussions coming from angles ordinarily not interested as well as those vitally interested in motion pictures, the more interest can be stimulated, no matter from what source and in what manner, the greater the results should be.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Comedy Romance

This is comedy romance with a definite farce tinge shaped to a novel, unconventional pattern. It is spun, in character of story content and production technique, of factors that have sound showmanship and exploitation quality. Its principal appeal is unique and amusing fun. Occasions for laughter crop up continually and effectively in situations, action and dialogue, with the surprise climax something that should have audiences in a welter of glee.

In the picture, Carol Corliss is a top line picture star, whose chain of personal appearances has resulted in a nervous breakdown. She is forced by Dr. Sylvester to don a gawkish disguise and urged by him to mingle with the common horde in order to regain her composure. As the story moves through a series of exciting but slowly tempoed situations—shortcomings that will be eliminated—the disguised Carol and Emory Muir are brought together.

Moving into an isolated, beautiful mountain lake setting, the picture takes on its true fast moving comedy character. Carol has fallen in love with Emory. Though she endeavors to maintain her disguise, Emory one morning has the thrilling pleasure of witnessing the metamorphosis of the ugly duckling into a ravishingly beautiful creature while she is taking a swim. Tossing aside all pretext, Carol endeavors to convince the unbelieving but actually wise Emory, of her true identity. In effect the situation is reversed. No matter what proof Carol presents, Emory scorns her as he sets about to tame the temperamental lass. Even when her erstwhile leading man, Jay Holmes, who is frantically in love with her, appears. Emory, now in love himself, takes it upon himself to scare that worthy away from the hectic but idyllic paradise of romance by making him believe that Carol is a mad woman.

Reading that one of her pictures is being shown in a neighboring small town theatre, she takes Emory there in the hope that seeing her on the screen will prove finally convincing as to who she is. Making a personal appearance, she is mobbed by autograph seekers. Still Emory sneers. Heartbroken, little mountain girl Minna is the one who comes to Carol's rescue. The simple mountain folk, having high moral standards, are shocked that two unmarried folk should be occupying a cabin. As Sheriff Twing, with the assistance of Parson Lunk, arranges a shotgun wedding, the studio mob who have discovered Carol's whereabouts arrive in force, with Jay Holmes. Though Carol and Jay sign the marriage papers, she and Emory are married.

The scene shifts to Hollywood. As Carol starts work on a new picture, the publicity departments make hot copy of her rumored marriage. Still Emory considers it all a gag, only to come to her, interrupt production and finally take her as his wife.

The picture, while being different in every way from those featuring Miss Rogers and Fred Astaire, does provide Ginger with ample opportunity to exercise her singing and dancing forte. This being of accepted audience and showmanship value, the unique comedy character of the story assures plenty of opportunity for novel

Musical Romance

Actually this is two stories. The first, moving in the atmosphere of grand opera and operatic music, carries a romantic love theme which culminates in the tragedy of war, as the husband is killed. In this phase, George Houston's operatic singing is the dominating feature. Then, atmospheric interludes illustrating the horrors of war as experienced by the civilian population, Josephine Hutchinson is compelled to place her baby in the custody of a Dominican convent. All this serving substantially as a prelude, the production then enters its second phase and becomes a separate story of mother love and sacrifice to be near and to mold her son's future.

Becoming a novice in the convent, Miss Hutchinson, whose work is always sincere and convincing, furtively discovers the key to her child's identity. Treated kindly, given opportunity to work in the nursery, she endeavors to steal the child, but is prevented by the arrival of a nun. Then many years pass during which Miss Hutchinson becomes an acclaimed concert pianist. During the time, through agencies, she has endeavored to find trace of her son. Simultaneously with a bid to return to Italy, comes news that the boy has been found.

In Italy, at a reception given by John Halliday and his wife Mona Barrie, who are considered the boy's parents, she meets David Scott, her son. A strange bond of attachment springs up between the two although Miss Hutchinson never reveals the relationship; happiness comes to her with the opportunity to undertake her ambition to mold the boy's career. But, to be constantly near him, it becomes necessary for her to undertake a seemingly clandestine romance with Halliday. The incident, when brought to Mona Barrie's attention, results in dramatic conflict in which, while the statement never is made, Miss Barrie understands who the boy's mother is.

As she accedes to Miss Hutchinson's pleadings to let the boy follow an operatic career for which he has demonstrated remarkable talent, Miss Hutchinson's triumph comes when she hears the boy sing the same aria on the same stage where she first met his father and love was born.

For commercial purposes, the feature is distinctively a woman's picture inasmuch as it deals in sympathy stirring elements which have a quick appeal to womanhood. It does, however, support those values with a wholesome romantic prelude which, though culminating in a probably last-night-of-life liaison, does not detract from the picture's moral value. The second and more important phase of the show being serious in character, there is naturally no room for any lightening comedy contrast. This necessary element is established by the quality of music as represented by Houston's baritone singing and Miss Hutchinson's piano playing.

Void of exploitation possibilities, save those which may be suggested by the title significance in relation to the mother love and sacrifice theme, reliance should be placed upon convincingly prepared but not too stilted advertising and publicity copy to engender popular interest.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Peter Ibbetson

(Paramount)

Dramatic Romance

Here is a picture that, in power of story content, class of action, worth of production values and power to play upon the most sensitive emotions, contains potential thrills for those portions of audiences who understand and appreciate the value of fine things. In the same sense it is a picture that will require application of the keenest showmanship acumen in order to arouse enthusiasm among the masses. The story is an ethereal and almost spiritualistic conception of a great love, which nevertheless is sincerely human. Courageously departing from formula, eschewing anything that condescends to theatrical artificiality in order to bring it within the realm of socalled popular screen material, it depends solely upon its story worth and accomplished acting performances by the two leading players and the featured support, in bidding for public favor.

In common verbiage "Peter Ibbettson" is a graphic and imagination-stimulating portrayal of the adage, "Stone walls do not a prison make." In that conception it is a story of a great love that would not be denied even though in painting the picture, production and directing technique must be brave to get out of the beaten path and evolve something that is completely new.

As it begins, with two youngsters, Virginia Weidler and Dickie Moore, contributing really remarkable performances, the two child lovers pledge their eternal troth. Years pass. Peter Ibbetson, now a successful architect, and Mary, wife of the Duke of Towers, again meet to realize that they are the Minsey and Gogo of long ago's idyllic love. The Duke does not understand. Murder bent, he is killed by Peter. Sentenced to prison for life, Peter, despised, derided and almost done to death by fellow convicts, falls asleep and dreams.

Then, with the story taking on its ethereal aspect, Peter's dream becomes real. Mary appears while he is deliriously wandering in the gardens of their childhood, and to prove to him that it is not a vision she gives him a ring. Actually, Mary has delivered the ring to Peter's prison doctors and with its aid he is able to conjure up all the beautiful dreams of the future together they planned as children. A lifetime passing, the ring loses its mystic power. Unable to bring the image of Mary to him, Peter dies. Simultaneously, Mary, whose lifetime thoughts have been Peter's dreams, passes to a world where they will always be together in happiness.

Intelligent showmanship is absolutely necessary to concentrate popular attention on this unusual feature. That the thinking folk will get it is hardly to be questioned. But as in most cases their numbers are limited, the show's commercial success is a matter of accepting the values that are presented and explaining them to the public in a manner that, while dignified and sincere, is not so highbrow as to scare the masses away.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Annie Oakley

(Radio)

Dramatic Romance

A showmanship show, containing plenty that is new and different to please audiences and quite enough to engage active exploitation interest, there's little doubt that this will be an entertainment and commercial success. Smartly directed, well acted, given the benefit of better than usual production value support, fast moving in dialogue and action, it consists of elements presented in a novel manner that have often demonstrated their worth. Fundamentally the show is a dramatic romance. It is unusual in that it moves in a unique setting. Semi-historical in many of its phases, this quality, while interesting and poignant, is secondary to the love story, which has a great deal of human character and is told in a natural and human manner, certain to be understood and appreciated by class and mass alike. Yet the substantiating quality of the showmanship setting is the angle in which exhibitors will find the main outlet for exploitation activity.

As the show opens, the time coinciding with Annie Oakley's career, Toby Taylor, crack marksman, is touring the sticks with a vaudeville show. Bored with Taylor's boasting, MacIvor bets that he can produce a better shot. When Annie arrives in answer to his desperate call, he is just as amazed as Taylor. But, although Annie proves all that MacIvor hoped, she permits her infatuation for Taylor, whose poster pictures she has long admired, to let him win the shoot. The match, seen by Hogarth, scout for Buffalo Bill's circus, results in their both being signed for the show.

With romantic complications for Hogarth and Taylor entering, Colonel Cody sees a great attraction in Annie, and as Chief Sitting Bull and Rain in the Face are brought in, the show moves off on its tour. Cocky Taylor gets jealous of Annie's professional reputation, a fact that is greedily seized upon by the circus press agent and leads to the staging of a running contest for the world's championship. The match is won by Annie and gets her top billing. An accident to Taylor ends his shooting career, but he sticks to the show just to be near Annie. Hogarth, however, succeeds in having him let out. The show moves to Europe, with broken-hearted Annie meeting new triumphs as she is acclaimed by the then Prince of Wales and the ex-Kaiser. Her triumphs, however, cannot make her forget her love for Taylor. When the circus comes back to America, she instigates a search for him and with the help of Sitting Bull finds him running a shooting gallery, to which she retires after marriage.

This brief sketch does not by any means include any of the color that backgrounds the action. But if those settings can be imagined and the value of the features, romance, drama, comedy, thrill, excitement, pageantry and atmosphere understood and the smash application of them, in connection with the values which the cast names represent, there is opportunity for an interest stimulating advance campaign.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Stars Over Broadway

(Warner)

Musical

Showmanship essentials, most of which are of established value but the most important new, are included in this picture. Basically it is a musical in which this feature is presented through operatic, classical, ragtime, sacred and popular specialty features. The motivation is a dramatic story of sensational career building in which are intelligently combined the elements of comedy, complicated romance, surprising twists, suspense, disappointment as it regards swell-headed lack of appreciation with eventual triumph for those directly concerned. While the featured player is one whose name is recnized, the actual central character, James Melton, is comparatively new to feature fans. Another active principal, Jane Froman, also is new. Both are vocalists of exceptional ability, a fact that has definite value in relation to music lovers which, in recognition of the manner in which they are presented, also means much for the rank and file of patrons.

In the story, its primary locale in Jack Dempsey's (he being shown) Cafe in New York establishes the topical timeliness. Al McGillevray, a pest promoter, always looking for the contact that will ride him to fame and fortune, is on the verge of rubbing himself out as a failure. In his hotel, he hears a voice singing a hillbilly number. Sensing the thing he always has ambitioned, he signs Jan to a contract. Going to work at any task he can find, he finances Jan's musical education. At an amateur radio broadcast, after the pair have walked out on a successful grand opera tryout, Nora Wyman, also ambitious for a career, is introduced and there is a hint of romance between her and Jan. Through the connivance of song plugger Offkey Cramer, Jan gets an opportunity to sing in Luigi's cafe, where he amazes the skeptics.

The rush to fame and fortune for both, via Jan's radio singing, is sensational. But the fact that he is a featured performer takes Jan's mind off Nora, and he goes the way of all big headed flesh, eventually to wind up a bust as he falls for the lure of wine, women and the bright lights. The tragedy to McGillevray is sincere pathos, but it is contrasted by the sentimental affection that grows up between him and Nora. As Jan hits the rocks, McGillevray's real character comes to the surface as he gives his last penny to Minotti to take Jan to Italy to try to restore his voice.

In the meantime, Nora is pleading with McGillevray to give her a chance. Hearing her sing an "Ave Maria" at a church service, he, realizing the dangers lying ahead of any one climbing to success on Broadway, has her convinced that she lacks ability. Rushing to the climax, Jan, who has discovered what his erstwhile manager has done for him, zooms back to fame as an operatic star, to be followed by the restoration of the old McGillevray-Jan partnership and Mac convincing Nora that her career will be most happy as his wife.

The elements of which the production is composed in story, musical and production values being those which have general popular appeal, with the various types of music featured a sure interest to widely varied audience tastes, the manner of applying them to arouse attention is generally understood. Yet while most of the cast is well known, there should be a concentration on James Melton and in a lesser way on Jane Froman. Melton seems to have the stuff in looks, personality and vocal ability to go far on the screen as a commercial asset.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Music Hath Charms

(Associated British Pictures)

Musical Comedy

The effect of broadcast music on the lives of typical members of the community is the theme of this British production, in which the leading figures are Henry Hall, dance band leader of the British Broadcasting Corporation, and his musicians. The idea, good in itself, is unevenly developed, some of the scenes being very funny and some so crude that one cannot imagine the film appealing to American audiences without considerable cutting or, better still, retakes.

One of the episodes features a young couple, who have been parted by their quarrelsome parents and bullied into a breach of promise dispute. In court, a radio set which the boy has given the girl is an "exhibit." It is accidentally put into action and the dance music sets the judge and all others swaying and brings the case to an end. In another episode the dance strains change a war chant of savages, hemming in two explorers, into a dance of friendship; in another they prevent a cruising flirtation from becoming something worse.

The court scene is excellently done, and genuinely amusing also are a series of shots showing a traffic cop and others conducting their daily activities to the rhythm of the music. Another clever scene shows how the band, late for an engagement at the studio, carry on by converting a piano solo into a duet, quartet, quintet and so on until the whole bunch is playing. Against this is some incredibly vapid dialogue and a more or less meaningless episode of a boy and girl rescued from death on a mountaineering trip.—ALLAN, London.

Produced and distributed by Associated British Picture Corporation. Screen play by L. de Garde Peach. Supervising director, Thomas Bentley. A Thousand Dollars A Minute

(Republic)

Comedy

Hilarious situations, capably handled by a competent cast, keynote this production, and those exhibitors that place more than the usual amount of effort on emphasizing the unique and satisfying comedy should profit accordingly. The campaign that will draw early audiences should be the type concentrated on, for word-of-mouth advertising should do the rest.

The picture abounds with exploitation material. The story itself—the plot centers upon the idea of whether or not it is possible to spend one thousand dollars a minute for twelve consecutive hours—appears to be an excellent hook on which to hang one's campaign.

The cast is composed of well known names such as Roger Pryor, Leila Hyams, Edgar Kennedy, Edward Brophy and Sterling Holloway, and the mere mention of several of these signifies comedy.

In addition, there is the fact that the film is adapted from a story by Everett Freeman that appeared in The Saturday Evening Post.

The direction of Aubrey Scotto never allows the action to slacken its pace one bit once the story starts moving, and every ounce of humor is drained from every scene. The photography of Ernest Miller and Jack Marta and the production values of the picture are first rate.

Roger Pryor, a newspaper man who can't hang on to his own money no matter how hard he tries, suddenly finds he has all he can spend, and at times more than he can possibly spend no matter how hard he tries.

Fired from his paper when he sends a substitute to cover a bank robbery that breaks out as he is about to take Leila Hyams to dinner, Pryor goes to Big Jim's gambling casino to try and win enough money to pay a taxi bill he owes Sterling Holloway. Losing what little he has, Pryor is on his way out when the owner of the place and Russell Hicks enlist his aid in settling a bet they have made over whether it is possible to spend a thousand dollars a minute for twelve hours, and Pryor sets out, accompanied by Edward Brophy, to see if he can do it.

From this point on the story abounds in wild humor and wilder complications as Pryor embarks on his spending orgy in jewelry stores, fur shops, liquor stores and other places where he buys a yacht, a tractor, a car, a dog, an elephant, an airplane, a racehorse and other articles.

The police, suspicious of the reporter's sudden affluence, suspect him in connection with the bank robbery he was supposed to cover, and begin chasing him all over town. Pryor and Brophy, while fleeing from a policeman, in the person of Edgar Kennedy, wreck their car and wind up in the hospital with all but $25.000 of the money spent. The racehorse wins a

The Bishop Misbehaves

(MGM)

Comedy

The Broadway stage play of last season is here brought to the screen with Edmund Gwenn in Walter Connolly's role of the bishop whose library is stacked high with detective fiction and who eagerly grasps the opportunity to do some sleuthing on his own. The picture is replete with comedy situations, capably handled. The picture is real patron fare and just the sort of comedy that has proved its worth in the past. All the ingredients for a successful farce are there, combining appealing, sympathetic and romantic comedy into a fast moving story.

In certain situations it would be well to indicate that the picture is not a religious one, as might be supposed from the title. It is straight comedy with the title's application to the story revolving around the bishop, who happily makes the most of a situation which involves him in a criminal plot, taking upon himself the task of solving the mystery in the manner of a Philo Vance or a Sherlock Holmes. The bishop proves himself quite a hand at the business of detecting but it is not all gravy, for in several sequences he comes out second best, much to his discomfort.

Edmund Gwenn, admirably suited to the role of the bishop, makes the character appealing and likely to capture the fancy of audiences. Maureen O'Sullivan, who plays the heroine, proves herself a versatile actress, as proficient in comedy as she has been in drawing room roles of previous pictures, notably "Anna Karenina." The cast also has Norman Foster as the hero and Lucile Watson, Reginald Owen, Dudley Digges and Lillian Bond.

In the story Maureen O'Sullivan, her father in need of money for medical attention, sets out to rob Reginald Owen. Owen cheated her father of interests in certain patents. Maureen gets the help of Melville Cooper, Owen's chauffeur, and of Dudley Digges, proprietor of a "pub" known as the Red Lion. Maureen becomes acquainted with Norman Foster, an American on a walking tour of England's countryside, and learning that he hails from Chicago, she enlists his aid in the conspiracy. Another conspirator is included in the person of Charles McNaughton.

The robbery takes place in the Red Lion when Owen's chauffeur makes certain the car carrying Owen and his wife (Lillian Bond) to a dance has a blowout. Foster does the actual robbing and hides the swag in a beer mug, after tying up Owen, his wife and Digges. Digges is bound, as part of the plan. The bishop enters the "pub," senses something amiss, and discovers much to convince him that the Red Lion has been the scene of unusual happenings. Finding Owen, his wife and the proprietor, the bishop frees them. Later the perpetrators of the robbery, with the exception of Miss O'Sullivan and Foster, who to establish an alibi are attending a dance, look for the loot in the mug but find, instead, the bishop's calling card.

Arriving at the bishop's home Digges and McNaughton break in, confront the bishop and demand the money. They are followed shortly by Miss O'Sullivan and Foster. The bishop, getting the drop on Digges and McNaughton, locks them in the cellar. Maureen and Foster tell the bishop what prompted them to commit the robbery and he agrees to help them. Owen arrives and demands his stolen property. The bishop will hand over the property only on condition that Owen makes good the money he owes Maureen's father. Meanwhile Digges escapes, finds the money and departs.

There follows a series of fast-moving scenes which eventually end with the money recovered. Owen, having a change of heart, agrees to repay Maureen's father for the stolen patents. The bishop, his thirst for sleuthing appeased, destroys that part of his library containing detective lore.—MOONEY, New York.

Rendezvous

(MGM)

Mystery-Comedy

Exhibitors here are presented with new and powerful exploitation material on which to exert their showmanship ability to its fullest extent.

The film, for its fundamental motivating theme, utilizes a subject whose surface of screen entertainment values scarcely has been scratched—the activities of the cryptographic bureau, that branch of the United States Secret Service whose duty it was during the World War to code and decode friendly and enemy messages. The background of the film is unquestionably authentic, since it is adapted from the novel, "American Black Chamber," written by Major Herbert O. Yardley, who was head of the department during the World War, and who, incidentally, lends exhibitors additional exploitation angles by his recent writings in Liberty and The Saturday Evening Post and by his broadcasts over the major radio networks, all on the subject with which the picture deals.

Before this background is placed William Powell, with all his pleasing urbanity, poise, and cinematic detective powers, aided and abetted most capably by Rosalind Russell and other excellent cast names, such as Binnie Barnes, Cesar Roemro, Sterling Holloway, Lionel Atwill and Charles Grapewin.

The story concerns the efforts of Powell, an ex-newspaperman and expert on codes and cyphers, to decode enemy messages intercepted by the Intelligence Department, and the combined efforts of all to prevent the destruction of the American troop ships en route to France by German submarines.

Through this pattern runs the thread of the light romance between Powell and Miss Russell, a romance more than apt to remind audiences of Powell's previous effort, "The Thin Man," and consequently one upon which showmen can depend.

Director William K. Howard has taken all these ingredients and combined them with marked dexterity, never allowing the action to lag at any point. William Daniels' photography is commendable and in general the production values of the picture are excellent.

At the entrance of the United States into the World War, Powell resigns his position on a Washington newspaper and enlists for service overseas. He accidentally meets Miss Russell and reveals to her that he is really an expert on code and cyphers, the very man for whom the Intelligence Department has been searching, but one who wants action in the trenches instead of behind a desk.

As a result he winds up behind the desk at the War Department, working on enemy code messages, and trying to prevent himself from falling in love with Miss Russell.

The story from this point on tells of the efforts of a German spy ring in America to learn information of troop movements, and its deciphering of the American code. Powell tries to combat them by devising a new code while working to discover the leak in the inner government circles.

All along the way the romantic attachment between the hero and heroine is developing while the two enemy intelligence forces fight each other, against a background of laboratory experiments on invisible ink and the like.

With the unintentional aid of Miss Russell, Powell ultimately succeeds and finds that instead of getting away to the trenches as he had hoped he must remain in Washington, but in the charming lady's company.

Exhibitors have more than ample material here with which to work, concentrating particularly on spies, codes, the war element, romance and name values of the stars.—BAEHLER, New York.

Moonlight and Melody

Entertaining

A musical comedy short featuring Lucille Page, Buster West and Tom Patricola, this is entertaining fare. Lucille Page is appearing in a musical comedy and is in love with Buster West. The owner of the theatre makes a bet that he will be able to date Miss Page for dinner after the show. West objects to anyone but himself taking Miss Page out to dinner. He brings a notary public to her dressing room to marry them but both West and the notary are tossed out. The marriage is finally performed and the theatre owner loses his bet. —Running time, 21 minutes.

Speedy Justice

Entertaining

Vaudeville specialties, several of them good entertainment, have been given something of continuity in this Mentone production, with Lew Hearn as the combination speed cop and justice of the peace and Eddy Foy, Jr., as master of ceremonies of the traveling show troupe. Interest, however, lies particularly in The Danny Dare Dancers, with half a dozen girls being tossed through the air in acrobatic dances, and the comedy blackface dance of Glen and Jenkins. The Southland Rhythm Girls, Arthur Boran and Bobby Lane also appear.—Running time, 20 minutes.

"OUR GANG FOLLIES of 1936"

SPANKY McFARLAND is the best M.C. you ever saw!

Jack Harrower in the Film Daily says: A wow!...A riot! This special short should wow 'em wherever the Our Gang aggregation are known and loved. And that's practically everywhere!

Motion Picture Daily says: Hal Roach has produced a swell singing, dancing musical in two reels, using the talents of his famous gang to the utmost for entertainment and laughs. An unusual entertainment, it should get unusual box-office response.

Hollywood Reporter says: Hal Roach introduces an innovation by putting his Our Gang youngsters in a musical short—"Our Gang Follies of 1936." Previewed yesterday, the picture is 18 minutes of laughs.

Daily Variety says: Sure fire! First musical short featuring Our Gang players is an ambitious undertaking, providing 18 minutes of solid entertainment. Spanky MacFarland not only is producer, but sings his own bally, introducing a number of specialty acts. Will click on any program!

Louis Sobol in Evening Journal says: A bow to Hal Roach for unearthing another set of amazingly precocious child stars for his new series of Our Gang pics—the current one at the Capitol is a howl from start to finish.

Variety (Weekly) says: Good enough for marquee playup! Packs a lot of laughs...with a burlesque of the Floradora sextet that brings the show to a screaming finish.

N.Y. Daily Mirror says: A musical revue, impudently satirizing the adult screen musicals and zealously using Hal Roach's usual troupe of talented infant wonders. It's a cute little feature, with laughs, amazing juvenile talent and jaunty melodies.

HELD OVER!
2nd HOWLING WEEK AT N.Y.'s CAPITOL!

It's just ONE of the NEW IDEA "OUR GANG" COMEDIES! (Leo of M-G-M and his exhibitor pals thank you, Mr. Hal Roach.)

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 288.—The following question has been submitted by T. Van Vaulkenburg, long a regular "student" of the School, working in a small town in southeastern Missouri: "Please ask the engineers to answer the two following questions: First, if because of expense, having a sound engineer visit the theatre is impracticable, and there is fault in the sound, and the manager claims it to be the projectionist's fault, while the projectionist claims it to be a fault of the auditorium, in what practical way, if any, could such a question be settled?

"Second, why would not an old-style phonograph horn fixed to the projection room outside front wall, its small end extending through the wall and covered with a removable soundproof cap, enable or at least help the projectionist to judge of sound quality and, after careful observation, to judge of correct volume level as well?"

Answer to Question No. 284

Bluebook School Question No. 284 was: (A) In equipments using stage loudspeakers having 100-volt fields, should the field supply unit fail, what emergency measure can be employed to supply loudspeaker voltage? (B) Why is it important that motor-generators supplying "A" and "B" voltage for sound amplifiers be given more frequent attention and inspection than is accorded other generating equipments? (C) What care should be given the commutator and brushes of this type of generator?

The engineers collaborating in this series of questions answer as follows:

(A) "Usually the arc generator terminal voltage is between 80 and 90 volts. Temporary connections could be made to this generator to supply field voltage and thus keep the show running until the defective unit could be repaired."

(B) "If the commutator or brushes are uneven or dirty, extraneous noise will be introduced into the sound system."

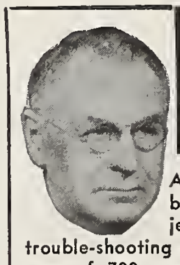
(C) "The commutator must be kept clean and the brush bearing surfaces properly fitted to it. Oil or grease must not be permitted to get on either commutator or brushes, save only paraffin, which should be rubbed lightly on the bars thereof. If necessary the commutator may be smoothed down with No. 00 sandpaper. Emery paper or cloth must never be used."

The following projectionists made acceptable answers: S. Evans and C. Rau; D. Danielson; C. Oldham; H. Edwards; L. M. and C. B. Traxler; J. Wentworth; O. L. Daris and F. Simms; G. E. Doe; T. Van Vaulkenburg; G. Lathrope; M. and J. Devoy; J. Hendershot; G. N. Guidotti and F. L. Savlor; F. H., S. and P. Dalbey; P. Itt; R. Geddings and L. Grant; P. and L. Felt; T. T. Golley; S. H. Danby; K. Y. Spencer; F. H. Klar, L. Klar and T. H. Morton; G. J. Donlas and B. Samuels; B. H. Thaller and S. Spooner; H. O. Bradley; D. Howard and J. Hurst; Nic Granby; M. and S. T. Gibson; L. R. Spooner and G. Johnson; G. L. Boomer; D. L. Lode, B. H. Sanders and J. Gensen; T. L. Bradbury; D. H. and L. B. Palmer; K. N. Kirkpatrick; K. L. Knight and L. Henderson; H. R. Baldwin; T. Turk; J. McGuire; B. G. Korda; H. N. Ford and R. Powderly; H. T. Maxwell; S. T. Miskell; C. H. Forbes; P. F. Michaelson; N. Prane and B. R. Mills; F. L. Benton, L. A. Dodson and H. T. Todd; D. Arlen and M. Spencer; H. R. Lyons; M. D. Fitzsimmons; W. Wevy and L. T. Youst.

The reply of O. L. Daris and F. Simms to Section A has been selected from several excellent answers. They say, "This may be done in any one of several ways, perhaps the most convenient one being a 110-volt d.c. power line if one be available, using sufficient resistance to reduce voltage; or if current for projection is rectified by motor-generators the output should not be less than 80 volts, which would serve for an emergency, though weak. It also would be possible to build up battery voltage to 100, though due to the number of batteries required it would probably be impracticable.

As a matter of fact any d.c. power source that would build up close to 100 volts would serve, the most available being probably the motor-generator set supplying the projector light sources."

We will listen to Nic Granby on Section B. He says: "The current from these generators must of necessity be very smooth and free from faults that, while not seriously objectionable for other purposes, perhaps, would introduce highly objectionable noises into the sound circuits. Naturally in order to secure smooth current and therefore sound without noise (from that source at least) it is necessary to pay close attention to the generator commutator, keeping it clean and in as nearly as possible perfect condition. In doing this we have found the Bluebook instructions to be just fine."



F. H. RICHARDSON'S NEW
PROJECTION

A new edition of this famous book is now on the press. Projection sound reproduction and trouble-shooting all in one compact, handy volume of 700 pages, including 153 illustrations of hook-ups, wiring diagrams and schematics.

Experts consider it the most up-to-date and practical projection manual on the market. Contains an extremely simple index system for instant use in emergency breakdowns. A book that should be part of every projection room in the country. OUT IN NOVEMBER.

T. Turk answers Section B as follows: "This type of loudspeaker field must have direct current, therefore a d. c. power line, a motor-generator set rectifying current for the projector light sources, or a series battery connection is the answer. But it would take too many batteries, so that is out, while d. c. power lines usually are not available. Therefore the motor-generator is the real answer. It will be a low voltage for such use, but can be made to serve in an emergency."

To Section C, G. E. Doe answers, "The same care that is given any other commutator by a real projectionist, for such a man is satisfied with nothing but the best. It must be kept clean, both as to the outer surface and undercut. It must be kept free from sparking. Its brushes must fit its curve and have the right amount of pressure. Each brush must have the same amount of pressure. The brushes must, when worn out, be replaced by others exactly like them in all respects. Lubrication must not be applied except with a pad made as directed by the Bluebook, or by a bar of paraffin held very lightly against the commutators for a very short while as it is running. Personally, I am of the opinion that the pad, if not too heavily lubricated, is best.

"I could of course name other things, but presume most men have the Bluebook. They then have the information available and should follow it. In plain justice, may I say I have followed bluebook instructions for many years. It has been my bible and has never even once led me wrong."

G. J. Donlas and B. Samuels Answer Section C thus: "The commutator of this type of generator must deliver current free from fault, hence it must be kept in first-class condition. But, Mr. Richardson, is not this equally true of all parts of all projection equipment? True the kick-back from some things will not be so quick or annoying, but is that any excuse for letting them get into anything but perfect condition? [My answer is an emphatic no.—F. H. R.]

'Stepchildren' on the Bill Very Often Save Program

They Are the Short Subjects, Six of Which Soon To Be Released Are Herewith Reviewed.

By GERALD BREITIGAM.

IT is the custom of many people attending the movies to feast on the features and sleep through the short subjects. Did they but know it this is the sleep of indigestion which often follows a poorly cooked meal. Likewise, it might be much wiser to stay awake through the shorts and sleep through the feature, as was amply demonstrated yesterday at a preview of no less than six short subjects soon to be released through the metropolitan district.

Even the assorted collection of film executives, exhibitors and critics who watched the program in the Twentieth Century-Fox Little Theater seemed moved to general approval. And that's saying a lot, for they are all behind the counter.

Gerald Breitigam.

It really seemed too bad that such charming travelogues as "West Indies Cruise," such sprightly comedies as Ernest Truex's "Ladies Love Hats" and such thrilling adventures of the newsreel camera as "Hazardous Occupations" should have to go out into the world as stepchildren of the program. However, as long as movie theaters are run for middle-aged ladies who like to hiss villains and crumple handkerchiefs over Dolly Dulcy in a he-man's arms, you'll have features, no matter how indifferent. And as long as you have lovers who like to sit in the smoke-filled darkness of the balcony lethal chamber and cuddle you won't have a program all of shorts.

Off on Magic Carpet.

"WEST INDIES CRUISE" used a great new flying boat for its magic carpet on which to whisk the observer away to Nassau and the Bahamas, to Haiti and Emperor Christophe's mighty fortress in the clouds, to lazy tropic seas curling on white beaches, to Negroes cutting sugar cane and oxen turning the ancient stone wheels that grind it out, to coral isles and palm trees fronded against skies of galleon clouds, to mountains as high as the glory of God bulking up from the placid sea.

Then there was "Hazardous Occupations," in which the newsreel cameramen do their old stunt of thrilling you, but this time with the gruesome details of the man who slipped left out. The restraint is admirable and builds a far greater thrill than gory details. This particular film ranges the world, showing workers on New York's newest bridges, skyscraper window cleaners, steeplejacks swinging around like monkeys, workers in the Saar steel mills, the man who rides every day above Niagara Falls in a basket suspended from the sky in order to paint and inspect the Suspension Bridge cables, fire in the forest and the asbestos-clad gnomes who combat an oil well fire in Oklahoma, and a host of others. Biggest thrill of all is seeing a cameraman climb with his bulky equipment to the top of a Chicago skyscraper in order to picture the town.

You remember and like the diminutive Ernest Truex, and here in a snappy story from the pen of Roy McCardell entitled "Ladies Love Hats" is the same Broadway star in a real mirth maker. As a porch-climber he's only a volunteer, but he thinks fast.

Music, Mirth and Pickaninnies.

ANOTHER comedy, this one a musical, is "Moonlight and Melody," in which the jointless Lucille Page, as the star of a Broadway show, gracefully ties herself in pretzels; in which the brunette Rita Rio croons huskily and sways sinuously; in which Buster West and Tom Patricola do yeoman service to help the girls get through a light but engaging story, and in which Johnny Johnson and his Hotel Commodore Orchestra discourse catchy music.

Of the others, there is "Aladdin's Lamp," which is fun .... It's a Paul Terry-Toons. And there is "Way Out West," with those five little Negro kids invading a frontier saloon in search of Alabama Sam, cook at the Bar Z Ranch, who is their daddy. They call them "The Cabin Kids." Like Little Tommy Tucker of the old nursery rhymes, they sing for their supper. The amusing thing to see yesterday, which, incidentally, you won't be able to observe when this one plays your neighborhood house, was the smallest of these five little darkies roaming the theater aisles in search of the little boys' room.

It was a good bill, and food for reflection upon the thought that the stepchildren of the program often save the show.

QUALITY PLUS

OF ALL the reasons for adopting a new raw film, photographic quality... what the audience sees on the screen...ultimately stands supreme. That explains why the great majority of today's motion pictures are being made on Eastman Super X Panchromatic Negative. Speed, fine grain, versatility... all of these are overshadowed by the fact that Super X gives to the world's screens quality plus. Eastman Kodak Co., Rochester, N. Y. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)

Do your audiences say—

"It looks like him, but . . . ?"

Motion picture photography and projection have reached a high stage of perfection, having had a great many years in which to develop. Sound is younger, however, and has moved ahead so fast that methods and equipment only a few years old cannot do justice to today's sound tracks. Many a man and woman today sees a star on the screen, and says: "It certainly looks like him, but it doesn't sound like him." So customers go elsewhere, to theatres whose sound is modern and natural.

RCA Photophone equipment recreates sound as recorded according to modern standards, producing a naturalness that creates the illusion of the actual presence of the stars on the screen. It is relatively inexpensive, sold on easy terms, backed by the world's greatest experience in recording sound, easily operated by the skilled projectionist. It repeatedly proves its ability to increase box office receipts greatly. Write for details.

50% OF THEATRE SOUND BAD!

Read what Mr. A. Lightman, former president of MPTOA, and president of the Malco circuit, said recently in Hollywood. He spoke before the Technician's Branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences:

"There is equipment today in some of the de luxe houses which is the original equipment installed in 1927 and 1928. No provision has been made in these houses to take care of what you are doing here now. The best results cannot be obtained from such equipment. Fifty percent of the theatres today won't get any more out of your product than just ordinary results . . . The exhibitor has an obligation to the industry to keep his equipment up to the best possible efficiency."

NEWS NOTES FROM CHICAGO SECTOR

An election battle that was hard fought and too close for comfort was staged by the Balaban and Katz Employees Club last week. The theatre lads and lassies balloted for their favorites and the results were so close that in three instances recounts had to be made. In one case the ballots came to a tie and the winner will be decided at the first meeting.

Results of the electoral combat were as follows: president, Harry Potter; first vice-president, George Henderson; second vice-president, S. Goldfinger; third vice-president, Les Walrath; secretary, Ray Von Getson; treasurer, Myrtle Carlson. On the board of directors, Miles Concannon represents the Loop, Joe Kausal the South Side, M. Gold the Northwest Side, and H. Wettstein the North Side. Director for the West Side lies between P. Lynch and J. Bail, who tied in the voting.

First meeting of the new officers will be held this week.

Speaking of Sam Clark, which we weren't, reminds us that he claims to have set a new record for space-winning in the Chicago press on "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

In the five Chicago dailies, the Abendpost and the weekly Movienews, a throwaway tabloid, 37,306 lines of free space were accorded the pictures in a period of seven weeks. The Hearst papers, the Herald-Examiner and the American, gave the picture 26,009 lines or almost three-fourts of the space. Sam has figured out that this total space would cost $23,797.98 if purchased at the regular rates.

Slated for the Apollo theatre the picture will open probably on November 21, at a $1.50 top admission on a two-a-day policy.

Ashton Stevens, veteran theatre critic, has added another feather to his muchly bedecked cap. This time he has acquired, through writing the title, a third interest to a song. Ben Bernie, ye olde maestro, and Seymour Simons, millionaire bandmaster, wrote the words and music and Ashton named the piece, "I'm Just Beginning to Care." In the Continental Room of the Stevens Hotel Simons presents the tune several times nightly.

Frank Young set a new record for cross-town speeding and didn't get a ticket. That's two records in one.

El Brendel comes to the Palace theatre this week to appear in person, with a stage show featuring Art Kassel and his orchestra. The week following Henry Armetta, film comic, heads the stage bill with an elaborate revue produced by Fanchon and Marco.

The motion picture division of the Chicago Federation of Women's Clubs held a meeting at the Sherman hotel. After several speeches and discussions the group saw a special screening of "The Three Musketeers," which won their unanimous approval.

Due to the death of Mrs. J. C. Jenkins, the "Colyum" of the sage of Neligh, Nebraska, a weekly feature of Motion Picture Herald for years, does not appear in this issue.

The many readers of Mr. Jenkins' page of comment on matters current in the exhibition and allied fields are assured that the "Colyum" will be resumed in an early issue.

We dropped in to catch "The Informer" at the Midway theatre the other night. Our hat is off to Manager Rayson who has one of the finest theatres in these parts and an excellent staff to run it.

Clyde Eckhardt and his sales staff and bookers with John Laurentz and the Milwaukee salesmen and bookers, held a sales meeting here last week with John Clark and William Gehring out from New York to lead the discussions. After the meeting the New Yorkers left for St. Louis to hold a similar meeting there, which is part of Fox's big drive to honor Sidney R. Kent.

Henri Ellman, back from New York, stopped off long enough in Chicago to pick up a few clean shirts and tell his office that he was on his way to Hollywood for three weeks. Henri left here with Bill Pizor, independent producer, and in Kansas City they will meet Dave Dubin who will go to the coast with them. While there Henri will look over the new independent product for his Capitol Film Exchange.

While in New York last week Ellman signed a franchise for three years to handle the Derr-Sullivan productions. This company will produce twelve pictures in the coming year. The first will be "Alcatraz," followed by "The Melting Pot."

Essaness will open its Town and Avon theatres with elaboratee ceremonies November 15. A special ad campaign will be run and many exploitation tieups made to let Chicago know about these two attractive houses.

John Joseph was in Minneapolis on business over the weekend. He reports houses in the Twin Cities are doing great business these days and that competition is plenty strong.

Warners and Essaness theatres, through Larry Stein and Herb Ellisburg, have made a tieup with the Herald-Examiner to take pictures in the lobbies of their theatres. The pictures are then marked, shown in the paper, and persons who are selected, if they can identify themselves, will be given guest tickets to the theatre.

The trained dog Snoozer has been signed for appearances at all Essaness theatres for children's matinees. Wilson and Company, makers of dogfood, own the animal and arrange for the performances. Business at these matinees has been very good, the managers report.

The new WGN radio studios are playing to capacity business. Tickets to attend broadcasts are given to those who write in for them. So far the 1,000 seat auditorium has been filled to capacity for every performance, and reservations have been issued six weeks in advance. The new studios are called the finest in the Midwest.

Vance Swartz, formerly assistant at the Capitol, has been made manager of the Warner Egyptian theatre in Milwaukee.

Radio columnists here last week went into a heated controversy over Major Bowes and his radio program. Arguments flew thick and fast regarding the Amateur Hour. The 20 Bowes acts in the stage show at the Oriental were instrumental in bringing the gross for the week to a record-breaking figure.

Hi-Jinks prevailed at the Warner Club dance here Friday and the stagers of the affair are now taking bows.

"Hands Across The Table" was given a midnight trade showing at the Roosevelt the other eve and many were the praises for this new Carole Lombard picture.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

First National

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—This is the best yet from Brown. Big. Colossal. Give it all you've got. You'll be surprised.—George E. Hall, Rose Bowl Theatre, Franklin, Neb. General patronage.

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—Joe E. Brown's best in our opinion and a knockout from beginning to end.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

CASE OF THE LUCKY LEGS, THE: Warren William, Genevieve Tobin—Another Perry Mason story. This one much better than any of the other Perry Mason pictures. Plenty of comedy and wisecracks. Warren William, Patricia Ellis, Genevieve Tobin and Allen Jenkins all good. This one pleased everybody. Running time, 75 minutes. Played October 11-12.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town and general patronage.

GO INTO YOUR DANCE: Al Jolson, Ruby Keeler—Got this picture because of requests for Al Jolson. Booked it with the "Rio Grande Riders," an exceptionally good stage show and we did a land office business, but do not think that the picture itself would have done very well. It is at least two reels too long and "Al" isn't the young man he used to be. If I had it to do over again, I'd skip it. Running time, 97 minutes. Played October 20-21.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell, Pat O'Brien, Ginger Rogers—Good, but too old.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and country patronage.

GB Pictures

THIRTY-NINE STEPS: Robert Donat, Madeleine Carroll—This is a very fine picture. Interesting story and good acting by stars and cast. Gave good satisfaction. Played October 10.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

MGM

ANNA KARENINA: Greta Garbo, Fredric March, Freddie Bartholomew—The same Garbo draw; more chairs than patrons. Our chairs would never get dusted if we depended on the Garbo fans to do it. Poor business regardless of an exceptionally fine trailer which really featured Freddie Bartholomew, as clever a child as ever talked on the screen. It would be unfair to let the opportunity go by and not tell you of the great highlight of this Garbo production. The director or the sound engineer certainly accented this highlight. The hero's horse fell and broke its leg. This accident took place far from the grandstand where Garbo and her husband were viewing the race; so far that they were using field glasses. The camera then showed the preliminaries which attend the shooting of a horse with a broken leg and then back to where Garbo and her husband were on the grandstand. Now be sure to get the mental picture of the distance from where the horse was lying on the track and the grandstand where Garbo had been using field glasses to see the accident. Now here it comes; the camera was at the grandstand and when the shot was fired to kill the horse the noise in my theatre was much like a cannon being fired in the auditorium; it really lifted the patrons from their seats; now, was that comedy or did the sound enginer or director get slightly mixed. But just the same would that not be comedy? It gave me a hearty laugh, but perhaps I do not know when to laugh. Poor Greta is all washed up in this town and has been for years. I always take a big loss on her pictures. Played October 15-16.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

ANNA KARENINA: Greta Garbo, Fredric March—Garbo doesn't mean a thing at our box office and this one is not her best by any means. Picture is not entertainment. No comedy relief. Business poor. Running time, 95 minutes. Played October 13-14.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town and general patronage.

BISHOP MISBEHAVES, THE: Edmund Gwenn, Maureen O'Sullivan—Clever mystery comedy, exceedingly well done. Used on a preview, this pleased very well. Would be difficult to handle on a regular run with this title. Not a religious picture as might be implied, but the story of an English bishop, an inveterate reader of mystery stories, who, upon finding himself drawn into such an affair, attempts to solve the situation along the mystery novel lines and almost succeeds. Running time, 75 minutes. Played October 5.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

1790 Broadway, New York

BONNIE SCOTLAND: Laurel and Hardy—Some patrons tell me they do not like this team. Nevertheless, whenever we show their feature pictures, we have a full house and that means that they are still popular. A good picture with many laughs and clean fun. Played October 19-21.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Jack Benny, Eleanor Powell, Una Merkel, Vilma and Buddy Ebsen—A fine show; one of the best of any year. It has music, comedy, everything. Other dancers better watch their laurels; Eleanor Powell is marvelous.—E. T. Mathes, Avalon Theatre, Bellingham, Wash. General patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Jack Benny, Sid Silvers, Eleanor Powell—This is good entertainment but far from being the giant musical MGM tells you it is. Warner Bros. are still the leaders when it comes to musicals. Jack Benny good and Sid Silvers excellent; Eleanor Powell does some wonderful dancing. Running time, 102 minutes. Played October 22-24.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town and general patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clarke Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—A great picture, but did not hold up after the opening day. Drew good business, but not the business it should have done. Everyone seemed to like it, but most of the business on the picture was done the first day. I call it one of the best of the kind we have played. Played October 13-15.—Belt Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

DAVID COPPERFIELD: All Star Cast—Splendid production. Enjoyed by those who like Dickens' works. Fair business for late showing.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES THE BAND: Ted Lewis, Virginia Bruce—Not so hot, but gets by. The press book on this has the poorest imaginable mats.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

HERE COMES THE BAND: Ted Lewis, Virginia Bruce—Here's a fine weekend picture. Fun from start to finish without exaggeration. More of these pictures and we could strut into the bank instead of creeping in fearful that our account is overdrawn. Played October 12-14.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

I LIVE MY LIFE: Joan Crawford, Brian Aherne—An excellent picture, but Joan Crawford is slipping fast here.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

I LIVE MY LIFE: Joan Crawford, Brian Aherne—Back to the type that made Joan Crawford a favorite. Pleased fine, but no great draw. Guess it's because they have double and triple starred Crawford so much that she has lost much of her own individual draw. Running time, 98 minutes.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

IT'S IN THE AIR: Jack Benny, Una Merkel—Excellent comedy, that more than pleased. Jack Benny better in this than he was in "Broadway Melody." Ted Healy at his best also. Business above average. Running time, 75 minutes. Played October 18-19.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town and general patronage.

IT'S IN THE AIR: Jack Benny, Una Merkel—If Metro-Goldwyn is wise, they will play Jack Benny up. Years ago, he had a little chance to show himself in a picture with Marie Dressler, but it seems the big shots could not see him; they had to wait for radio and "Broadway Melody" to bring him into his own. While this is not a "Broadway Melody" by any means, it's nice entertainment and pleased all classes. Let's have more of Jack Benny. Fine draw! Running time, 78 minutes. Played October 27-28.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

O'SHAUGHNESSY'S BOY: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—This one is all hokum, but it is good entertainment and pleased everyone. Wallace Beery very good. "Spunky" McFarland good in a small part. Business below average. Running time, 88 minutes. Played October 15-17.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town and general patronage.

PURSUIT: Chester Morris, Sally Eilers—This one packed full of action and did a very good business. Running time, 62 minutes.—Carmen M. Roberts, Eagle Hall Theatre, Carlin, Nev. General patronage.

PURSUIT: Chester Morris, Sally Eilers—This one has action and my patrons welcomed it; nutty, perhaps, but just the same they ate it up. Played October 24.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

WOMAN WANTED: Joel McCrea, Maureen O'Sullivan—Did more than average business with this one and the patrons were pleased. Played October 17.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

Monogram

HEALER, THE: Ralph Bellamy, Karen Morley—Very good picture. One of the best Monogram pictures played. Running time, 75 minutes. Played October 16-17.—Paul C. Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

HOOSIER SCHOOLMASTER, THE: Norman Foster, Charlotte Henry—A good picture that is worth playing. Played October 3-5.—Rubel Hutchings, Allen Theatre, Allen, Neb. Small town patronage.

KEEPER OF THE BEES, THE: Neil Hamilton, Betty Furness—A pleasing picture. Nothing outstanding but is acceptable on any program. Drew better than average business. I would rate this as an excellent 'program' picture. Played October 13-14.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

KEEPER OF THE BEES, THE: Neil Hamilton, Betty Furness—A good, clean picture that drew better than "Girl of the Limberlost." Drew extra people and pleased.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

MAKE A MILLION: Charles Starrett, Pauline Brooks—A very good program picture. Story entertaining. Acting good. Played on a double bill and gave satisfaction. Played October 25-26.—Best Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

Paramount

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: George Raft, Alice Faye, Patsy Kelly—Very good musical type show. Nice comedy relief. Played October 10-12.—Rubel Hutchings, Allen Theatre, Allen, Neb. Small town patronage.

GLASS KEY, THE: George Raft, Edward Arnold, Claire Dodd—Extra good. Raft very popular here. Edward Arnold fine in his part. Looking forward to "Diamond Jim."—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and country patronage.

HANDS ACROSS THE TABLE: Carole Lombard, Fred MacMurray—Excellent. Same type as "It Happened One Night" and "The Gilded Lily." Step on it; the picture is there.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

HERE COMES COOKIE: George Burns, Gracie Allen—Best Burns and Allen ever. Everybody pleased. Good business.—George E. Hall, Rose Bowl Theatre, Franklin, Neb. General patronage.

IT'S A GIFT: W. C. Fields, Baby LeRoy—Can't see why Baby LeRoy received such high billing, as he hasn't much of a part in this. Oh, yes. I just received my copy of Motion Picture Almanac and it sure is worth the money.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

LITTLE AMERICA: Admiral Byrd—This picture did a little better than average business for us and pleased all who saw it. Some stayed away because they were afraid it would be a repetition of "With Byrd at the South Pole." However, this was not the case, as care seems to have been taken to avoid duplication of scenes or action, and the sound recorded along with the actual shooting helped a lot. Played October 15.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. Small town and college patronage.

MAN ON THE FLYING TRAPEZE, THE: W. C. Fields, Mary Brian—Title is very misleading, but it drew well and Fields' fans said it was his best. Played October 17.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural patronage.

PARIS IN SPRING: Tullio Carminati, Mary Ellis—Many of our patrons decided they did not care to visit "Paris in Spring." Many stayed away, which made the intake quite low. Those who came did not register any kicks.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SCOUNDREL, THE: Noel Coward, Julie Haydon, Hope Williams—A fine picture, but different; one must not expect too much from it at the B. O. But, it is worth while.—E. T. Matbes, Avalon Theatre, Bellingham, Wash. General patronage.

STOLEN HARMONY: George Raft, Ben Bernie—We had slightly increased attendance for this Ben Bernie offering, indicating that there was some interest from his radio fans. Show satisfied. Played October 19.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

TWO FOR TONIGHT: Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett—Not much to it; has some pleasing moments but is disappointing. Do not expect much handclapping over it. Did poor business for us.—E. T. Matbes, Avalon Theatre, Bellingham, Wash. General patronage.

TWO FOR TONIGHT: Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett, Mary Boland—Played to very poor business. People tired of Bing. Joan Bennett didn't do much in this. Few good comments.—George E. Hall, Rose Bowl Theatre, Franklin, Neb. General patronage.

VIRGINIA JUDGE, THE: Walter C. Kelly, Marsha Hunt, Stepin Fetchit—Played this one on release date without advertising. At that did a fair business. Not much action, but a good, clean story that ought to go over big with the proper advertising.—Carmen M. Roberts, Eagle Hall Theatre, Carlin, Nev. General patronage.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND: Gail Patrick, Dean Jagger—Zane Grey; good western to good business.—George E. Hall, Rose Bowl Theatre, Franklin, Neb. General patronage.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND: Gail Patrick, Dean Jagger—The picture may not be so hot, but it will drag them in because of the book.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

WITHOUT REGRET: Elissa Landi, Kent Taylor—A very good feature, better than the title indicates. Running time, 75 minutes.—Carmen M. Roberts, Eagle Hall Theatre, Carlin, Nev. General patronage.

WITHOUT REGRET: Elissa Landi, Kent Taylor—Good average picture; shows signs of being pretty good entertainment and should be good box office draw. Frances Drake proves to be one of the screen's best emotional actresses. Business average last three days of week.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

Republic

FORBIDDEN HEAVEN: Charles Farrell, Charlotte Henry—I thought this would go over big, but many complained about the English accent. About the same general idea as "One More Spring."—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

WESTWARD HO: John Wayne, Sheila Mannors—Very good western. Worth playing anywhere.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

ALICE ADAMS: Katharine Hepburn, Fred MacMurray—A splendid picture. Story very interesting. Acting of the star fine and Fred Stone played a great part and he certainly played it good. All the rest of the cast was extra good in this picture. It is great entertainment. Gave good satisfaction to all. Played October 27-28.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville. Mich. City and country patronage.

ALICE ADAMS: Katbarine Hepburn, Fred MacMurray—While this rated four stars from some critics, our patrons did not like it. The general reaction was that it was irritating and silly. I have never known a picture that had as its theme family squabbling from the beginning to end to be successful entertainment.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. Small town and college patronage.

ARIZONIAN, THE: Ricbard Dix, Margot Grahame—This picture is not up to the usual Dix standard but it is head and shoulders above the general run of westerns. Did a little better than average business. Played October 9-10.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

BECKY SHARP: Miriam Hopkins—As you all know, the highlight of this flop is the rental. Compelled to play on Saturday, which is family night. Far from a family picture and I so advertised it. Poorest Saturday business for many months. No improvement in color; the same old brownish tinted skins on the actors. Any colored picture even for years back showed off red or blue or what-have-you uniforms; that's simple, but as far as I can distinguish it, there still remains that same unnatural skin tint which varies from a dark tan to a light tan, sort of a brown blush. The picture as a whole is exceptionally mediocre. Of course, the ratio between the exceptionally high rental and the exceptionally slim audience may be the direct cause of accenting the shortcoming of this picture. One big loss to me! Running time, 87 minutes. Played October 5-7.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

FRECKLES: Tom Brown, Virginia Weidler, Carol Stone—Did very fine business and will in all small situations. The mats in the press book were largely clutches, the standard grasp around the neck that is used by all our press departments to save work and conceal lack of showmanship.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

FRECKLES: Virginia Weidler, Carol Stone, Tom Brown—The kind of show that gets them in and pleases. Picture is very good entertainment and little Virginia Weidler certainly does her part. Business excellent for the two day run. Small towns can't go wrong on this one. Running time, 68 minutes. Played October 27-28.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town and general patronage.

HOT TIP: James Gleason, Zasu Pitts—A very funny race horse story. Gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

HOT TIP: James Gleason, Zasu Pitts—This story has a bang-up ending which saves the show, otherwise it is rather slow and uninteresting. Played October 24.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural patronage.

JALNA: Ian Hunter, Kay Johnson—This is another picture that has for its central idea the quarrels and bickerings of a large family. Attendance was small and few liked it. For one reason, the picture did not make some of the situations understandable to the audience. Too much time to quarreling and too little to plot development.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. Small town and college patronage.

LAST DAYS OF POMPEII, THE: Basil Rathbone, Preston Foster, David Holt—Good picture to good business, BUT the public is about washed up on nightshirt drama. Personally, it has become a bore to me. Predict that producers will take losses on more of this kind.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

NITWITS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—This is a very funny picture. Slapstick plus. This is really a good comedy picture and it is clean. More laughs than I have seen in any picture for a long time. Those that like to laugh said it was great. Played October 23-24.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

OLD MAN RHYTHM: Buddy Rogers, Betty Grable—This is a splendid program picture. Some fine music numbers and good comedy. Gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greneville, Micb. City and country patronage.

OLD MAN RHYTHM: Buddy Rogers, Betty Grable—Personally I thought this picture was useless, unnecessary and insane and was much surprised to hear many say that it was a good picture, on the way out. There's nothing radically wrong with it but you cannot help wondering why they made it. Played October 18-19.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

RETURN OF PETER GRIMM, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Helen Mack—Good. Lionel Barrymore can talk about peanuts yet be interesting. It shows the power of a hobby and the narrowness of people.—E. T. Mathes, Avalon Theatre, Bellingham, Wash. General patronage.

RETURN OF PETER GRIMM, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Helen Mack—A very beautiful picture, and I can think of no one that could have put as much into the character of Peter Grimm as Barrymore did. Business poor two days middle of week.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

TOP HAT: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—This is the last word in entertainment. Great in every way. You have got to see it to appreciate the entertainment in the picture. Not a dull moment. I call it 100 per cent perfect. Yes, we did business three days on the picture. Everyone satisfied. Played October 20-22.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

TOP HAT: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—This picture for me is just what it is called, "Top Hat." We topped all grosses by a large margin four days starting on Sunday. Fred Astaire is getting better and Ginger plays up to him like nobody's business. Besides having Astaire and Rogers, this picture is packed full of real talent. Edward Everett Horton steals everything when he is in the picture and Helen Broderick runs away with her part, and not least of all is Eric Blore.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

WEST OF THE PECOS: Richard Dix, Martba Sleeper.—Good western. Dix good. Martha Sleeper turned in a fine job on her part. She's good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and country patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BLACK SHEEP: Edmund Lowe, Claire Trevor—Nice program picture. Will please 90 per cent.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd, Una Merkel, George Barbier—Although this one was quite old, it went over with a bang. George Barbier completely stole the show, although the entire cast was well-chosen. The boys got a great kick out of the wholesale round-up of the gangsters, Una Merkel's sarcastic and snappy repartee, and Barbier's "You Can't DO That!" The men at the afternoon show gave the picture a good hand, which is in itself a real compliment to any production. Played October 26.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

DOUBTING THOMAS: Will Rogers—While I showed this late, the attendance was next to a Shirley Temple picture, which is tops at this theatre. When Will Rogers' face was first shown, there was a gasp from the audience; after that, they settled down and seemed to enjoy the picture as if nothing happened. The picture as a whole is pleasing entertainment.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

DRESSED TO THRILL: Clive Brook, Tutta Rolf—This one is better than the title indicates. Tutta Rolf does some excellent work and ought to draw when she becomes better known. Running time, 76 minutes.—Carmen M. Roberts, Eagle Hall Theatre, Carlin, Nev. General patronage.

FARMER TAKES A WIFE, THE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Fonda—My patrons liked this picture. Janet Gaynor is a drawing card, but not nearly so much now as when she was teamed with Farrell. Did more than average business. Running time, 91 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S 1935 SCANDALS: Alice Faye, James Dunn, Lyda Roberti, George White—Gave good satisfaction and was clean. Normal attendance. Played October 9-10.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

GINGER: Jane Withers—This youngster has what it takes, as the popular saying goes, and in "Ginger" she is given every chance to show her ability. The picture is ideal mass entertainment. We showed this Sunday and Monday; Monday was above average so this must have been praised by those who saw it Sunday. Played October 27-28.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

HERE'S TO ROMANCE: Nino Martini, Genevieve Tobin, Anita Louise—Another light opera voice testing picture that only the classes will like, and a small class at that.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

IT'S A SMALL WORLD: Spencer Tracy, Wendy Barrie—We did the usual Saturday night business for this attraction, which apparently was a pleasant surprise to most of the audience. Played October 12.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

LITTLE COLONEL, THE: Shirley Temple, Lionel Barrymore, Bill Robinson—Increased attendance reflected the interest in Shirley Temple. We consider this one of her very best offerings. Played October 16-17.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

OUR LITTLE GIRL: Shirley Temple—A number one draw. Shirley is a great little actress.—Rubel Hutchings, Allen Theatre, Allen, Neb. Small town patronage.

OUR LITTLE GIRL: Shirley Temple, Joel McCrea —I heard far in advance of our play date that this was the poorest of the Shirley Temples. And so it was. Give us Jimmy Dunn with Shirley. Played October 26-27.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small own patronage.

SILK HAT KID: Lew Ayres, Mae Clark—Good light entertainment for the whole family. Running time, 68 minutes. Played October 18-19.—Paul C. Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

STEAMBOAT ROUND THE BEND: Will Rogers, Anne Shirley—Excellent, with Rogers still a draw.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

STEAMBOAT ROUND THE BEND: Will Rogers, Anne Shirley—I am indeed happy to tell you that this picture drew capacity houses. I advertised this picture by telling my community that the greatest tribute the screen could give Will Rogers is the fact that he always gave clean, wholesome entertainment; that goes a long way with all decent-minded people, and that tribute goes direct for Will Rogers and NOT the producers! Played October 22-23.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

United Artists

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS: Jack Buchanan, Lili Damita—I considered this a good musical type film, but the box office proved it otherwise.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

CALL OF THE WILD: Clark Gable, Loretta Young, Jack Oakie—Here is a honey that tops most of them. Good for preferred time in any town and especially in a small town, because it has plenty of action. In fact, it has everything, the best in acting, direction and story. Put it on your best date, bill it heavy and tell them they can have their money back if they don't like it. You won't have to return a cent. Played October 20.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural patronage.

CALL OF THE WILD: Clark Gable, Loretta Young, Jack Oakie—Played Friday, Saturday, Sunday, Monday, small town, to big business to end. Don't pass it up.—George E. Hall, Rose Bowl Theatre, Franklin, Neb. General patronage.

CARDINAL RICHELIEU: George Arliss—While a lot of money was spent on this, the attendance was below average. The picture seemed to interest those who came.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

LES MISERABLES: Fredric March, Charles Laughton—This, in my opinion, is the best produced, best directed and best acted picture that ever came out of Hollywood. I was afraid that this picture would be over the heads of our patrons, but it pleased everyone and drew better than average business. This picture has my wholehearted recommendation. Played October 11-12.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

Universal

ALIAS MARY DOW: Sally Eilers, Lola Lane, Raymond Milland—Good little program picture.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

CHINATOWN SQUAD: Lyle Talbot—Satisfactory. Better than the usual run of program picture from Universal. Played October 16-17.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

DIAMOND JIM: Edward Arnold, Binnie Barnes—A mighty good picture. Great acting by the stars. Gave good satisfaction. Did not draw very heavy at the box office, but no fault of the picture. Played October 6-7.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

LADY TUBBS: Alice Brady, Douglass Montgomery, Anita Louise—An excellent comedy. An ideal show for Bank Night.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

STORM OVER THE ANDES: Jack Holt, Mona Barrie—Did all right. Press book had mats of the low standard that characterizes the backward show business. Better mats would have meant better business. The commercial world is miles ahead of the show world in intelligent use of space.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

STORM OVER THE ANDES: Jack Holt, Mona Barrie—Splendid! Has everything! Good photography, plenty of action and comedy. Looks as though Jack Holt was coming back and we hope that Universal will give him a break with more good material. Liked by everyone who saw it. Played October 28-29.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

WEREWOLF OF LONDON: Henry Hull, Valerie Hobson—Well, this picture is big and as horrible as they make them. Some liked it, other walked out. Personally, I cannot see this kind of picture for entertainment, but it has wonderful acting.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

Warner Bros.

BROADWAY GONDOLIER: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell--A very satisfactory musical show; about the best musical show from Warners in some time. This did above average business.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

BROADWAY GONDOLIER: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—Plenty good offering.—George E. Hall, Rose Bowl Theatre, Franklin, Neb. General patronage.

DEVIL DOGS OF THE AIR: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Margaret Lindsay—Fine picture. Give us more with the same cast and don't leave out Frank McHugh.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

DR. SOCRATES: Paul Muni, Ann Dvorak—Paul Muni in a straight role and very good. Story and cast very good. This is the kind of picture that everyone enjoys. Business excellent. You can't go wrong on this one any day of the week. Runnning time, 70 minutes. Played October 20-21.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town and general patronage.

DR. SOCRATES: Paul Muni, Ann Dvorak—A very fine gangster feature from a good story and excellently done.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

LITTLE BIG SHOT: Sybil Jason, Glenda Farrell, Robert Armstrong, Edward Everett Horton—A wonderful child actress and Armstrong and Horton and the whole cast worked hard to make an entertainment out of the picture, but the child actress was all that saved it. I think she is one of the cleverest child actresses on the screen. Played October 16-17.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

PAGE MISS GLORY: Marion Davies, Pat O'Brien, Dick Powell, Patsy Kelly—A very pleasing picture; average business and well liked by all who saw it. Marion Davies is a favorite here, and justly so. Running time, 92 minutes. Played October 1-2.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

PAGE MISS GLORY: Marion Davies, Pat O'Brien, Dick Powell—Played this on Sunday and the house was in an uproar most of the time. They liked it and it drew well.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SWEET MUSIC: Rudy Valee, Ann Dvorak, Helen Morgan—Fine musical comedy. Vallee seemed to please most everyone. Thanks, Warner. Business just fair. Played October 27-28.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and country patronage.

Short Features

Educational

AMATEUR NIGHT: Paul Terry-Toons—A good cartoon which gets the usual laughs, but nothing out of the ordinary. The burlesque feature which scored best in here was the "Stepin Fetchit" affair. Played October 26.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

FOUR MORE SHOWMEN TAKE PEN IN HAND

"What the Picture Did for Me" this week contains reports on pictures from four more contributing exhibitors. Three showmen whose comment appears for the first time in the department are:

Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, South Carolina.

Carmen M. Roberts, Eagle Hall Theatre, Carlin, Nevada.

George E. Hall, Rose Bowl Theatre, Franklin, Nebraska.

Returning to the reportorial ranks is an exhibitor whose pithy comment is well known to the department's many readers. He is

A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pennsylvania.

Kept the house in an uproar Saturday night—Rubel Hutchings, Allen Theatre, Allen, Neb. Small town patronage.

HARLEM HARMONY: Ben Carter and his Pickaninny Choir—Here's one that's a bit different from any other short on the market. Good music, both spiritual and jazz, and just enough humor to put it over. Unless you are hopelessly prejudiced, you can't help but put your "check and double-check" on the okay of this one. Played October 26.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

MOONLIGHT AND MELODY: Musical Comedy—One of the finest musical shorts we have ever had the pleasure to run. This one combines everything, snappy dancing, tuneful songs and ace-high comedy. Sure to please. Running time, 20 minutes.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town and general patronage.

WAY DOWN YONDER: Song Hit Stories Series—Again the Cabin Kids in a clever single reel.—C. L. Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

M-G-M

BEGINNER'S LUCK: Our Gang—Here's a pip of the amateur hour type. Everyone will like it.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

GREAT AMERICAN PIE COMPANY: MGM Miniatures—Very good for the higher class audience and not slapstick.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

LITTLE SINNER: Our Gang—This one is average. These comedies need a little "pepping up" as they drag considerably. Running time, 20 minutes.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. General patronage.

TWIN TRIPLETS: Todd-Kelly—One of the best Patsy Kelly-Thelma Todd comedies. Running time, 20 minutes.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town and general patronage.

Paramount

BABY BE GOOD: Betty Boop Cartoon—Poor cartoon.—Rubel Hutchings, Allen Theatre, Allen, Neb. Small town patronage.

HARK YE, HARK: Ben Bernie, Grace Barry—A very fine one-reeler. Don't miss advertising Bernie. He's poular here.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and country patronage.

HYP-NUT-TIST, THE: Popeye The Sailor—Best Popeye in many months. Fine. Running time, 1 reel. —Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and country patronage.

IS MY FACE BLACK: Molasses 'n' January—A good comedy short.—Rubel Hutchings, Allen Theatre, Allen, Neb. Small own patronage.

RKO Radio

MAJOR BOWES AMATEUR THEATRE ON THE AIR: No. 4—Very, very much disappointed in this. Somehow or other, it don't have the atmosphere of the radio. Seems to me it could be better directed, especially insofar as introducing the acts like over the radio, thereby giving more amateur and sentimental touch. I was told that No. 4 was the best Major Bowes. If so, I'll say this series is very badly overrated.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

MARCH OF TIME: No. 2—Release No. 2 of RKO's March of Time. If you want something to empty the house, put it on. These March of Time reels are the most overrated film on the screen.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

PICKLED PEPPERS: Blonde and Red Head Series —I failed to see anything unusual in this comedy, but it had the audience in hysterics all through the picture. Heard more laughs than I have in any six other comedies combined. Running time, two reels.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

Shorts

United Artists

MICKEY'S FIRE BRIGADE: Mickey Mouse—A very good Mickey, although the others steal the show. C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MUSIC LAND: Silly Symphonies—This Silly Symphony excellent and new idea of the "Island of Symphony" and the "Island of Jazz."—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Universal

ON YOUR RADIO DIAL (No. 3): Mentone Musical Comedy—Especially good and highly praised.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

Vitaphone

GOLD DIGGERS OF '49: Looney Tunes—A very good black and white cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

LITTLE DUTCH PLATE: Merrie Melodies Series—A very clever colored cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

NUTVILLE: Radio Ramblers—A fine one-reeler. Can't miss.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and country patronage.

OH EVALINE: Hal LeRoy, Eleanor Whitney—Very good musical entertainment. The college setting gives spice and humor to the subject. Running time, 21 minutes.—Paul C. Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

RUBINOFF AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters Series—A very good band act. Pleased.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Miscellaneous

ADVANCE TRAILER (MGM): About five minutes of titles and scenes of forthcoming MGM pictures. Good. Furnished gratis. Running time, one-half reel. —Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and country patronage.

EVERYBODY'S BUSINESS: A very educational and interesting one-reeler. Furnished gratis by Republic Pictures in New Orleans.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and country patronage.

Aid Fund Held Intact

Efforts to acquire distribution of $20,723 owned by the Skouras Employes' Mutual Aid Association have been thwarted in St. Louis by Judge O'Malley in the circuit court, who ruled that the fund shall be held intact for employees of Skouras Brothers Enterprises and the St. Louis Amusement Company. Skouras Brothers Enterprises is not functioning at present and the St. Louis Amusement Company is in the hands of a federal trustee.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

THEY HAVE NOT YET FAILED

Pleased though we are when informed of promotions among the membership, rejoicing in these quarters is admittedly a bit louder upon occasions when the promotion comes to a Quigley Award winner.

And as is the procedure on receipt of such glad tidings, we hasten to ask of the executives concerned whether the awarding of a Quigley plaque has had any bearing whatsoever upon the selection.

The following letter to your Chairman from Jules J. Rubens, of the Publix Great States Theatres, answered our request for this information regarding the recent stepping-up of Ralph Lawler, Quigley July Bronze recipient, from manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Springfield, Ill., to the Newman Theatre, Kansas City. Writes Mr. Rubens:

"We, in the Home Office of Great States Theatres, naturally appreciate the fact that Ralph Lawler was among the outstanding young showmen of the country. However, the Quigley Awards Contests did confirm our judgment in him and had much to do with his recent promotion.

"These contests in my opinion are a fine thing inasmuch as they give the manager a target of national scope to shoot at rather than the mark set up by his own organization."

It is a matter of proud record that in every known instance, the Awards have not yet failed to receive full credit for their part in influencing promotions of Quigley Award winners to higher posts.

MANAGER HANGS HEAD

Unfortunately the communication is totally anonymous and, as is the policy of this publication, we cannot publish the revealing document by the manager who signs himself "in humiliation."

But because Mr. Anonymous is so honestly ashamed of the spot he was put in by his superiors we are taking the liberty of describing the situation brought about by a classified ad he inserted (copy enclosed) requesting an experienced assistant, salary $15.

There is no record of the total number of replies to the advertisement. But one signed "Assistant" and forwarded by the theatreman made him blush to think that the censure heaped upon his head was wholly deserved. He prays we publish the answer so that it may serve as an object lesson to those bringing wages to inhuman levels and expecting miracles in return.

An optimist, eh?

Well, the letter in reply is a honey for sure and does "Assistant" lay it down? He does, and a fancier job of excoriation we have yet to see. You can write it yourself—the words are familiar but the melody is much louder.

It's a perfect job of bawling-out, but regretfully, at the wrong target. The poor ole manager in this case is just the patsy.

A young chap visited us a few days ago. Now an usher for a well-known circuit, he works 12 to 14 hours a day, seven days a week, receives $10 a week. Oh, yes, said he, there are chances for advancement. The boss offered him an assistant's job and a three dollar raise.

No one man is to blame for these conditions in the theatre and no one manager need take it upon himself to hang his head in shame for all those so indifferent to the welfare of their own theatre personnel.

It is a problem that must be solved by the industry as a whole not only for the protection of human beings, but for the safeguarding of profitable box-office grosses.

FROM UNDER THE BUSHEL

With the publication in this issue of the Hall Industries activities we are pleased to introduce into the Round Table series of Guest Sections, the first of the lesser known nationally but no less progressive of theatre circuits that add rich red blood to the steady flow of boxoffice circulation.

Hall theatres are to be found in communities mostly of 5,000 or less, but in general the standards of exploitation, booking and close attention to business compare favorably with the efficiency of operation in the larger circuit groups.

The inclusion of Hall Industries with the major outfits already listed in the Guest Section series is also to be construed as an invitation for other circuits similarly situated to join in, and in these pages remove the bushel under which they are hiding their light.

UNUSUAL WINDOW. In one of the main Washington Street windows of the Jordan-Marsh department store, Boston, Harry Brown, Jr., M & P publicist, planted this display representing lobby of the Paramount Theatre and tying in with current and coming attractions in addition to children's clothes shown on the models. Idea was planned and executed by Paul Levi, of the Paramount.

Bagpiper Plugs "Bonnie Scotland" for McManus

Among the recent stunts engineered by John McManus at Loew's Midland, Kansas City, Mo., was bannered Scot in kilts playing bagpipes for "Bonnie Scotland" bally.

Leading department stores featured a window of Scotch plaids and another of Irish linens and entire theatre front was given over to caricatures of the stars in kilties.

On "China Seas" John promoted store for the distribution of Gable photos and window devoted to Chinese coolie coats with mention in store's newspaper ads. To all women patrons imprinted glassene bags containing tea were given, cooperating merchant distributing balance house to house.

"Annie Oakley" Novelty

RKO Radio has gone shoot-'em-up on the coming "Annie Oakley," what with the toy rifle novelty forwarded by Leon J. Bamberger's sales promotion department to exhibitors. It goes "pop" and besides being a good ad, is handy in keeping the baby entertained for a couple of hours.

Holland's Business Office in Lobby

Holland Stages Wedding For "Married Her Boss"

Put on with all the detail and seriousness that would go with a similar ceremony at a fashionable church was Sid Holland's legal stage wedding at the Elco, Elkhart, Ind., as a hookin for "She Married Her Boss." Top local merchants were interested to supply the necessary prizes, plugging these in ads and windows, and papers carried stories both on drama and society pages. Built up for two weeks ahead, the stunt proved a honey, and worked in nicely with Holland's special midnight premiere on Saturday ahead of the regular Sunday opening.

To attain all the Hollywood atmosphere in addition to the lights, microphones, and other accessories, Sid also put on a star impersonation contest, having contestants arrive in limousines, speak over radio, etc., before going on stage where contest was held.

Four weeks ahead, interest in the date was maintained steadily with the inauguration of a Hollywood trip contest in cooperation with leading store, merchant paying all expenses and also supplying extra prizes. Stunt was a lucky number idea with coupons given for adult theatre admissions and purchases at store, highlight of trip being an opportunity to meet Claudette Colbert.

Neat lobby stunt was office scene with Boss, Secretary and Typist in action used a week ahead (see photo) and reported by Sid a real ticket seller. And also different was a barber shop tiein wherein cards were posted on mirror in front of each chair topped with a 40 by 60 pasted face down on the ceiling which could not be missed by those being shaved.

Other snappers in Holland's campaign included sending three girls house to house 10 days ahead obtaining signatures to the effect that householder was glad to know picture was coming. Copy at head of blank read: "I am glad to know that Claudette Colbert's new picture 'She Married Her Boss' will be shown at the Elco, etc, etc.," with space for signature and address below.

Street Car Company Offers Cash Prizes

Kansas City branch managers, F. C. Hensler, T. R. Thompson, A. H. Cole, G. W. Fuller and Harry Taylor, officially closed the Kansas City Public Service (street railways) Company's motion picture contest which began January 1, when they judged the winning entries.

The contest was based on identification of stars whose pictures, two of which appeared in each of the 12 issues of the street car company's "Take One" since the first of the year, were disguised. The star had to be identified and three pictures named in which the star had appeared in Kansas City during the past two years.

More than $1,000 in prizes were awarded.

Theatre men reported that throughout the contest they have received a number of calls in connection with it, and judges expressed their thanks to Al Wood of the Public Service Company for the contest because it has increased interest in motion pictures and theatre attendance. One theatre manager has asked permission to display some of the entries, of which there were 532, in the lobby of his theatre. Some of the entries were presented as miniature street cars, miniature theatres, etc.

Promotion of the contest stressed use of the weekly street car pass in attending pictures particularly downtown. "Take One" carries a column in each issue containing brief reviews of pictures playing at first run houses.

Football Rally Plugs "Fighting Youth"

With the realization that the local University was attending a big game on the opening day of "Fighting Youth," Fitz May, Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., approached the school for a rally morning of game and invited team to a special screening. Boys and girls marched to theatre, many riding in cars and trucks appropriately bannered. Fitz also decorated his front in school colors and welcomed the student body. Week ahead, handbills and faked tickets were scattered about town plugging picture to the football fans.

Garfield Puts On Kiddie Shows

Harold Garfield over at the Rialto and Broad Theatres, Newark, is putting on some excellent juvenile talent shows by tying in with music and dancing schools. Through tieup with department store Harold has organized "Your Big Chance" radio stunt for kids, broadcast from store. Announcements are made that winners will appear at theatre following week. Accompanying photo shows group of some of the talent. Store advertises show with due theatre mention.

Ship Model Contest Tops "Mutiny" Exploitation

One of the outstanders in Billy Ferguson's exploitation section of 12 fat pages in "Mutiny on the Bounty" pressbook, is a national ship model building contest with $1000 in prizes. To assist theatremen with this angle, MGM is sending two floats with models of the original "Bounty" on a nationwide tour and to help entrants, mats and cuts reproducing exact scale plan of original boat are also available to houses playing the date. Free blueprint on this has also been made up in form of two-color lobby display.

Cooperative ad idea that clicks is a series of cuts and mats in form of old fashioned wood blocks with art and copy tying in various businesses and merchandise. Three-day newspaper contest on sailormen's chanteys is also presented among the flock of other selling slants that go to make up the section.

Starr's "Youth" Idea

In connection with his showing of "Accent on Youth" at the Cove Theatre, Glen Cove, L. I., Herman Starr tied up with paper to run a "Put the accent on youth" contest. Child photos of movie stars who will appear in coming attractions were reproduced in paper and readers asked to identify them from hints in copy. Tickets were awarded winners.

Dinerman's "Jim" Stunt

Cash prizes were awarded by E. V. Dinerman, publicity director, RKO Palace, Cincinnati, for a contest sponsored by local paper on "Diamond Jim." Contestants required to prepare list of ten requisites of super-salesmen and write fifty-word letter on "What I would do with my first $12,000,000."

Collier Plants Toast Contest On "Goose and the Gander"

A newspaper contest in which readers were asked to write a toast to Kay Francis in "Goose and the Gander" was highlight of Rodney Collier's campaign at the Stanley, Baltimore, assisted by George Browning. Cash prizes and tickets were awarded.

Beauty shops featured stills of three distinct types in picture's star roles, Kay Francis, brunette; Claire Dodd, medium, and Genevieve Tobin, blonde. Theatre copy was tied in with ads. Florist featured Kay Francis dahlia during engagement and accompanying photo shows foyer display composed of a block setup which, with aid of art work and appropriate theatre copy can be made into different display each week.

Theatre Operations Closely Supervised By Circuit Heads

by H. W. HALL
General Manager, Hall Industries

In building and operating a small circuit of theatres it has been our intention to keep the number of units operated small enough that they may have the personal supervision of operation that is essential to the success of any such enterprise. By concentrating activities to a comparatively small area this idea has been successful from the start. Regular visits to each theatre in each town has enabled us to conduct the business on a basis commensurate with the earning capacity of the theatre and to maintain a standard of operation that is not excelled in towns of like population and importance.

It has been my experience that a close personal supervision of every detail of operation, from the building of new theatres, on down through the operation of every branch effects a saving of many thousands of dollars each year and ultimately results in the successful operation of a number of small towns that otherwise could not be operated under circuit control.

We have always conducted our business along a plane that has enabled us to present high class entertainment in high class theatres, and we have not subscribed to the double feature policies and other schemes that have been so prevalent throughout the entire country for the past few years. We are in the business of merchandising motion picture entertainment.

Hall Houses Found In 19 Communities

Within a 200-mile area in southern Texas are located the 24 theatres that make up the Hall Industries circuit, headed by Henry W. Hall, and with headquarters in Beeville. Their activities are detailed in this Round Table Guest Section. There are two theatres in five of the communities and single houses in 14 others. Names and places are as follows, localities listed alphabetically: Rialto and Queens, in Alice; Rialto, in Aransas Pass; Rialto and Mission, in Beeville; Rialto and Palace, in Cuero; Palace, Fredericksburg; Rialto, Freer; Crystal, Gonzales; Rialto, Kenedy; Arcadia, Kerrville, and Rialto and Rex, in Kingsville.

Also the Bakers, in Lockhart; Princess, Luling; Texas, Newgulf; Rialto, Refugio; Palace and Plaza, San Marcos; Rialto, Sinton; Rialto, Three Rivers; Capitol, West Columbia, and the Arcadia, Woodsboro.

Miniature Oil Pumps Sell "Let 'Em Have It"

Numerous angles on various September attractions were utilized by Manager R. Malcolm Mills, to sell that month's attractions, at the Rialto, Cuero, Texas, outstanding being hook-in with oil company to sell "Let 'Em Have It."

Mills borrowed miniature oil derrick and two gasoline pumps used in a nearby window (see photo) especially lighted for the occasion. Copy tiein was that the speed with which the G-Men traveled was to be matched with that made possible by the advertised brand of gas.

Temple dresses were plugged by leading store on tiein to "Curly Top," Mills obtaining top window for the display and newspaper space from store. Another child star plug was on "Little Big Shot," starring Sybil Jason, and this was put over by dairy tieup for imprinted milk bottle tops. Sidewalk stenciling and large banners about town also helped to put this one over.

On "Baboona," Mills obtained a carload of Texas bamboo cane with which he decorated the boxoffice and draped the lobby. Two monkeys were borrowed from the city park to add further front atmosphere and animation.

"GOOD WILL IS LIFE BLOOD"

Most Valuable Requisite in the Profitable Conduct of Smaller Town Theatres, Says Executive

by F. D. NANCE

Assistant to General Manager, Hall Theatres

In successfully operating a number of small town theatres, the most valuable requisite that we have found from years of experience is good will. Pages and pages of copy have been written about this one subject, countless thousands more will be written in the years to come, but one fact cannot be escaped. Good will is the life blood of the smaller theatre circuits.

In order that we may continue to hold the good will that we have made attempts to gain, it is our intentions at all times to give to the various towns in which we operate, theatres that can be compared with the deluxe theatres of our surrounding large cities.

Each detail in the operation of these theatres is carefully supervised. Every appointment is modern in detail, equipment is kept in repair and all modernization units are installed as soon as they are announced. By maintaining theatres in this manner, affording luxurious surroundings and appointments, presenting only the best motion picture entertainment that can be secured, we have definitely established a close relationship between the theatre and the community that money cannot buy.

Managers Join Civic Drives

All our managers are coached to give liberally of their time and efforts toward any civic or local enterprise. They assume a position of leadership in their community in all these undertakings, work in close cooperation with the schools and other institutions and have been able to accomplish great results that reflect in the box office with added patronage.

Our policy is to operate the theatre units as local enterprises. Accomplishing this, we have distinguished the theatre as a monument of local pride, and one of the show places of the community that is pointed out with pride by all the residents to visitors and newcomers alike.

We have found through years of operations along these lines that this method of creating good will certainly pays dividends. This is evidenced by the fact that in all movements of a community spirit, the theatre is the first place contacted.

Supervision of each theatre is under the personal inspection of some member of the home office who makes each town regularly, supervises all details of the operation, establishes contacts with various civic leaders and clubs and promotes a feeling of genuine friendship with such leaders.

Policies Hold Local Trade

By conducting a circuit of theatres along these lines we have found that we can retain the business that otherwise would journey to nearby cities and larger towns, and can bring into these towns a great number of people in their immediate trade territories that would otherwise make trips to these larger towns.

It has therefore definitely been proven that good will is one of the determining factors between profit and loss in the small town circuit operation.

Bookings By Mail Found Successful

by AL LAVENDER

Booking Manager, Hall Theatres

The booking of entire programs by correspondence from the center of operations for some 35 theatres with from four to seven changes weekly can be accomplished successfully. To prove this has been the greatest task of this department. We take considerable pride in the fact that it has never yet been necessary to take our booking charts to the exchange center in Dallas, 300 miles distant, to book our programs.

The advantages of our taking a definite stand on the above policy are many, and more than outweigh the disadvantages. Beeville, for instance, is exactly in the center of our circuit, none of our situations being over 175 miles away. By concentrating our activities within this radius we are able to keep in touch with the pulse of the small town public in our particular section of the country. Should we decide to establish our offices in one of the larger cities, we should possibly tend to be influenced by the manner in which certain pictures go over in the larger towns.

Again, civic pride is quite a factor in the small town operation, and to let our patrons know that we are doing our share in building for the interests of the smaller communities is very important as a good will measure.

Booker Should Visit Theatres

It should be the booker's duty to make an occasional visit to each situation and this can be managed easily on our present set-up. There are many problems which can be straightened out only by these visits. For instance, most of our towns require a western on Saturdays, whereas in a few situations a "horse opera" would be booked out of town. Then there is the difficulty of booking according to the policies of our larger towns as compared with the policy in those theatres situated near the Mexican border.

Booking our pictures by correspondence, however, calls for a great deal of detail, concentration, and effect. Our system must be foolproof and a most complete record of filing, cut-off sheets and charts are kept and analyzed.

HALL THEATRES' ADVERTISING

Ways and Means Employed by Circuit to Publicize Dates; "Roadshow" Campaign Monthly

by NICK KARL Advertising Department

Our managers are instructed to take part in local activities in their town and sell themselves as well as the theatre to their community. As a starter, all managers are urged to become members of some civic club. The manager that stays too close to his theatre, regardless of which department most of his time is spent, is not a very successful theatreman in a small town. A wide-awake manager will see to it that he is right in the middle of any activity going on in his community and lend a hand when needed.

A manager can be the best kind of display man obtainable, put on flashy fronts, engineer all kinds of publicity, be an A-1 projectionist and a perfect director of house personnel, but if he lacks the knack of mixing, meeting and maintaining friends in a small community, he just don't get over.

Our booker sends out a list of pictures for the coming month and the manager checks and suggests changes that are best suited for his town. The changes are made and a plan of action for the coming month is mapped out. We do not demand that every picture be sold in a big way, as it is physically impossible to do this when we have five programs in one week to sell. But we do suggest that at least one picture a week be selected and a campaign put on in order to sell it. Care must be taken, as this activity can run into large figures and the outlay will be more than the take.

Pictures "Roadshowed"

About once a month a picture is selected that is good in story and lacking star value, etc., and a campaign is planned for the entire circuit. Bookings are arranged so that the circuit can be made with a sound truck and trailer. A lobby front is built and special advertising printed up for each town. Care is taken in selecting the picture as it must have mass appeal, as a mistake made in the selection of pictures for the roadshow will act as a detriment to future roadshows.

Each town is supplied with weekly window cards with their entire program for the week. Also a miniature card program to be distributed to the home and local territory. Most towns are so situated that they are in the center of a group of smaller towns. Quite a bit of patronage comes from these smaller communities and in planning our activities we do not leave them out.

We maintain a print shop that turns out most all the printed matter with the exception of lithographed heralds which we use on the better type of pictures. All copy and dates are checked by the booking charts so that there are no mistakes made as to dates, etc. A manager writes in for any type of herald or novelty that he wants and this is turned over to the printing dept. We try to have the manager write all his own copy for his particular activity as it is human to push your own ideas to a conclusion. However, the main office gives the manager all the help that is possible by offering suggestions, sending out special displays from the art department and giving any help that is needed in exploitation.

The picture is the thing the patron wants to see, regardless of what other inducement you might offer. And it has been proven that a good picture will gross more business than all the bank nights and give-aways combined.

Concentrate on Star Selling

In mentioning the picture we all know that the star has plenty to do with the success of it. Therefore it is necessary to concentrate on the star when selling a show. One of the best mediums of doing this is by distributing an 8 by 10 autographed photo of the star. There are many ways in doing this and half the cost can be promoted by selling to a local merchant. The entire cost can be promoted but we find that an even break for all is the best bet. No doubt a new star would finally get to be known without very much effort but the smart showman does not wait for this popularity to grow. He usually knows what the picture has and the possibilities of the star and can impart this information in various ways. Result: He is cashing in on every one of that particular star's appearances long before the fellow that just waits for his patrons to find out for themselves.

Other mediums offered by the exchanges are the giant standees and we find that they are a great help in selling our show. Especially in the smaller towns where an outside lobby is not seen by all prospective customers. We use these pieces in the inner lobbies four or five days in advance of playdate and move them out front when the picture is playing. This guarantees plenty readers. Care must be taken not to advertise too many pictures with decorations and standees at one time, as the patron goes away with a cluttered up impression.

Nance Arranges Novel Screen Show

Calling it an innovation in motion pictures in that sector is the screen variety bill arranged by F. D. Nance, for the Rialto, in Beeville, consisting of a series of short subjects of one and two-reel length. To advertise it, an interesting folder was put out containing a series of single sheets, each devoted to one unit of the program.

Various subjects were as follows: "Music Land," a Silly Symphony, followed by Universal's "Camera Thrills," then RKO Radio's "March of Time" and a Hal Roach Charley Chase comedy. "Going on Two," the quintuplets show and "Fish From Hell" wound up the program.

Strong campaign was put behind the program, results being reported very encouraging for future similar programs.

Steam From Smoke Stack Made With Dry Ice

Describing his shadow box made out of the three-sheet on "Steamboat 'Round the Bend," Manager R. H. Biggs, of the Rialto, Alice, details the construction of this animation as follows:

Cutouts of Rogers and Cobb were placed in foreground and on each side. Space between was cut out with title and star names printed lightly on scrim in this space. Background was picture of steamboat with small holes around smoke stack and steamwheel. Behind this was container of water with small block of dry ice added every day.

With aid of piece of tin above container of water and the dry ice, the steam coming through the holes appears to be smoke from the stack. Lights behind the shadow box show steaming boats and when lights are cut off title and stars appear.

Biggs also reports effective a street projector idea consisting of slide from exchange projected from roof of theatre to wall of building across street.

Invites College Freshmen To Be Guests of Theatre

To make the college lads feel more at home, Manager Earl V. Gassaway, Rialto, Kingsville, invited all freshmen attending Texas College of Arts and Industries, in Kingsville, to be guests of the theatre on registration day. Each student was given specially printed admission card with "welcome" copy and good up to a certain day.

Another smart college angle was Gassaway's "Celebration Week" on start of fall term and opening of new dormitories. Programs stressing the "week" and the ace attractions booked during that time were distributed at the school and round town.

Special Color Edition

For his date on "Becky Sharp" Earl tied local paper to print special color edition with title streamer heads across front page. Newsies ran through business and residential districts shouting "extry" and as this was first time in years paper had put out an extra, Gassaway reports stunt effective.

In addition to other helpful ideas, six foot box carrying copy lettered on the four sides was planted (see photo) in center of busiest street location.

The close cooperation by this Round Tabler with the nearby college student groups and officials indicates clearly the intensive cultivation of attendance at the Rialto Theatre from this class of patronage.

Plants Covered Wagon On Theatre Marquee

Covered wagons on the street may not be a novelty in Fredericksburg, Texas, but on a theatre marquee, such a vehicle created lots of traffic problems according to the report from W. E. Knocke, who operates the Palace Theatre there, under Hall Industries direction.

The stunt was pulled on "Wagon Wheels," and Knocke had the wagon taken apart and then assembled on the marquee. Further atmosphere was gathered by special lighting and cowboys singing.

On "Cowboy Millionaires" Knocke reports a "real live" cow milking contest and on a recent Temple picture a stage show was put on for children in cooperation with local kindergarden class teacher..

Borrows Stuffed Lion From Local Lions Club

According to Manager J. P. Kaufman's campaign on "Bring 'Em Back" at the Rialto, New Braunfels, Texas, this Hall Industries theatreman reached a new high on lunch club tieups by borrowing a mounted lion from his Lions Club for lobby flash. Trees and moss to represent the jungle and small mounted animals were also used to further convey the African idea.

"I am a great believer in fresh paint," says Kaufman, "and think that a little paint on frames and on other parts of the front applied frequently attracts and gives an appearance of prosperity."

Plants Theatre Sign On City Water Tower

With only a population of 1500 in Three Rivers, Tex., Manager Sam Schiewitz of the Hall Industries Rialto, in that spot, also goes after the trade in his drawing area.

On "Little Big Shot," Sam promoted sign on high water tower in the center of the city, the flash being visible during the day for miles in all directions. Imprinted milk bottle caps, title and dates lettered on two highways leading into town were other angles.

Schiewitz also tells of stunt using wire stretched across street with letters of title on individual transparent boxes, each containing a light, the effect being very much like a powerful electric sign.

BOONDOGGLING. Harold Garfield, Rialto Theatre, Newark, dug up this old baby carriage and built house around it, chassis holding frames to plug weekly attractions.

VERSATILITY NEEDED IN HALL ART SHOP

There are probably very few of my fellow theatrical artists whose work requires as much versatility as is needed in the Art Shop of Hall Industries Theatres. However, I believe it is to the artist's advantage to be able to do a little of everything, since my experience in the large city shops has shown me that specialized experts are often stumped by simple jobs outside their own line.

For permanent fixtures such as shadow boxes I have found that the cutawl will cut delicate designs perfectly from veneer wood and tough materials.

General work includes signs in gold leaf, cut-outs, standees, cards, processed banners and, of course, a complete change of front from time to time.

In the art work of star heads for the lobby pieces I prefer pastels. Velour paper makes a good surface, but I have discovered that ordinary insulating cane board also gives excellent results and can either be left plain or tinted to the desired shade with water color.—JAVAN ODER, Art Department, Hall Industries Theatres.

Dedicates Opening Day To Farmers and Families

On "Farmer Takes a Wife" Manager Lynn Smith, of the Crystal and Rialto, Gonzales, Tex., worked out a farmer campaign using many rural angles. First was dedication of opening day of show to farmers in local area and surrounding territory, with address made by prominent speaker. Band concert by American Legion was put on before the ceremonies.

Other attractors included 100 pound basket of groceries to farmer attending with largest family, prizes to farmer coming longest distance to attend show, and etc. Smith also arranged for free coffee in the lobby during the festivities, and had lots of assistance from local paper in putting over the day.

One week ahead teletype machine was set up in lobby of the Midway Theatre, Rockford, Ill., through tieup effected by Robert S. Strauss for "Diamond Jim." Girl picked up messages, stripped them on blanks and distributed them to lobby spectators.

"Curly Top" Highlighted By Various Contests

For six weeks in advance of "Curly Top" opening M. H. Chakeres, Regent Theatre, Springfield, Ohio, tied up with leading baking company for a contest on "why I like Blank baked goods." Shirley Temple dolls were awarded winners and merchant carried cut of doll together with contest data in all ads which were changed weekly.

Another contest was the choosing on stage of a "Miss Curly Top," judges selecting three tots and winner chosen by audience applause. The campaign and engagement was followed by trailer announcing that Miss Temple had established a new house record and the management was sorry to announce that her next big picture "Little Skipper" would not be released until November.

Morgan Uses His Car For "Scandals" Bally

J. N. Morgan, Rylander Theatre, Americus, Ga., converted his automobile into a street bally (see photo) for "George White's Scandals." Morgan has further installed a public address system in his car, which he uses constantly.

On "Wings in the Dark" a plane circled ball park dropping heralds over onlookers and editor of one of the sports columns mentioned stunt in paper.

Street Parade Features Steinbuch's "Melody" Date

A street parade through the downtown streets was arranged by manager Everett Steinbuch and Milt Harris, publicist at Loew's State, Cleveland for "Broadway Melody," headed by police motorcycle escort and followed by Cleveland Auto Club's pathfinder car, bannered sound truck and float with costumed girls. Float was followed by seven Jello trucks with copy "Jello everybody, Jack Benny's on the screen at" etc., etc. Float with gals was later taken to football game where it created much comment from the spectators.

Oil paintings showing scenes from picture were planted in vacant store windows, jewelry store displayed stills of June Knight wearing trinkets, special colored standees were planted in hotel lobbies, and attractive white auto with amplification playing hit tunes drove through residential sections.

Gondolier on Truck Ballys Sobler's Date

In addition, a classified ad contest was started, offering tickets to winners. Theatre ads were done in two colors, regulation black with standout copy in red playing up the eight stars in picture.

Elliott Stages Car Parade on "Glory"

Going after the Auburn people for his "Page Miss Glory" date at the Alhambra, Canton, Ohio, Doc Elliott engineered a parade of bannered cars, one of which was parked in front of theatre during run of picture. Salesmen personally plugged the date and for his street bally, Doc togged out a couple dressed in hick clothes dating from the nineties and had them stroll through streets carrying film copy.

On "Keeper of the Bees" a prominent bee-hive window tieup was arranged, tickets being awarded to those coming closest to guessing correct number of bees in display.

Denson's "Curly" Window Display

V. S. Denson, Albany Theatre, Albany, Ga., promoted local department store for window display (see photo) of Shirley Temple frocks in connection with his current showing of "Curly Top." Center of window was devoted to enlarged colored photo of the starlet together with smaller cut-outs.

Spradley's Mouse Club

Gordon Spradley's latest stunt in connection with his Mickey Mouse club at the Biltmore Theatre, Miami, was the promotion in exchange for lobby credit card of ice cold sliced watermelon for the kids. Gordon has a large parking lot adjoining his house and it is there at the break of the show that the melon is served with the help of local boy scout troop. Chief Mickey Mouser cut the first piece of fruit and stunt received newspaper mention.

Old Tire Day

Terre Haute, Ind., celebrated an "old tire day" when H. J. Arnold at the Lyceum Theatre there tied in with a tire company who advertised that tickets would be awarded to kids bringing old tires to the theatre. Tickets were good only the matinee and from all acounts, plenty of old "shoes" were turned in.

Gau Ballys "Sing Sing"

For the engagement of "Sing Sing Nights" assistant Glynn H. Gau, Rio Theatre, Billings, Mont., rigged himself up in officer's uniform and with revolver leveled at theatre "convict" in stripes with back banner (see photo) paraded about town, ending up at theatre.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1935-36 season.

WHOSE SCREEN?

A CONSIDERABLE and unnecessary pother is being raised again these days because from time to time controversy laden material in news and topical reels fetches up against local attitudes and gets edited off the screen. Perhaps it needs to be stated once more that the producer of the reel is not its publisher. The publishing is done by the exhibitor and it is his screen and his responsibility in the eyes of his community.

The customer who buys a magazine at the cigar counter of the local drugstore and finds therein something that displeases him may write to the editor, but he does not bleat to the druggist. However, when he goes to the theatre and gets displeased he files his complaint with and against the manager in the lobby.

Magazine editors sometimes find it profitable, for the sake of impression on a selected audience, to dare the displeasure of many potential customers, but the printed page serves its audiences in units of one reader at a time, whereas the motion picture must serve them by hundreds or thousands at each "reading." Editing is in consequence a very different job, just as difficult, but not so exciting, not so self-satisfying to the editor.

"GOOD INTENT"

GRAVE importance attaches to the set of conditions which have given Mr. Ed Kuykendall, as president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, occasion to bulletin his alarm at what he sees as the increasing invitation to government regulation implied by exhibitor complaints piling up in Washington.

Mr. Kuykendall sees all the progress in the development of distributor-exhibitor relations of the last twenty years "wiped out." The wiping out, one presumes, applies to the passing of the Blue Eagle and the NRA Code, with its administrators and boards.

According to the memory of an eye witness to many of the gyrations of the Eagle, those activities were rather definitely in the nature of "government regulation", too. It was a structure of regulation so ill-considered as to be swept away by a gust of chicken feathers in a court decision on the poultry trade.

Whatever gains in improved trade affairs were made in the Code period and under it, and there were some, of course, will be seen in retrospect rather more accurately as decisions in specific cases and causes rather than the establishment of broad principles of practice. Rather early in the days of code wrangling, when the working documents had piled up into something like 20,000 words of tentative code, it was Mr. R. H. Cochrane of Universal who punctured the atmosphere with a suggestion that the whole of it might well be boiled down to "I'll play fair."

It was often enough privately admitted by code authorities that its operation was always about as good as the intent of the men who sought to use and apply it, but no better.

It remains today just as practical as ever for the industry to bring good intent to bear.

Although it is never phrased that way, the fact is that the menaces of government regulation and new legislation are just another flowering of an old thistle—censorship, only this happens to be a business censorship issue.

Recently enough to be fresh in the memory of all parties at interest, the industry found within itself forces adequate to deal with the most acute manifestation of censorship perils with reference to the content of motion pictures with which it ever has been confronted. The internal methods applied and the problems involved were and are no less complex and difficult than the trade problems calling for attention. In very truth it would seem that the lines of demarcation between the fair and the unfair, the constructive and the destructive in the field of the business of the motion picture are a shade more obvious than in the art of the motion picture.

The problems of decency on the screen have been met by the self-enforcement of good intent. The problems on the ledger can be met as readily.

THE OUTLANDERS

A PANORAMIC sweep across the land brings to the observer a conviction that pride of name may not be the best policy for imposing circuit theatres. A large number of important theatres dotted across the map are proclaiming themselves to be alien institutions in communities which are highly hometown minded. That is no help to the manager who, to attain the highest success must make himself and his theatre a part of the community. This is written in Hutchinson out in Kansas, where flaming lights proclaim an ornate theatre to the townfolk, the farmers and the oil drillers, under the name of Fox. Whatever Fox means to them it is something or somebody very far away. Distribution policies, exhibition policies, booking deals, all these as they operated to affect house programs, are far indeed from recognizing or tending to create trademark values for the screen. The casual minded consumer is not, and has no opportunity to get, brand conscious about the movies.

This Week

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

Acquitted

The 13 individual and corporate distributors accused in the Government's criminal action in United States district court at St. Louis Monday were acquitted of the charge of conspiracy to violate the anti-trust laws. After a six weeks' trial the jury reached its verdict of not guilty in half an hour of deliberation.

Now comes the suit in equity. The defendants' first move was to petition for disqualification of Judge Moore from hearing the case. The defense counsel said the court was biased. The story is on page 13.

Too "Arty"?

Hollywood, in the midst of extending its production activities even deeper into the making of "high type" motion pictures, culturally and otherwise, has been taken back no little by the assertion of Edward L. Kuykendall that features now are "too arty, too costumy and too morbid."

Mr. Kuykendall's opinion as an independent theatre owner from Mississippi is one thing, but his position as president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America gives another color to his remarks.

Maturity, he observed, has little place on the screen.

And so, what with the general impression that the new standard of films has helped the box office, Mr. Kuykendall appears to have presented a subject for considerable controversy. The story appears on page 16.

Sleeves Rolled Up

There was evidence this week that minority bondholders of General Theatres Equipment have only just started their fight in the courts to force a review of the bankruptcy proceedings of Fox Midland and Fox Rocky Mountain theatre circuits, involving some 130-odd properties.

They had sought to impose a lien on the circuits in their favor, were defeated by a Kansas City federal court decision, and now will appeal. See page 28.

Taxes and Treaties

Distributors and exhibitors alike in Spain are in quite a dilemma over the heavy sales tax which is taking for the Government 7½ per cent of their grosses.

Bound up with the tax problem is the subject of treaties. While hoping that if and when a new commercial treaty is ratified the import duties affecting the motion picture business will be at least reduced, film leaders are wondering whether that would mean an expansion and increase of the sales tax on gross sales. The story is on page 47.

Credits

Detailed screen authorship records for a total of 301 feature pictures completed during the year ending October 1 have been reported by the major producing studios cooperating with the Writers Code of Practice of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

These records showed that altogether only 519 writers did work of enough importance to be recorded on the entire three hundred pictures. These included screen play authorship, minor contributions to treatment, dialogue and special sequences, and authorship of screen originals. In addition to listing screen credits, the work of other writers making "valuable contributions" to the script also is recognized by the Academy, and official records of such work are published in a bi-monthly bulletin distributed throughout the industry for the information of production executives and directors.

Up to Insurers

Amkino, distributing agency in this country for Soviet films, is leaving it up to its insurance company to recover the print of "Chapayev," which the company charges was stolen from the Cameo theatre in Kenosha, Wis., last week.

The print disappeared during an argument between a representative of the local Communist group sponsoring the showing and a delegation from the American Legion, Parent-Teacher group and other organizations, over a requested screening prior to the two-day run. The Communist group later demanded warrants be issued for the arrest of several persons, claiming assault. When confronted by those they accused, however, they were "unable to identify" them.

The Amkino office in New York said on Wednesday that two reels of the print had been returned and that its insurance company would initiate efforts to recover the remainder.

The print of "The Youth of Maxim," which was reported confiscated by the Detroit police censor after he revoked a permit issued to the Cinema Guild, has been returned, Amkino reported.

Bishops Meet

Roman Catholic bishops and other church dignitaries were meeting in Washington this week for their annual conference on church affairs. It is probable a report will be received from the Legion of Decency, although no agenda was made public.

The conference was being held behind closed doors but it is expected a statement will be issued at its close outlining some of the more important discussions.

Stage Prices

The promise of lower-priced seats in New York's legitimate theatres as a result of the projected building code was held last week at a meeting of producers, architects, designers and representatives of acting groups. Bernard S. Deutsch, president of the Board of Aldermen, pledged his support to the movement for the new regulations and pointed out that the present rules governing theatre construction were "antiquated."

Under the new code the construction of theatres with stores and space for offices above the auditorium would be permitted and this, it was pointed out, will bring new revenues to the theatre owner, with the result that a theatrical production will not have to meet the entire burden of rents, taxes and similar expenses.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Cowdin's Plans

Explaining his position in Universal Pictures, to which he has loaned $750,000, on an option to buy at $5,500,000, J. Cheever Cowdin declares that until the 90-day option expires, or action is taken before that date, he will not extend his motion picture financing activities any further.

It is not his policy to participate directly in management, he said, adding that no sweeping executive changes are contemplated. See page 27.

Studio Payrolls

The aggregate payroll of the motion picture industry in Hollywood for this year will amount to approximately $100,000,000, according to the Ross Federal Research Corporation, affiliate of the Ross Federal Service. This figure is an increase of approximately 53.8 per cent over last year's salaries. The data was compiled in connection with the periodical Ross survey of business conditions in California.

Increased production, the more elaborate nature of a large number of pictures and the consequent employment of more players, extras and technical help are the chief reasons for the payroll increase.

Standard Contract

After considerable money expenditure and several months of drafting, a standard contract between distributor and exhibitor is in operation in New Zealand. Analysis is made by Cliff Holt, Sydney correspondent of the Herald, on page 39.

A sizeable segment of the New Zealand trade is skeptical of success of the plan, writes Mr. Holt, though he points out that revision of the document, which is being applied on a twelve months experimental trial, may be had at the end of that period on application by either association or at any time before that on joint request.

Radio Curb

A plan for the complete revamping of the country's present system of radio broadcasting is being studied by the Federal Communication Commission, it has been disclosed in Washington in connection with a move designed to eliminate duplication of chain-station programs.

The board adopted a motion by Commissioner Stewart directing its broadcasting division to investigate and report on the desirability of special regulation of chain broadcasting, containing the inference that network broadcasting methods were frustrating allocation rulings made by its predecessors, the Federal Radio Commission.

Code Balloon

The stage is all set at Washington for a meeting on December 9th of leading industries to discuss with federal officials the advisability and possibility of rebuilding code machinery of one form or another.

The motion picture industry accepted the invitation to attend the conferences, which already are predicted to be headed for failure because of protests from industry against further interference with business by the Government. The viewpoints on industry and labor and of the Government are explained on page 26

Protest

Robert G. Closterman, German consul of Portland, Ore., has filed a protest against the Adolph Hitler sequence in the current release of "March of Time" now being shown at the Paramount theatre there. The management of the house, however, has declined to eliminate any scenes from the picture. In Ohio the state censors barred the sequence in its entirety.

Resign

In one of the biggest surprises Detroit theatre circles have had for some time Carl Buermele of Cooperative Theatres of Michigan, Inc., has revealed that the eight theatres controlled by Frank A. Westman and Louis Wisper had resigned from the booking combine at a meeting of the board of directors last week.

'GO-TO-THEATRE NIGHT' DECREED IN GERMANY

The mayor of Nordhausen, Germany, has made Thursday a legally enforced "go-to-the-theatre-night." He has issued an ordinance forbidding all other forms of amusement or public exhibitions Thursday evenings.

In his official appeal to citizens he states that even if they do not enjoy going to the municipal theatre they should buy season tickets anyway as "a sacrifice for the sake of the nation."

By Decree

The government of the Federal District (City of Rio de Janeiro and environs) shortly will issue a decree requiring that all motion picture theatres within a stipulated radius of the city's main business district install air conditioning equipment, according to a report to the Department of Commerce from assistant trade commissioner J. Winsor Ives at Rio de Janeiro. It is estimated that the decree will affect ten houses.

Air Studios

The new Hollywood studios of the National Broadcasting Company, equipped with the most advanced technical facilities to handle broadcasts, will be dedicated early next month, it has been announced by Richard G. Patterson, Jr., executive vice-president of NBC.

Merlin H. Aylesworth, president of the broadcasting company, and Mr. Patterson will be present at the dedication ceremonies.

"Hollywood is a great reservoir of talent for radio," Mr. Patterson said, "and we expect that many more programs of national interest will originate there now that we have the proper facilities."

'Home'

William Randolph Hearst has arrived in New York from California. He said he would remain in Manhattan "at least until after the holidays." His purpose he said in leaving the Pacific Coast was to avoid paying the California income tax.

"If I stay there for six consecutive months I am subject to the new 15 per cent California income tax, so I have returned to my home state of New York," said Mr. Hearst, who lists his permanent address at 137 Riverside Drive.

Reelected

Mrs. C. E. Gross was reelected state president of the Ohio Motion Picture Council at the organization's second annual convention held last week in Columbus.

Other officers named were: Mrs. W. J. MacLachlan, Cleveland, vice-president; Mrs. C. A. Wells, Youngstown, recording secretary; Mrs. H. D. VanKirk, Columbus, responding secretary; Mrs. W. C. Vogel, Cleveland, treasurer; Mrs. C. A. Rager, Grovesport, auditor.

DISTRIBUTORS ACQUITTED OF CONSPIRACY CHARGE IN ST. LOUIS TRIAL

St. Louis Case Step by Step

JANUARY 6, 1935

Federal grand jury at St. Louis launched an investigation of complaints to the Department of Justice

JANUARY 11

Indictments charging criminal conspiracy to violate the Sherman anti-trust laws returned by the grand jury against Warner, Paramount, RKO, and corporate subsidiaries, and six leading executives.

MAY 17

Conference was held in Washington in the office of Homer S. Cummings, attorney general, in which an attempt was made to conciliate the St. Louis situation. Among those participating was Sol A. Rosenblatt, former NRA code division administrator.

SEPTEMBER 10

Judge George H. Moore in the United States district court, St. Louis, continued the equity injunction case to October 1.

SEPTEMBER 21

Judge Moore rejected defense motion for an additional bill of particulars, removing the final obstacle to an early trial. The Government abandoned its intention to name a special court.

SEPTEMBER 30

Trial got underway in United States district court in St. Louis, with Judge Moore presiding.

NOVEMBER 11

Case went to the jury. The verdict is not guilty.

NOVEMBER 12

Counsel for Paramount, acting for all defendants, filed an affidavit seeking to disqualify Judge Moore from hearing the equity proceedings.

Thirteen individual and corporate distributor defendants were acquitted of charges of conspiracy to violate the anti-trust laws, in a verdict of a federal grand jury in the United States district court in St. Louis on Monday. In the criminal action brought by the United States Government the defendants had been accused specifically of concertedly cutting off a product supply from three independent St. Louis theatres, the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central. The trial had been under way more than six weeks. The jury took only half an hour to come to its verdict of not guilty.

The decision, awaited by the entire industry with widespread interest, was particularly important to exhibitors in a dozen cities who had regarded the verdict as a guidepost influencing similar anti-trust actions against large distributors in their territories.

Followed Indictments on Complaint Of Harry Arthur-Fanchon and Marco

The prosecution, instituted in the court of Judge George H. Moore by the Department of Justice on the complaint of the independent Harry Arthur-Fanchon and Marco theatre interests, followed criminal conspiracy indictments returned by the grand jury last January 11 involving these defendants:

Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; Vitaphone Corporation, First National Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation, General Theatrical Enterprises, Inc.; Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc.; Paramount Distributing Corporation and RKO Distributing Corporation; and as individuals, Harry M. Warner, president of Warners; Herman Starr, Warner treasurer and vice-president; Gradwell L. Sears, Warner sales executive; George J. Schaefer, vice-president and general manager of Paramount Pictures, and Ned E. Depinet, president of RKO Distributing. Abel Cary Thomas, secretary and general counsel of Warner Bros., a defendant and Government witness, was seriously ill and a severance was granted in his case so the trial could proceed without delay.

Speedy Reaching of Verdict Surprises Courtroom; Only Two Ballots Taken

The swift verdict took the courtroom by surprise. None of the defendants was in court and only a handful of the million dollar legal talent representing the defense, and none of the Government counsel. Judge Moore had called in the jurors shortly after 6 p. m. for the purpose of releasing them for the night, when Joseph G. Eddy, the foreman, announced a verdict had been reached.

Two ballots were taken after brief deliberation by the jurors, who agreed that none of the defendants was guilty. One of the jurors was heard to remark: "We just couldn't see the case." Judge Moore made no comment.

Former United States Senator James A. Reed of Missouri, white-haired, fiery-tongued chief of defense counsel, declined comment on the verdict. However, he said: "I think the tide is swinging strongly against the New Deal." The case had been considered a part of the Government's drive against "malefactors of great wealth," and the Government counsel had insistently hammered away at the large distributor defendants as representative of the encroachments of "big business" against the "little fellow".

There remain the equity proceedings in which the Government seeks a preliminary injunction against the defendants, to prevent them from continuing the practices with which they were charged in the criminal case. Russell Hardy, special assistant attorney general in charge of the prosecution, on Tuesday insisted that a hearing date be set immediately, because "the business of these people is being destroyed by a ruthless conspiracy."

Defense counsel, through William R. Gentry, who represents Paramount, on Tuesday filed an application seeking to disqualify Judge Moore from hearing the equity injunction proceedings. If custom is followed, Judge Moore will be disqualified and another trial judge will be named.

SEEK NEW JUDGE FOR EQUITY CASE

It was learned from one of the jurors that on the first ballot, taken 15 minutes after the jury retired, the vote was nine to three for acquittal. The three holding out for conviction were said to have been George W. Fullerton, colored waiter at the Hotel York; Emil H. Lauter, coal salesman, and Charles L. Krause, all of St. Louis. W. H. Stubblefield, real estate man, is reported to have said that he would argue all night for a not guilty verdict. The nine jurors favoring acquittal then began to persuade the others. The second ballot was taken 15 minutes later. In all, the jury was out 38 minutes.

Word came from Washington this week that, smarting under the sting of utter failure in the St. Louis prosecutions, Department of Justice officials have begun a new survey of film cases, with the apparent determination of making their position more impregnable before proceeding with similar actions. Department officials had nothing to say about the acquittal, other than to point out that conspiracy is one of the most difficult of all charges to prove.

The St. Louis verdict was considered a serious blow to the department, which heretofore had prided itself on its high record of convictions. To make that record, only such cases as the Government felt could be adequately supported had been instituted, and it was with deep confidence that the St. Louis prosecution was launched.

Wood Fined for Contempt

In sequel to the trial, Frederick H. Wood, New York attorney who leaped into prominence by winning the now famous anti-NRA case in the United States supreme court, and who is reported receiving a fee of $1,500 a day from Warner as head of its defense counsel, was fined $100 Tuesday morning by Judge Moore for contempt of court.

As soon as court opened, Judge Moore called for Mr. Wood and, with the attorney before the bench, said: "Throughout the trial your conduct has been contemptuous. You have shouted and yelled at witnesses to 'shut up,' and this was culminated yesterday when you referred to the court's charge to the jury as a 'stump speech.' This is a flagrant contempt, and I fine you $100."

"If Wood were a young and inexperienced lawyer, it would be a different matter," Judge Moore told Mr. Reed, "but the cool and deliberate manner in which he made the statement yesterday was an aggravation." Mr. Reed apologized for Mr. Wood, saying that all of the attorneys for the defense "had tried to be respectful throughout the trial." When the court ordered Mr. Wood into custody of the bailiff until the fine had been paid, defense counsel conferred on the advisability of bringing habeas corpus proceedings in the United States circuit court of appeals. After 15 minutes of consultation, however, they decided to contribute $10 each.

Mr. Hardy, for the Government, on Tuesday proceeded to press for an early hearing on the injunction, but Judge Moore indicated the condition of his docket was such that he could not permit another long trial at this time. He said his docket was full for a month.

MILLION WORDS OF TESTIMONY TAKEN

The record on which the jury in the St. Louis case arrived at its decision consisted of more than 1,000,000 words of testimony taken during the trial, spread over more than 3,000 pages of typewritten manuscript.

Despite the expectancy that the jury would take time to digest this mass of testimony and the judge's instructions which covered 68 pages, the jury required only 38 minutes and two ballots to reach its verdict.

The Government counsel insisted that the court could act on the basis of the record in the criminal conspiracy case supported by an affidavit. He refused to accept the view of defense counsel that the acquittal of the defendants eliminated further consideration of the alleged conspiracy.

Mr. Gentry, for the defense, said he did not think his clients, Paramount and George J. Schaefer, would have a fair trial, inasmuch as no preparation had been made on this case. He informed the court he would file an affidavit setting forth the reasons for asking for disqualification, and Judge Moore commented the procedure would be proper. Under the rules, Judge Moore will submit to the decision of the circuit court of appeals, which is expected to act on the Paramount application for a new judge.

Charges "Ruthless Conspiracy"

George S. Leisure, RKO attorney, asked for a dismissal of the injunction application and cited a United States supreme court decision in support of his contention that the decision in the criminal case eliminates the charges in the equity action. Mr. Hardy replied that Mr. Leisure misunderstood the case, and that the action under way was an anti-trust case. Government counsel insisted that the acquittal did not alter the facts in the injunction suit, and that the Government was entitled to the preliminary injunction because the business of Fanchon & Marco was at stake, adding: "This is the most ruthless, brutal conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce that has been known to American business."

Maurice Schweitzer, St. Louis branch manager for Paramount, at the direction of that company late Tuesday filed an affidavit under Section 21 of the judicial code charging Judge Moore with personal bias and prejudice against Paramount and in favor of the Government in the pending equity proceedings. The affidavit was accompanied by a good faith certificate signed by Samuel W. Fordyce and William R. Gentry, attorneys for Paramount.

While the court rules require that such affidavits be filed at least 10 days before the court term begins, the affidavits said this requirement could not be complied with because knowledge of the court's prejudice did not come to the defendant heretofore.

Among the reasons given in support of the accusation of bias and prejudice were that the judge in his long charge to the jury commented in a manner to bring to the jury's attention the testimony favorable to the Government's case and frequently omitted reference concerning the defendants' testimony which the jury should have considered.

The affidavit charged that "the manner of the court in delivery of said charge was such as to and was intended to indicate to the jury that the court feels that the defendant ought to be convicted," and that the charge as a whole was extremely argumentative and the comments on all evidence went far beyond the proper range of judicial comment. Reference also was made to the $100 fine assessed against Mr. Wood for contempt. The affidavit continued that the defendant had been informed that "certain agents" of Harry Arthur had conferred with Judge Moore and that they gave him information the equity case was well founded and that the Government ought to be given a judgment.

Judge Surprised at Speed

The ballot freeing the accused was taken as the bailiff was informing the jury that Judge Moore desired to call them into court to retire them until Tuesday morning.

"Wait a minute until we take a vote," Mr. Eddy, the foreman, told the bailiff. There was a brief delay and then the jury filed out of the room.

"You haven't reached a verdict?" Judge Moore inquired, perfunctorily.

"Yes," the foreman replied.

"You have!" exclaimed Judge Moore, greatly surprised.

Mr. Eddy handed the slips of paper to the clerk of court, who proceeded to read them.

The verdict automatically clears Abel Cary Thomas since he could not conspire individually. The charge against him is to be stricken from the docket.

The case went to the jury after Judge Moore had taken three hours in exhaustive instructions and defense counsel had spent a great deal of time objecting to them. The swiftness with which the jury rendered its verdict was in contrast to the length of the trial and the voluminous evidence which was before it for consideration in it deliberations.

Judge Moore commented frequently on the evidence in his three-hour instruction. He explained this was because the record was so voluminous he believed his comment would be helpful to the jury.

The judge had made a thorough analysis of the case since Friday afternoon when court adjourned until Monday morning and gave a resume of what he thought to be the undisputed evidence and certain connections and conversations which he held pertinent to the case.

DEFENSE PROTESTS COURT'S CHARGE

Defense counsel objected to practically every statement Judge Moore made. Forty objections were interposed by Warner counsel alone. The verdict undoubtedly would have been rendered early in the afternoon had not defense attorneys delayed giving the case to the jury by numerous objections. Mr. Wood talked for 25 minutes, Mr. Gentry took 20; Jacob M. Lashly consumed 20 minutes, and Mr. Leisure held his remarks to 10 minutes.

Judge Moore instructed the jury that the Harry Koplar suits and the differences between Mr. Koplar and the defendant RKO and Paramount companies must be disregarded as not an issue in the case. He directed the jury to disregard the testimony concerning Warner's three plans of reorganization submitted to the bondholders as having no bearing on the case, and cited a decision of Federal Judge Davis of St. Louis who had held in favor of the bondholders' plan.

The judge also said that the defendants' charges of conspiracy and monopoly made against Fanchon and Marco during the course of the trial must be disregarded as immaterial.

Mr. Wood insisted many of the court's references were improper because the judge had failed to direct the jury's attention to certain of the Warner contentions. In some instances the judge was declared by defense counsel as not having completed the statements of witnesses, or quoting a portion of their statements, leaving an unfair impression with the jurors.

Judge Moore made two attempts to stop Mr. Wood and Mr. Gentry from presenting long exceptions by informing them to halt their arguments. The defense attorneys persisted, however.

Discusses Sherman Act

"In order to find the defendants guilty, two points must be considered," Judge Moore informed the jury. "One is that refusal of the defendants to supply films to the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central restrained interstate commerce, and, second, that the defendants conspired to that end."

Judge Moore cited all the remarks Herman Starr was alleged to have made at meetings with the bondholders' committee and other Government witnesses. He said Mr. Arthur's testimony had been corroborated by other Government witnesses, but defense counsel registered numerous exceptions on this score.

The court warned the jurors against permitting any personal feelings for anyone involved in the trial from influencing their verdict, and devoted considerable time to a discussion of the Sherman act.

As soon as he had finished, Mr. Wood was on his feet with such extensive comment that on objection from Hardy, Judge Moore admonished the defense counsel to stick to his exceptions and not to argue.

NOTHING SETTLED, SAYS ABRAM MYERS

Abram F. Myers, general counsel for Allied States, in Detroit this week commented on the verdict as follows:

"The verdict in itself is important to the defendants only. I personally do not believe any good could be accomplished by sending industry leaders to jail. The prosecution did not involve the interests of any Allied member and was not instigated by Allied.

"The important question is whether the heads of the industry will be chastened by the ordeal, or whether the verdict will be interpreted as a license to rush contemplated mergers, resume invasion of the exhibition field, and continue old and devise new monopolistic and oppressive practices."

Mr. Wood said a portion of the instructions resembled a "stump speech." He excepted to the judge's remarks regarding the great number of defense attorneys and his reference to "great accumulations of wealth" being used improperly. Mr. Wood charged Judge Moore misstated the manner in which the Sherman anti-trust law applied to the case on trial, and charged the judge read parts of the indictment in his instructions without telling the jury that indictment is no evidence of guilt.

Mr. Wood continued his arguments after Judge Moore had admonished him, saying that only one side of the case had been given to the jury. He concluded with a general charge that the instructions "overemphasized the Government's case and belittled the defense."

Mr. Gentry took up where Mr. Wood left off and said the instructions "as a whole amount to an argument to the jury to find the defendants guilty." Jacob M. Lashly for RKO likewise made suggestions for modification of the instructions, and was followed by George C. Leisure, also of RKO counsel, who asked for a limited number of modifications. Most of these Judge Moore granted.

Closing arguments last Thursday by Government and defense counsel were highlighted by charges that defense counsel had used "an old trick to confuse the real issues," that "every threat made by Warner was carried out," that "Harry Koplar was an arch enemy of Warner," that Harry C. Arthur was a "falsifier and perjurer" and "the oiliest, slickest and smoothest witness put on the stand." It was also charged that John S. Leahy, a Government witness, was "a man of pomp, oratorical power and as fine a bluffer as ever seen."

The veracity of opposition witnesses was attacked by each side as it presented a favorable picture of its own witnesses.

Following a conference, Judge Moore extended by 60 minutes the four-hour limit set for summation. The Missouri law, the only one of its kind, permitted the Government to open and close the final argument.

Mr. Hardy spoke for three hours on Thursday, while the defense took two hours and continued its summation on Friday. The Government counsel covered all the ground encompassed in his opening statement and in his arguments for denying the demurrers and dismissal motions filed at the close of his opening presentation.

"Gigantic Corporate Clusters"

"The defense has met every issue but those in the case," the prosecutor held. "Sometimes they put me, Koplar and Arthur on trial." He again called the companies on trial "gigantic corporate clusters" and added that "Warner, Paramount and RKO represented 50 per cent of the production of the fourth largest industry."

Attacking the testimony of witness after witness for the defense, the Government prosecutor continued: "What has Herman Starr to lose? He has the strongest reason for diluting and denying the testimony. Miles Alben is a subordinate of Starr's, and what would happen if he contradicted his superiors? How Abel Cary Thomas loved the Skourases! They didn't know which one he loved. Starr said it was George, Gradwell Sears said it was Spyros. I leave it to the jury to decide."

When Mr. Hardy reached the so-called conversation Mr. Depinet is said to have had with Mr. Arthur, he asked, "Is the motion picture business a racket?"

Opening the summation for the defense, Mr. Wood pointed out to the jury that the indictment was not evidence and that it was the Government's duty to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that a conspiracy existed.

"It was not until Harry M. Warner got on the stand that a connected story of what we did and why was related." Mr. Wood then told of Warner's $3,000,000 to $4,000,000 investment in the St. Louis properties and the unsuccessful attempts to negotiate with the bondholders' committee, who he declared sat in the "driver's seat" and could drive Warner out if they wanted to, which the company tried to prevent.

He said Warner wanted to reclaim its former position when they operated two houses in St. Louis, and recalled that RKO had signed with Warner because it had had trouble with Mr. Koplar, whom he described as "an arch enemy of Warner" who did not pay his bills, and that his associates submitted false box office reports.

Mr. Gentry, following, brought out that the testimony of most of the witnesses did not apply to Paramount and Mr. Schaefer.

Reed Unlooses Oratory

Stirring oratory rang in the courtroom for two hours on Friday when former Senator Reed spoke. Summations by Mr. Leisure, and closing arguments by Mr. Hardy for the Government featured the trial's closing day before the case went to the jury.

"Neither the Government, Congress nor President Roosevelt ordered this case," said Mr. Reed. "It was just Mr. Hardy who did it."

Replying to a statement by Mr. Leisure that it was strange "the jury couldn't hear Mr. Koplar's story," Mr. Hardy, in concluding summation, said: "Why should we bring Mr. Koplar in? Anything he knows or does is utterly irrelevant to this case." He described as utterly ridiculous the charge by Mr. Reed that "Mr. Koplar tried to get Warner over a barrel."

MPTOA PROTESTS NEW "HIGH TYPE" PRODUCTION

Kuykendall Says Pictures Are "Too Arty"—Though Box Offices Report Big Returns on Several of the Classic Films

Strong exhibitor expression was voiced in Hollywood this week against the results of the comparatively new " high standard" of motion pictures, with Edward L. Kuykendall, Mississippi exhibitor, speaking as president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, telling the producers that pictures are now "too arty, too costumy and too morbid."

And thereby Mr. Kuykendall released over the producers a bombshell with which he evidently intended to explode the widely prevalent impression that theatre owners of the country—the middlemen between producer and buying public—are not only content but quite happy about the new order of higher screen standards, culturally and otherwise.

It has been generally understood, and considerably substantiated by the factual revelations from box office reports on many "high type" productions, that this new order has increased box office receipts impressively during the past year, retaining existing audiences and bringing new millions into the theatres who previously did not attend because of their old attitude toward the motion picture as "low brow stuff."

Mr. Kuykendall declared that films still are the entertainment of the masses and that it is a waste of time and money to try to confine them to the classes.

"Talking Customer to Death"

Too, he told the producers that they're "talking the customers to death," declaring that action has been supplanted by dialogue.

"Maturity," he observed, "has little place on the screen."

Mr. Kuykendall's remarks were reported in the news press this week after he had expressed himself in Universal City to studio executives of Universal Pictures. Douglas W. Churchill quoted him accordingly in the New York Times.

Mr. Kuykendall's position as president of the MPTOA could be accepted as reflecting significantly the attitude of exhibitors everywhere as to just how all of this "culture" fits in with the ideas of the theatre men of America. His expressions came at the end of a cross-country tour of the principal theatre centers where he had held intimate discussions with owners on their problems and the remedies they suggest to solve them.

Board Set Up Two Years Ago

It was Mr. Kuykendall who had led part of the exhibitor movement which culminated in the Legion of Decency, from which arose the new standard to produce "better" motion pictures, culturally and otherwise.

Mr. Kuykendall's MPTOA, at its convention in Hollywood, two years ago, set up a board to convey to the producers the ideas of theatre owners on box office values, so that they might be guided accordingly in future production. To what extent this policy has been adhered to by his organization has, so far as is known, never been explained.

The remarks of Mr. Kuykendall might well cause some eyebrow lifting in the industry, what with the principal studios veering even further toward the production of "cultural" classics—"Midsummer Night's Dream," "Romeo and Juliet," "Tale of Two Cities," "Peter Ibbetson," "Twelfth Night," et al being but a few of such future releases. That many predecessors in this "high type" of motion picture have returned record-breaking grosses is generally known.

Mississippi Governor Would End Sales Tax

Repeal of the retail sales tax was recommended by Governor Sennett Conner last week in a surprise message to the Mississippi Legislature. The sales levy has been particularly unpopular with theatres, which must pay ten per cent, while other merchants pay only two per cent.

In St. Louis, however, theatres are again the target of a bill introduced in the Board of Aldermen calling for a one-cent tax on tickets running from 25 to 50 cents; two cents, from 51 cents to $1; five cents, from $1.01 to $2; 10 cents, from $2.01 to $3; 15 cents, from $3.01 to $4, and 20 cents from $4.01 up.

The measure would also make standing room unlawful.

Harry A. Chase Dies; Noted Camera Man

Harry Alonza Chase, 52, traveler, adventurer and photographer, died in his home in East Orange, N. J. As a motion picture and still photographer, Mr. Chase had visited many of the world's most remote places. He was for several years with Lowell Thomas and went with him on his trip through Arabia with the late Colonel T. E. Lawrence.

H. T. Cowling Appointed To Government Film Post

R. D. W. Connor, archivist of the United States, has appointed Herford T. Cowling technical assistant, Division of Motion Pictures and Sound Recording, The National Archives. Mr. Cowling has been with the National Archives for some time now in connection with a survey of Government historical films.

Derr Feature Releases Set

E. B. Derr and Charles Sullivan will release the first six features of their newly formed company through Far West Exchanges, it has been revealed in Hollywood.

Long Reel Details Changed by Council

Recommendations for changes in the 2,000-foot reel specifications, as submitted by the distributing companies in New York, have been approved by the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in Hollywood.

The changes include reel diameter reduction from 15½ inches to 15 inches, with a minimum reel length of 1,750 feet. With the exception of unusual cases, all reels are to be cut at the studio to reach the theatre between 1,750 and 2,000 feet.

The studios are to continue to indicate the projection changeovers at the end of the first 1,000 feet of each reel to provide for theatres not yet equipped with 2,000-foot projection apparatus. The council approved the method recommended by the reel length sub-committee, whereby studios will provide these auxiliary changeovers.

With Paramount now having joined the other major companies which have approved the 2,000-foot reel standards, only RKO and Universal remain to accept the changeover. The deadline for complete major company reactions to the proposed move has been put back to December 2 and at that time another meeting of representatives of the major companies will be held at the New York office of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

The revision of city ordinances, however, in New York, Chicago and Indianapolis to permit the storage of 2,000-foot reels will be necessary in order to nationalize the proposed new standards.

Marc Connelly to Again Head the Authors' League

Marc Connelly, author of "The Green Pastures," has been elected to a third term as president of the Authors' League of America.

Mr. Connelly has promised to lead 2,000 writers and dramatists in a finish fight against the Duffy copyright bill, which he describes as "an instrument peculiarly inimical to authors." He will depart for Hollywood shortly to direct Warner Brothers' production of "The Green Pastures."

Dramatists' Guild Picks Council

The Dramatists' Guild held its annual meeting last week in New York and elected a new council to hold office until 1938 and representatives to serve on the council of the Author's League, of which the Guild is a part. Council members chosen are: Marc Connolly, Oscar Hammerstein, 2d, Moss Hard, Sidney Howard, Howard Lindsay, Kenyon Nicholson, Clifford Odets, Alma Rice, Austin Strong and Rita Wiman.

Sunday Show Suit For Pennsylvania

Sunday films in the state of Pennsylvania are being threatened by an injunction and a court test case by Blue Law leaders, it has been revealed in Philadelphia by the Rev. William Forney, secretary of the Lord's Day Alliance, on the ground the measure did not pass in the election last week according to the terms of the Referendum Act which states that a majority of voters must approve.

While the question received an overwhelming majority vote at the election, a total of 352,832 votes for Sunday shows was not half the total of the 715,569 votes that were cast for mayoralty candidates.

Exhibitors, however, believe the courts will interpret this phase to mean that a majority of the voters voted favorably on the question.

In the town of Philadelphia, alone, results of the ballots cast show that the vote was 357,555 yes and 133,034 no.

In Maplewood, N. J., on the other hand, an order for a recount of the 6,547 votes cast on election day last week on the Sunday motion picture referendum has been granted by Chief Justice Brogan of the state superior court. The proposal at first was said to have been defeated by 16 votes, but later the margin was found to be 26. Dr. Howard E. Broach, manager of the Maplewood Theatre, and nine others, petitioned for the recount. Montclair and Ridgewood were the other two Jersey communities that rejected Sunday pictures.

Reports 40 Per Cent Increase in Canada

Canadian theatres are doing at least 40 per cent better than in 1934, according to Leo M. Devaney, RKO's Canadian district manager, now in New York conferring with executives at the home office.

The increased business is a reflection of the improved general conditions north of the border, says Mr. Devaney, who also points to the fact that at least 15 new theatres will be opened by next spring as a sign of better times in the Dominion. Theatres generally are being re-seated and redecorated, after the long period of deterioration during the depression.

Double-featuring is now general in Canada, Mr. Devaney reports, some exhibitors going so far as to show two new features, a feature revival and shorts at a single show. One Toronto neighborhood house, he added, gives, in addition to the above, four acts of vaudeville, the complete show lasting four hours and ten minutes.

U. S. Lists Businesses In January Census

A census of American business will be taken early next January simultaneously with the biennial census of manufacturers, it has been announced by the Department of Commerce in Washington. Those industries to be included in the survey will include all retail trade, wholesale trade, service establishments of all types, the amusement industry, hotels, banking and financial industries, insurance, radio and transportation.

The St. Louis Case

NOW that the defendants in the St. Louis case have been acquitted and the trial ended, the moment has arrived at which there may be some plain speaking concerning certain aspects of the case about which there has been some serious thinking in recent months.

In a manner hardly and happily without precedent in American jurisprudence, this case was given an amazing ballyhoo at Washington. From an emphatically expressed attitude on the part of persons undertaking to represent the government in the prosecution it might have been concluded by the innocent bystander that the defendants were so plainly guilty that there was nothing to be said in their defense. Before opening of the trial, publicity releases from Washington were frequent occurrences, each of them obviously seeking, before trial, to create in the public mind an impression of guilt and several of them alleging efforts on the part of defendants to postpone trial and otherwise circumvent the carriage of justice—allegations which the facts did not support.

The issue was a popular one—the placing on trial of persons representing large and successful motion picture interests. It created an opportunity for some hearty mud-slinging at the "movie interests." Because of the reputation and responsibility of the defendants the case was one which should have been handled with the utmost tact and discretion on the part of the government. Unfortunately this was not done. It is to be hoped in the interests of fair play that all this was due merely to unbridled ambition and giddy enthusiasm on the part of those charged with the prosecution rather than—as happens to be the conviction in certain quarters—to the intrigues of interests powerful at Washington which have a direct interest in the matters involved.

However, a gratifying victory has been won by a group of leading film companies and their executives—a victory which has its compensations even though they are hardly enough to offset the huge financial outlay required for the defense, to which cost must be added also the heavy loss to the companies on account of the sacrifice of the time and attention of executives.

British Censor

IN the death in London early this week of the Right Hon. Edward Shortt, president of the British Board of Film Censors, the British public, the trade and the motion picture have lost the services of an experienced public servant who was contributing a service of real value.

The British Board of Film Censors is a private institution, conducted and maintained by the trade. On account of the generally satisfactory service which it has rendered it has in later years assumed a quasi-governmental character. In its inception it was largely created and encouraged by American film interests which because of criticism in Great Britain were anxious to see established a British institution which would act as arbiter over what was to be shown to the British public.

The very able and popular Mr. T. P. O'Connor was the first president. He was succeeded in 1929 by Mr. Shortt, who directed the censorship activities along the lines originally laid down at the creation of the body.

Through the wisdom and ability of Mr. Shortt, assisted by Mr. J. Brookes Wilkinson, secretary of the board, and the staff the difficult work of examining and passing on motion pictures intended for the British public has been conducted in a manner that has elicited widespread approval and this despite an exceedingly difficult attitude which has been assumed toward the work by large sections of the British public, the press with but very few exceptions and various elements in the trade. The press in London has been almost uniformly troublesome; so troublesome in fact that as a measure of self-protection Mr. Shortt some time ago laid down the policy of withholding from general circulation the board's annual reports, the reason being that during the later years of issuance the reports were seized upon as a springboard for much pointless discussion which served only to render an already difficult job more difficult.

Mr. Shortt came to the work following a long and successful career in governmental activities. Out of his fine intelligence, broad experience and a considerable fund of common sense he was able to give to the work of the board a quality of direction that has left a considerable impress on the motion picture and upon its acceptance by the British public.

Critics

THERE is developing, apparently, among a number of newspaper critics of motion pictures, especially among those who practice their art of higher criticism in and about New York City, an enthusiasm which is hardly distinguishable from an hysteria about foreign pictures. An almost mathematical formula seems to be at work in their minds. The worth of a picture, in their eyes, seems to increase in direct proportion to the distance from the U. S. A. at which the picture in question has been produced.

The critics are probably having a good time in displaying their fine artistic discernment and high cultural tastes. The public when it does, on occasion, see one of these pictures, will probably wonder a little but no great harm will be done provided only that American motion picture producers who are exposed to these critiques do not become subject to a temptation to make pictures for the approval of these critics. The outcome would not be satisfactory; it is the point of origin rather than the picture itself which creates the enthusiasm.

Harry Levey, Rex Pictures Action Settled Out of Court

Papers filed in the supreme court in New York in connection with a suit brought by Harry Levey against Rex Pictures Corporation have disclosed that the suit for an accounting and injunction had been settled out of court, after several days of actual trial. Also named as defendants in the suit were M. Sayle Taylor, known as the Voice of Experience, Attorney Elmer A. Rogers, Benjamin K. Blake and Columbia Pictures Corporation. In his complaint Mr. Levey said he was president, director and stockholder of the Voe Pictures Corporation when that company was formed shortly after December, 1934, when he met Mr. Rogers and became acquainted with Mr. Taylor. Later there followed a conference between the three when it was proposed to have Mr. Taylor's book, "Stranger than Fiction," adapted for pictures.

After negotiations had been entered into with Columbia, the defendants formed a new corporation, Rex Film Corporation, it was charged, which eventually entered into an agreement with Columbia. Mr. Levey further charged that Voe Pictures should have been the party to that agreement and that the contract entered between Rex and Columbia was the property of his company. Attorneys declined to state the amount of the settlement.

Business Flourishing, Reports John D. Clark

John D. Clark, general manager of distribution for Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, who returned to his office in New York this week after a five-week tour of the company's thirty-seven exchanges in this country and in Canada, reports that theatre business generally is flourishing and that his company's sales are bigger this year than at any time in the last six years.

Mr. Clark's trip was made in connection with the company's annual sales drive. W. C. Gehring, leader of the drive, accompanied him.

Huge Bridge Beacon Is Rogers Memorial

In New York, a giant airway beacon, visible for 64 miles, will be installed on George Washington Bridge as a memorial to Will Rogers. The New York State Aviation Commission is to be the donor. State Senator A. Spencer Feld, chairman, said the beacon will be dedicated November 30. The beacon will be revolving, with 1,800,000-candlepower, which will penetrate to an altitude of three miles.

In 24 days of flying, Lieutenant Commander Franks Hawks had carried the Will Rogers Memorial message to 60 cities and 25 states. Captain Eddie Rickenbacker, director of the memorial commission, announced the following as Commander Hawks' latest report: "A steady pyramiding of enthusiasm is arising throughout the country for the memorial."

Will H. Hays led Indiana contributors to the Will Rogers Memorial Fund with a contribution of $1,000. The Will Rogers memorial stage at the Twentieth Century-Fox studio was to be dedicated on Thursday.

SMPE Holds Meeting On Educational Films

Members of the Atlantic Coast Section of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers met in New York Wednesday to discuss the possibilities of educational talking pictures. The meeting was held in Public School No. 11, with Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith as guest chairman, and Rita Hochheimer, assistant director of visual education, New York public schools, as chairlady.

The speakers included Dr. Joseph M. Sheehan, associate superintendent of schools; Mrs. Joseph H. Kohan, vice-president of the United Parents Association, and Albert R. Brand, Cornell University. Several teachers from New York's schools also gave a demonstration of educational films and of the methodology of visual education used in the public schools of Manhattan.

Chance Games Still Spreading

Chance games are sweeping the Loew Theatre circuit in the New York metropolitan area, where 33 theatres of this company are now playing either Screeno or Bank Night.

Receipts are reported to have picked up noticeably, particularly at the houses playing Screeno, which the circuit began using earlier than it did Bank Night. There are eighteen houses using Screeno and fifteen having Bank Nights.

In the field, chance games continue to be the subject of considerable exhibitor interest.

In Augusta the fate of Bank Night in Maine will be decided by the verdict in the prosecution of Frank F. Colburn, Jr., manager of the M & P-Publix house at Bath. The defense and the attorney for the county, Ralph Dale, have agreed that it will be a test case under the lottery law.

In Boston cash giveaway nights are being held as being principally responsible for the action started against Massachusetts motion picture theatres by the Department of Public Safety for continued practices of overcrowding, blocking exits and encumbering lobbies with displays, etc.

Dan Roberts of Atlanta, Ga., was sentenced to a year in jail for using Bank Night in Cordele, Ga., but his sentence has been suspended and a fine of $500 and costs imposed instead. Frank Woods, owner of the theatre, was also given the same sentence. Appeals have been taken in both cases.

Sweepstakes, handled in Cleveland by Warren Irons, is now playing three theatres there.

In Kansas City the Independent Theatre Owners have passed a resolution opposing all cash giveaway schemes, drawing, etc., at theatres. At the same time, Sho-Keno, a new promotion stunt, is being launched in the territory by R. W. McEwan, who handles Bank Night in Kansas and western Missouri.

Charles Washicheck, operator of the Grace theatre in Milwaukee, has filed an appeal to the fine imposed on him for operating a Grocery Night in his theatre.

Flint Exhibitors To Keep Dual Bill Pact

Local exhibitors meeting in Flint, Mich., decided to continue in force indefinitely their agreement to use double bills on but one change weekly, which has been effective for the past year. The agreement was verbal. This decision came as a surprise as several theatre owners had previously expressed themselves as dissatisfied with the pact and had said that they would not renew it when it expired this month.

The Better Films Council of Milwaukee has adopted a resolution protesting double feature programs. The resolution pointed out that the double feature was "making a demand for quantity rather than quality" and made the "family night program" impossible. The council has been endeavoring to induce exhibitors to have family night programs the end of the week, which will prove acceptable to children as well as adults.

Editor's Test Tube Shows Sample Of Showman Taking His Richmond

Indiana Exhibitor Finds Community Wants Good Shows, So He Gives Them

by TERRY RAMSAYE

RICHMOND, INDIANA

DOWN out of the Alleghenys and over the rolling hills of Ohio, the tires hum a new tune where for many a mile the clay products industry has exerted local pressures in triumph with brick over the cement makers in the facing of the National Pike. Presently we are come to the level prairies and the sleek, smug little city of Richmond just over the Indiana border.

This Richmond, happy, comfortable and historic, is an excellent spot into which to dip the test tube for a sample of what we call America. Here live thirty thousand people, all in homes on orderly streets, begardened and be-parked as a magazine picture. Here was the first electrical street railway, and it is running yet in good order, modernly. The country about is agricultural, the people indigenous.

AMUSEMENT-WISE, this is Robert Hudson's town, with four theatres, the Tivoli, the Ritz, the Hudson and the Indiana. Just incidentally he has nearby Kendallville, too, with one theatre open and one dark—just for insurance. He began back in the nickelodeon age at Muncie when he was seventeen and he's had a deal of experience all over his Indiana.

Richmond in the person of Mr. Hudson is also a first class specimen of a one-man "closed" town and some of the better fruits of what Times Square once called "decentralization." Just at the right time he sold two houses in Richmond to Publix and just at the right time, too, he got them back from the receivers, having built the Hudson meanwhile. Then on top of that the owners of the Tivoli, first run and top house, decided they would rather have Mr. Hudson operate that also, so he took it on lease. Richmond was thereby buttoned up.

It was decentralization for Publix and re-centralization for Mr. Hudson—a re-assertion of the principle of local management.

The world is indebted to A-Mike Vogel for a definition in his phrase "decentralization—or every man for himself."

In Richmond it appears to have worked in the direction of a broad community interest, as most effectively exemplified in the course of the national storm of protest of the formative days of the Legion of Decency.

RICHMOND saw the doorman from the Tivoli theatre standing at the steps of the Roman Catholic church distributing the pledge blanks of the Legion of Decency, and thought nothing of it. It was rather in the way of the Hudson pattern.

"We had," observed Mr. Hudson, "no particular trouble in connection with the 'Decency' drive. That was because, I suppose, we have always tended to the job of keeping our entertainment attuned to our audiences.

"Decentralization appears to have worked in the direction of broad community interest. . . ."

"The people who have quarters seem to have them all the time, while the people with dimes get them now and then, but always spend them when they get them. . . ."

* * *

"The motion picture is the all-dominant public entertainment . . ."
—Excerpts from field observations by Terry Ramsaye.

"There has been, of course, a tremendous improvement in that respect and now we have practically no cuts—but we have to be on the lookout.

"There has been no agitation against the motion picture or the theatres here. It is a part of my business to keep in friendly touch with the pastors, the leading citizens and forces of decency, including the newspapers.

"THERE are many aspects of appeal, too, to community interest and support besides the direct presentations of the screen. Just for instance, this house—the Tivoli—has a payroll that in a period of depression and unemployment is an item in a town of this size. Then there is the item of advertising expenditure. For the group of theatres I should say that we place upwards of fifteen thousands dollars a year in space in the newspapers, which are of course our chief medium."

The Tivoli operates on a week day scale of 25 and 30 cents and a 35 top on Sunday. The second run, and third run, which are one and the same in effect in Richmond, take 10 and 15 cents.

Mr. Hudson observes that the dole or relief moneys of various sorts are spent at the lesser theatres and that the curve of attendance there follows an almost exact parallel with the relief roll expenditures. On the other hand the Tivoli gets its flow of patronage apparently unaffected by the dole. The people who have quarters seem to have them all the time, while the people with dimes get them now and then, but always spend them when they get them.

The old Indiana is the slough house where Mr. Hudson takes care of what might otherwise be his cutthroat competition at the bottom. Saturdays and Sundays he commonly presents a "tab" show and does a healthy business for the two days, and thereafter through the week by various and sundry devices, including one night of cash prizes, manages to take care of the costs and work off the less desirable films that accumulate in his extensive buy—he buys first, second and third run on all the product for Richmond and, it would seem, is considerably adept at keeping the distributors in a friendly state of mind.

Discussing the film product, Mr. Hudson comes out on a decidedly sharp cut all-American platform for Richmond.

"Will Rogers and his pictures represented the best of the sort of material that has the biggest appeal in such communities as Richmond, and all this part of the country," said Mr. Hudson. "The passing of Rogers is a big loss to the whole industry.

"Our people do not take to product from abroad, no matter how clever it may be. And, what is more important, they tend to resent foreign, or foreign appearing players in our own American product. Pronounced racial types, dialects and mannerisms make our audiences feel as uncomfortable as they would be anywhere else among strangers.

"Now I think the stories count the most of all."

MR. HUDSON was ready enough to admit that there has been a sharp improvement in the quality of product in the last season, but, he remarks, "there is too wide a spread between the very good pictures and the rest of the product. We must depend in such communities as Richmond—two and three changes a week here at the Tivoli—on the average, not the hits alone."

The use of the national media, magazine and billboards, by the distributors meets Mr. Hudson's enthusiastic approval. "When our people here see an advertisement of a coming picture in one of the good magazines it has the effect of conveying to them the decided idea that the production must be worth while, and the boards help, too. It all contributes toward making more effective our own announcements in the newspapers and the appeal of our marquees and lobbies."

There you have a glimpse right into the heart of America, inside the state that holds the center of population, and a community made up of typical tastes and buying power, outside the realm of special pressures that emanate from metropolitan centers, and yet big enough on its own to escape acute provincialism.

And for Richmond the motion picture is the all-dominant public entertainment.

SPITZ STARTS DUTIES WITH RKO; SAYS DEPINET WILL RETAIN POST

Chicago Attorney Who Is to Become President of Parent Company Launches Own Study of Operations

Operating Organization Will Not Be Disturbed, at Least Pending Study of Corporate Needs; Protest Plan Reported

LEO SPITZ

Leo Spitz, who is to assume the position of president of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, succeeding Merlin H. Aylesworth, who becomes chairman of the board, has plunged into his new duties, and in an initial announcement over the week end said that his first activity would be a survey of the company's operations.

On the heels of the announcement disclosing the changes, made by Floyd B. Odlum, president of the $100,000,000 Atlas Corporation, which has acquired half of Radio Corporation of America's controlling interest in RKO, the Chicago lawyer conferred in New York with the heads of the motion picture and theatre divisions. Returning to Chicago with James R. McDonough, president of RKO Radio Pictures Corporation, Mr. Spitz planned to be back in New York late this week. It was reported from Chicago, however, that Mr. Spitz will leave for the coast next week with Ned E. Depinet, president of RKO Distributing Corporation, to undertake an inspection of the studios.

Upon arrival at the RKO offices, Mr. Spitz immediately let it be known that the company's operating organization would not be disturbed, at least pending a study of its corporate needs, and that the survey would be as much for reorganization purposes as to familiarize himself with operations. The new controlling interests plan an early reorganization, but emergence from court supervision is still some months away.

Following a conference in Chicago, Mr. Spitz declared on Monday that Mr. Depinet would remain with the company in his present capacity. This statement set at rest reports that Mr. Depinet was scheduled to join United Artists in a high position, possibly the presidency, which was left vacant when Al Lichtman recently resigned. Mr. Depinet was called to the meeting in Chicago from the federal anti-trust trial in St. Louis.

No Changes in Executives

Mr. Spitz in Chicago reiterated that no changes in the company's executive personnel are planned, and said that no discussions for a new contract for Mr. McDonough had been held. The production head's present contract does not expire for another 10 months.

The new RKO president met a number of company executives for the first time at the New York offices on Saturday, among them Mr. McDonough, Phil Reisman, Jules Levy, S. Barrett McCormick and William Clark.

"My first job," said Mr. Spitz, "is to familiarize myself with the organization, determine in what ways the business can be aided, and then proceed from there. From what I know of the company's affairs, its present management has done a good job during the past two years. The company is in good shape and its morale is good. I don't know who deserves the credit—maybe it belongs to all—but the fact remains a good job has been done."

Mr. Spitz made it clear that while after the survey he might find that the personnel might need organizing," no shakeup was in prospect.

"I have no one in mind to replace anyone," he continued. "I certainly would not pre-judge a situation with which I am wholly unfamiliar."

While it is known Atlas is planning an early reorganization of RKO, Mr. Spitz pointed out that it is at least two months distant, because of the provision requiring that creditors be given 60 days' notice of intention of presenting a plan to the court.

Report Protest Contemplated

It is reported meanwhile that several of the RKO directors are planning to protest the informality of the action surrounding the Spitz and Aylesworth appointments, since they were not consulted and learned of the changes from the newspapers. No formal election was held and the formality probably will be dispensed with until the board of directors is reconstituted to include the Atlas and Lehman Bros.' representatives. This is not expected until shortly prior to the reorganization, and in the meantime it was said at the RKO offices, "titles will not mean much." The purpose of the elections, this source said, was to align the company for normal operating procedure as quickly as possible. The formal action of the directors will require the authorization of the federal court.

Mr. Odlum's announcement was made Thursday on behalf of Atlas and the investment banking firm of Lehman Bros., who jointly purchased half of RCA's holdings in RKO for $5,000,000 in cash. The new interests will pay RCA $6,000,000 in cash whenever they exercise their option to acquire the remaining half interest, which they have two years to do. Peter Rathvon of Atlas is occupied at the company's offices in working out a reorganization plan.

Sarnoff To Leave Chairman Post

The sale to the Atlas-Lehman group is attributed to RCA's desire to withdraw from activities alien to its main field, and the formal elevation of Mr. Aylesworth will retire David Sarnoff, president of RCA, from the chairmanship of RKO. Mr. Aylesworth, however, will retain the presidency of National Broadcasting Company, Inc.

The appointment of Mr. Spitz is credited to his long friendship with John Hertz, a partner in Lehman Bros. A lawyer of long experience in the industry, Mr. Spitz for many years has been attorney for Balaban & Katz, Paramount theatre subsidiary, in Chicago. In 1932, when Paramount was nearing its financial crisis, Sam Katz, formerly of B. & K., brought Mr. Hertz, then a director of the Chicago theatre company, into Paramount to aid in its financial reorganization. Mr. Hertz became chairman of the Paramount finance committee and brought Mr. Spitz into the organization. Mr. Spitz rapidly gained a position of authority, and when Mr. Katz resigned, assumed most of his duties. Mr. Hertz withdrew from Paramount early in 1933 and Mr. Spitz a few months later.

25 Years in Law Practice

A native of Chicago, Mr. Spitz was born June 30, 1888, and was graduated from the University of Chicago. He practiced law in that city for the past 25 years, and is a member of the law firm of Spitz & Adcock. Since 1920 Mr. Spitz's practice has been identified largely with the motion picture industry.

He became associated with B & K when that circuit acquired the Lubliner & Trinz group in 1925, and has been general counsel for the circuit since, this activity bringing him in contact with many phases of the industry, including the legal affairs of Paramount Publix. He has been an important factor in the settlement of operators' union disputes in Chicago.

Court Opinion Awaited

Meanwhile, a decision is expected from Judge William Bondy in the United States district court on exceptions to the report of Thomas D. Thacher, special master, allowing the claim of the Karl Hoblitzelle enterprises in Texas against RKO at approximately $7,500,000, subject to specified reductions. The court permitted the filing of briefs by attorneys for Hoblitzelle and the RKO trustees. Exceptions also have been filed against the Criterion Advertising Company's claim of approximately $300,000.

Young Directors Turning Out Box Office Successes — Garnett on World Tour for Background Shots — Universal Starts Weekly Studio Meetings — Eight Films Start, and Five are Finished WITHIN the last few months, producers at most of the major studios have handed a number of important scripts to directors who are not as yet in the higher salary brackets. In nearly every instance these men have turned in outstanding pictures.

At RKO, for instance, George Stevens, who was directing two-reel comedies a year ago, was intrusted with "Alice Adams" and did such good work that he immediately was assigned "Annie Oakley." Now he has been put on the next Astaire-Rogers picture, and will follow that with another with Katharine Hepburn. George Nicholls, Jr., currently directing Anne Shirley, also at RKO, is another director who is turning out box office hits. In the same category Paramount has Alexander Hall, now working on the Jan Kiepura-Gladys Swarthout picture, "Give Us This Night," and Henry Hathaway, who is following "Peter Ibbetson" with "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine." Universal's contribution is Louis Friedlander, who made "The Raven" and "Stormy," while Warner offers William Keighley, with "G-Men" and "Special Agent" to his credit, now working with Al Jolson.

Carl Laemmle Content As Big Change Pends

After three decades of close association with the industry, during which he has seen it grow from a dubious experiment to its present high status in the worlds of commerce, art and amusement, Carl Laemmle, Sr., is happier today than ever before. Positive that Standard Capital Corporation and Charles R. Rogers will take up their option to purchase his holdings in Universal, unconcerned as to whether he will be active in the new organization, the little giant, looking back over his career, has no regrets.

Proud of the associations he has made, of the contributions he has made, of the career that has carried him, an immigrant boy, from "shooting gallery" proprietor to the head of one of the greatest producing establishments, Uncle Carl is content that the structure he built should pass into other hands.

When Carl Laemmle made a great picture, and he made many that entirely altered current trends, the world was quick to pay tribute. When a picture turned out a flop, he was the first to point out that the responsibility was his alone.

Garnett on World Tour To Get Authentic Shots

Tay Garnett's examination of thousands of feet of foreign locale library stock shots is sending him off on a voyage around the world. Prior to starting direction of "China Seas" he was amazed to discover that none of the terrific amount of such footage he had inspected was suitable to the backgrounds he had in mind. He blamed poor and in many cases outmoded photography. So he sent camera man Jim McKay to China. The logic of Garnett's idea is reflected in the fact that almost every foot of film shot by McKay was incorporated in "China Seas."

Garnett contends that the results of his expedition will prove that actual foreign backgrounds can be photographed on the spot artistically and economically in a manner that will prove the vogue of process shots impractical. Of course, many studios, particularly MGM, have long held to the practice of sending production to locales actually called for in the story.

QUINTUPLETS SIGNED BY 20TH CENTURY-FOX

A contract between the guardians of the Dionne quintuplets and Twentieth Century-Fox for a picture featuring the five sisters has been approved by David A. Croll, Ontario minister of welfare and special guardian of the babies, it has been announced officially.

Coincidental with the signing of the contract for the feature, which is tentatively titled "The Country Doctor" and is said to be based on the life of Dr. Dafoe, who brought the children into the world, Pathe News, Inc., heretofore holder of the exclusive rights to film the babies, renewed its contract with the guardians for three more years.

Garnett's world circling tour will take him to the Hawaiian Islands, Japan, China, the South Seas, Straits Settlements, India, Formosa, up through the Red Sea visiting Africa and the Asia Minor countries, all through Europe to London. The voyage will be made on Garnett's yacht, "The Athene," which has been equipped with a complete developing laboratory. Planning to sail immediately upon completion of "Professional Soldier," which he is now directing, Garnett will be gone for more than a year. He will be accompanied by his wife, his business manager, Douglas Hodges, cameraman James B. Shackelford, Sidney Burnap, a writer, and Al Jensen.

Eight Pictures Start; Five Others Finished

The number of pictures actually in work dipping to the lowest figure in several months, only eight new pictures started as five were finished, during the past week. Most of the pictures now in production and recently completed representing the various companies' ace future attractions, the current active quota with few exceptions is composed of average program features. The condition being a forerunner of that letdown that precedes and endures during the holiday season, it also serves as a program schedule sweep-up that clears studio machinery for active production after the first of the new year, when companies put into work their bigger pictures for late winter and early spring release.

Twentieth Century-Fox started two pictures. In "Song and Dance Man," a screen version of the George M. Cohan stage play, will be featured Claire Trevor, Paul Kelly, Michael Whelan, Ruth Donnelly, Lester Matthews, James Burke, Gloria Roy and

STAGE SET FOR U. S. CODE TALKS DEC. 9

But Little Hope Is Seen for Results, in Light of Protests Against Interference

by FRANCIS L. BURT
Washington Correspondent

Faced by protests from industry-at-large against further interference with business by the United States Government, and with demands from organized labor for both a voice in the writing of any new codes which may be developed and equal representation on all administrative boards, George L. Berry, President Roosevelt's co-ordinator for industrial cooperation, next month will seek to align support behind plans for new industrial control legislation.

Unless the growing opposition of industry be silenced and the gap between employer and labor bridged, observers in Washington already see little hope for the conference, which has finally been called for December 9th.

Opposition of organized labor already has nullified President Roosevelt's efforts to protect the advantages gained by the workers under the old NRA recovery codes through inclusion of labor provisions in voluntary codes submitted by some score of industries.

Labor Opposition Threatens

Representatives of the workers opposed such provisions because no voice was given labor in their writing or administration and also because no machinery was provided for enforcement. This opposition, labor leaders warned this week, will be extended to any new control legislation proposed unless these defects are remedied.

Industrialists invited by Mr. Berry to attend the December conferences point out that business recovery has been greater since last May, when the United States supreme court held the NRA invalid, and theretofore under the codes and on this ground will oppose any new effort toward codification.

Labor takes the position that its rights are now protected under the National Labor Relations Act, although admitting that efficacy of that law will depend largely upon the interpretation given its various provisions and the affirmation of its constitutionality by the United States Supreme Court. Because of the uncertainty as to interpretation and constitutionality, labor is willing to cooperate in a new move for industrial control legislation but only on the condition that the privileges it demands be granted.

Administration officials are split as to the desirability of the December conference, it having become known that Mr. Berry called the meeting over the protest of other advisers to the President.

In hostile quarters, Mr. Berry is charged with making a bid for prominence in the Administration, on the theory that if his move to align support behind industrial control is successful he would be the logical man to administer any new legislation enacted, thus stepping into the shoes of General Hugh S. Johnson and of Sol A. Rosenblatt. In these quarters, therefore, failure would be charged directly to Mr. Berry.

A graceful withdrawal by President Roosevelt from his demands last session for new Congressional legislation regimenting industry is predicted by political observers in Washington.

With the Presidential election campaign due to follow almost immediately the adjournment of Congress next summer, faced with the opposition of industry and the demands of labor, the Administration is seen as adopting a more conservative attitude and pressing the new control legislation program in purely a perfunctory manner.

Regardless, representatives of industry, management and labor, rivaling in number the mass rally originally called by former NRA Administration General Hugh S. Johnson to consider codification, will attend, in Washington the series of conferences beginning December 9 on the Administration's recovery program.

Ostensibly Mr. Berry called it for the purpose of drumming up interest in voluntary codes, but the conference is admitted by Administration officials to be intended also to discover what, if any, support the President will have for his anticipated demand upon Congress next session for new industrial control legislation.

Although members of several important industries—members of the motion picture industry among them, as individuals or individual groups—have accepted Mr. Berry's invitation to attend the conferences, some of the major trades have refused in toto to participate in anything which might tend to revive Federal control. For the most part, it is said, the important industries which are represented will participate only for the purpose of opposing any moves which might be made toward that end.

Changed Objective Seen

Although Mr. Berry's projected conferences are seen as devoting themselves more particularly to the possibilities of new legislation, the coordinator publicly announced some days ago that his primary purpose was to develop the adoption of voluntary codes. However, that he has switched his ideas was reflected in a letter protesting the refusal of one of the prominent industries to participate, and an appeal for reconsideration in which he declared that "the problems around which I hope the discussions will focus transcend the immediate problems confronting a single industry.

"I shall be content, and my purpose will have been accomplished," he declared, "if industry decides that these questions are vital enough to warrant its earnest consideration and to justify the establishment of an instrumentality for cooperative action."

This "instrumentality," it is indicated, will take the form of an industrial council, supposedly free from governmental interference, which will be proposed at the forthcoming conference.

Arthur Hoyt. Allan Dwan is directing. The second picture, "It Had to Happen," will present George Raft, Leo Carrillo, Arline Judge, Astrid Allwyn, Alan Dinehart, Andrew Tombes, Rosalind Russell and Arthur Hohl. Roy Del Ruth is directing.

At Radio, "Follow the Fleet" went before the cameras. Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers again are co-starred, supported by Randolph Scott, Harriet Hilliard, Kay Sutton, Jane Hamilton, Maxine Jennings, Lucille Ball, Thelma Leeds and Addison Randall. Mark Sandrich is directing. "The Green Shadow" is also on the stages at this studio. Its cast lists Preston Foster, Margaret Callahan, John Carroll, Guinn Williams, Molly Lamont, Alan Mowbray and Pat Flaherty. Charles Vidor is directing.

"Woman Trap" started at Paramount. The cast thus far includes George Murphy, Gertrude Michael, Bradley Page, Akim Tamiroff and Samuel Hinds. Harold Young is directing.

Republic Pictures started "Hitch Hike Lady." Alison Skipworth, Mae Clarke, Arthur Treacher, James Ellison are featured, supported by Warren Hymer, Beryl Mercer, Dell Henderson, Lionel Belmore, Harold Waldridge, Christian Rub and George Hayes. Aubrey Scotto is directing.

MGM Completes Two

MGM, which has been operating under an intensive production schedule, was the only studio to complete two pictures. The first, "Riffraff," will present Jean Harlow, Spencer Tracy, Joseph Calleia, Una Merkel, Mickey Rooney, Baby Jane Quigley, Roger Imhoff, J. Farrell MacDonald, Paul Hurst, Vince Barnett, Dorothy Appleby, Judith Wood, Arthur Houseman, Wade Boteler, Victor Killian, Al Hill and Helen Flint. J. Walter Ruben directed. In the second feature, "Ah Wilderness," the cast lists Lionel Barrymore, Aline MacMahon, Eric Linden, Cecelia Parker, Wallace Beery, Mickey Rooney, Helen Flint, Frank Albertson, Edward Nugent, Helen Freeman, Tom Dugan and a number of former child stars. Clarence Brown directed.

Paramount completed "Her Master's Voice," a Walter Wanger production. The small cast is made up of Edward Everett Horton, Peggy Conklin, Elizabeth Patterson, Laura Hope Crewes and Grant Mitchell. Joseph Santley directed.

College Film Finished

At Warners, "Freshman Love" was finished. It will present Patricia Ellis, Frank McHugh, Warren Hull, George E. Stone, Mary Treen, Walter Johnson, Joseph Cawthorn, Joseph Sawyer, Alma Lloyd, Henry O'Neill, Florence Fair, Spec O'Donnell and Anita Kerry. William McGann directed.

Regal-Pacific completed "The Rest Cure." Reginald Denny, Esther Ralston, Eleanor Hunt, Claudia Dell and Vince Barnett are featured. Crane Wilbur directed.

Injunction Sought to Stop Warner Meeting

An action for an injunction and an accounting, naming Harry M., Jack L. and Albert Warner, as well as all other officers and directors of Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., Goldman Sachs and McClure Jones & Co., since September 1, 1928, was filed in Federal court in Brooklyn by Martin J. Clougherty of Boston, who described himself as a stockholder. The action seeks to have Warner officers enjoined from voting proxies at the December 9 stockholders' meeting at Wilmington in favor of an out-of-court settlement of a suit brought against the company some time ago by Max Goldberg, a Warner stockholder, and asks for an accounting of the settlement.

Mr. Clougherty's complaint charges that Goldman, Sachs & McClure, Jones were the recipients of blocks of Warner stock valued at $6,500,000 on December 1, 1928, for which Warners received "no consideration." A return of the stock is asked. The suit also recites that the three Warner Brothers on December 1, 1928, voided a contract by which they were to render their services exclusively to Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., and made a similar contract with Renraw, Inc. Warner Brothers Pictures, it is alleged, transferred to Renraw 90,000 shares of Warner common with a market valuation of $12,000,000 at the time.

Edward Hutchinson, who has filed a $500,000 libel suit against Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., and Vitaphone, Inc., was granted a preference in the New York Supreme Court by Justice John E. McGeehan.

NO EXTENSION NOW OF COWDIN'S INTERESTS

Head of Standard Capital Says Option to Purchase Universal Has Not Been Exercised

Unlike the course being pursued by Floyd Odlum's Atlas Corporation, which already is financially interested in Paramount and RKO, J. Cheever Cowdin's Standard Capital Corporation has no intentions at the moment of extending its financial participation in motion pictures any further than Universal, to which Standard made a $750,000 loan two weeks ago, securing an option to purchase Carl Laemmle's company for $5,500,000.

Universal's board of directors met in New York Tuesday and voted their approval of the new financing deal with Mr. Cowdin.

At about the same hour this week when Mr. Cowdin was explaining his position in the situation, Universal's management inaugurated a series of weekly meetings at the California studios, with employees, distribution department representatives, exhibitors and others participating.

The aim is to exchange ideas on means for effecting improved cooperation among the three industry branches. Each meeting will be given over to some well-known speaker from the respective divisions. Persons from studios other than Universal's will be invited to address the gatherings.

While an extension of Standard Capital's financial interest in motion pictures is probable at some future time, Mr. Cowdin explained this week that there is little likelihood it will be undertaken in advance of a conclusion of its present dealings with Universal.

Says Option Not Exercised Yet

The Universal deal is expected to occupy the company's attention for many weeks to come, Mr. Cowdin said.

He said that Standard's option to purchase Universal for $5,500,000 had not been exercised yet and probably would not be for several weeks to come. Examinations of Universal's books are still in progress on both coasts and Standard will make no decision in advance of their completion.

The Standard executive reiterated that no sweeping executive changes are contemplated for Universal in the event the option is exercised, adding that he wanted Carl Laemmle to remain with the company if a sale is consummated. He also confirmed the fact that no arrangements have been made for Charles R. Rogers to take over direction of the Universal studio in advance of a decision on the purchase option. If and when that takes place Rogers immediately will become studio head, Mr. Cowdin said.

Not Participating Directly

He added that it was not his policy to participate directly in the management affairs of firms in which he was interested, inferring that full authority and active direction of Universal would be left to the executive appointees. All employees of the company, executive and otherwise, would be judged solely on their performances before replacements of any kind were made, he said.

Mr. Cowdin explained that Standard Capital is his own organization and has no association with other banking or investment firms. In reply to a question, he said that while he had known Dr. A. H. Giannini for 20 years neither the doctor nor the Bank of America National Association were in any way identified with the Universal deal or other Standard activities.

In the informal interview, with MOTION PICTURE DAILY, Mr. Cowdin was reported to have evidenced a keen understanding of the industry and revealed indications of having made a penetrating analysis of the problems and needs of Universal. His attitude toward the company's future appeared to be definitely optimistic.

AMPA Discusses Ad Award Plan

General discussion of a proposed advertising award featured last week's meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at Jack Dempsey's restaurant just off Broadway in Manhattan.

Following the proposal made previously that the association sponsor annual awards for the best work in advertising by national producing and distributing companies, president Gordon S. White brought up the matter before the members.

Mr. White revealed that a letter from Milton Silver to Quigley Publications had suggested the idea, but that the awards would in no way conflict with the monthly Quigley Awards which are confined to exploitation campaigns in theatres.

Following criticism of the AMPA proposal by Martin Starr and Tom Hamlin, Mr. White asked members to submit suggestions as to whether it should be an annual award, and whether it should be for the best advertising copy and for publicity angles.

The entertainment at the meeting was provided by Imogene Carpenter, who sang several songs; vivid sea stories by Cameron King, and by the introduction of Gene Tunney, Ernest Hemingway and Grantland Rice.

Scheduled for this week's meeting were Rubinoff and his violin; Elsie May Gordon, radio comedienne; Ferri La Franconi, singer; Roland Young, Alice Hughes, Helen Hoerle, Max Hoffstetter and Thomas Brennan. The latter two were to give an exposition of the recently perfected direct colored photography and the engraving of colored plates.

GTE BONDHOLDERS TO CONTINUE FOX FIGHT

Judge Rejects Plea to Review Bankruptcy Proceedings of Fox Midland, Rocky Mountain

General Theatres Equipment Corporation bondholders will appeal the decision of Judge Albert L. Reeves of the Kansas City federal district court, in which Judge Reeves last week dismissed the bondholders' petition to review the bankruptcy proceedings of Fox Midland and Fox Rocky Mountain theater companies, and their ancillary suit in equity.

Bondholders had sought to impose a lien on the properties in their favor.

R. R. Brewster and C. A. Randolph are attorneys for the six General Theatres bondholders in the action. They have 30 days in which to take their appeal to the circuit court of appeals.

Judge Reeves' decision clears up the bankruptcy proceedings in which the two Fox theatre subsidiary companies were involved, the status of some 130-odd thetres being disputed.

The debenture bondholders, in a rather complicated legal move instituted just before the sale of the theatre properties to Fox Film's National Theatres Corporation at Kansas City, last spring, had sought to impose, in their favor, a lien on the assets of the bankrupts. Judge Reeves based his opinion on the ancillary petition, filed originally on April 22 but amended and filed again in June, because it contained all the points raised by the petitioners.

Prevention of Sale Asked

The petitioners—Jacob Smith, Lee H. Hamlin, William Snower, Ray D. Jones, Anna Kupper, and Katherine K. Mosher—represented by C. A. Randolph and R. R. Brewster, asked the court to prevent the sale of the assets of the bankrupt companies; to stay the bankruptcy proceedings; to have the estates re-appraised and the "actual value thereof determined and established;" to declare that the assets of Fox Rock Mountain and Fox Midland part and parcel of "the assets wrongfully and illegally diverted" from General Theatres and that the petitioners were entitled to have a lien impressed upon the assets in their favor; that the lien "be foreclosed and said assets sold to pay off said bonds, principal and interest, and costs;" and asked for an accounting by Chase National, Fox Film, and subsidiaries "as to the assets so wrongfully diverted."

Their chief contention was that the corporations in bankruptcy had been fraudently formed.

General Theatres, a Delaware holding company organized in 1929, owned, among other assets, the entire stock of Fox Film Corporation. Fox Film owned the capital stock of Wesco, which directly or indirectly owned the stock of Fox Rocky Mountain and Fox Midland.

Bond Sale in 1930

Chase Securities Corporation, subsidiary of Chase National Bank, promoted the issuance and sale of $30.000.000 of six per cent ten-year debenture bonds for General in April, 1930. General executed an indenture to secure the bond issue and Chase National Bank was named as trustee. Under the indenture, or mortgage, General contracted not to "create or suffer to be created or to exist any pledge, mortgage or other lien of or upon any of the shares of stock of subsidiaries or other assets owned by the corporation." . . . "so long as any of the debentures remain outstanding" . . . "without making effective provision in and by the instrument creating such pledge, mortgage or other lien whereby all of the debentures issued hereunder shall be directly secured thereby at least equally and ratably with the bonds, notes or other obligations issued under or secured by such pledge, mortgage or other lien."

Among assets pledged as security for the debentures was the stock of Fox Film.

The market was unstable when the securities were offered to the public and to maintain a fair market price. Chase National required General to purchase many of its own debentures on the market. Chase National provided the money, and as security required General to pledge 1,221,213 Class A shares, or a majority, of Fox Film stock.

Say Indenture Was Violated

The present petitioners claimed this violated the indenture, and that it made fraudulent the later foreclosure and assumption of dominant influence over Fox Film and its subsidiaries (including Fox Rocky Mountain and Fox Midland theatres) by Chase National.

Because the indenture was "fraudulently conceived and carried out," complainants asserted, "they were entitled to look through the several corporate cloaks intervening between them and the bankrupts and proceed directly against the assets being administered in bankruptcy." (When the referee in bankruptcy refused to recognize any rights of claimants on account of the debenture bonds against the assets being administered in bankruptcy, the claimants filed the petitions to review.)

Judge Disagrees

The bondholders were not entitled to assert claims against the assets of the bankrupts unless the bankruptcy court disregarded all the corporate forms, including Fox Film Corporation, Wesco, and the corporate entities of the bankrupts themselves, Judge Reeves held. The bonds held by the petitioners constitute obligations of the General Equipment, and "in the event the various corporate shells should be broken down . . . the assets would revert to and become the immediate property of General Theatres Equipment, Inc., unless it had previously parted with its title to such assets."

Judge Reeves pointed out that "after the adjudication in bankruptcy, even the claimants recognized the propriety of the proceeding and made their claims in subordination and recognition of such proceedings."

Refers to Subsidiaries

"Every presumption must be indulged in favor of the utility as well as the legal propriety of the formation of the corporations," Judge Reeves pointed out. "Immediately prior to the initiation of bankruptcy proceedings the . . . bankrupts formed a number of subsidiaries" (of which Fox Rocky Mountain and Fox Midland were two) "and transferred certain of their assets to such subsidiaries. The object of this was to enable the subsidiaries to manage control and operate theatre properties remote from the immediate jurisdiction of the court. By such means the receiver and trustee of the bankrupts was able to dominate the boards of directors and receive the income from the income producing properties of the corporation without the usual expense of ancillary proceedings and court orders appertaining thereto.

"When the petitions in bankruptcy were filed, representations were made that such subsidiaries had been formed solely and alone to avoid inconvenience, and to save court expenses. Nothing was taken away from the bankrupt corporation."

In other words, the judge held the subsidiary corporations do exist legally and can be adjudged bankrupt.

Claimants Overstep Rights

While an ancillary bill is permissible, Judge Reeves found, claimants had no right to proceed against the assets of corporations (Fox Midland and Fox Rocky Mountain) with whom there was no "legal privity." He found also that the processes of the court had not been abused in the bankruptcy proceedings.

Bankruptcy proceedings were closed in July, this year, and the theatre properties involved proceeded to reorganize under National Theatre ownership.

The present decision clears up the bankruptcy proceedings. It has no bearing on the rights of petitioners to proceed against Chase National, General Theatres Equipment, or some other corporation, but it indicates Judge Reeves' opinion that they cannot proceed in this court, in this case, against the bankrupt corporations involved.

New York Hearing

An investigation into charges of misrepresentation in General Theatres Equipment Corporation's own reorganization plan which have been made by security holders of the company was begun this week in a closed hearing called in New York by a sub-committee of the Sabath Congressional committee for the investigation of real estate bond reorganizations. Former United States Senator Daniel O. Hastings of Delaware, receiver for General, was the first witness.

Due to what Murray W. Garsson, attorney for the Sabath committee, described as "the importance of the testimony involved in the investigation," it was decided to make the subcommittee's proceedings exploratory in character and, if the preliminary findings warrant, turn the investigation of the General plan over to the whole Sabath committee early in December. On the sub-committee are Representatives Martin J. Kennedy and Francis D. Culkin, both of New York.

As a result of the charges of misrepresentation, which Attorney Garsson said were received from "thousands of bondholders," Inspector Moore of the Postoffice Department, New York, appeared at the hearing rooms and will observe the proceedings for possible evidence of misuse of the mails.

Similar complaints from security holders of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses figured in the Sabath committee's investigation of reorganization of that company, Mr. Garsson said. The committee's report on its study of that reorganization has been turned over to the federal district attorney in New York for study.

REORGANIZATION PLAN IS UP AT WILMINGTON

The plan of reorganization for General Theatres Equipment, Inc., was presented before Chancellor Josiah O. Wolcott in the chancery court of Wilmington, Del., on Wednesday.

Aaron Finger of the law firm of Richards, Layton and Finger, representing the committee of debenture holders which evolved itself into a reorganization committee, presented the plan to the court. United States Senator Daniel O. Hastings of Delaware is receiver for GTE.

Extra! Farnol Has A New Smeller

THE GODS OF SCIENCE have stolen Lynn Farnol from his workbench in motion picture press agentry and transported him to that world inhabited by those tireless creatures who invent something not caring a tinker's dam whether the thing is needed. Lynn Farnol, Broadway press agent, has invented a smelling machine!

Awed at the thought of the great potentialities that lie ahead for determining beforehand the nasal effect of some of Hollywood's motion picture product, Newspaper Writer Archer Winstein tramped briskly to Mr. Farnol's Times Square office to find out whether Mr. Farnol's departure into science really brought forth a smeller or just another junkyard showpiece. It's a smeller all right.

The story really begins with Mr. Farnol lolling around his home grounds one evening thinking on his favorite topic—smells. What to do? What to do? He cudgeled his brains and groaned inwardly.

At this point the picture is further enlivened by the arrival from nowhere of Mr. Samuel Sloan Auchincloss, a tall, studious glasses-wearer, who last spring invented a Cinefusionmeter for correcting squints in children.

So the combined heads of Farnol and Auchincloss bethought them that if firearms can make man equal to the man-eating tiger, then man could also overcome his nasal inferiority to a dog and with the aid of some mechanical aid jack his smelling powers up to the *n*th degree of the canine.

The end result has been described to Reporter Winstein as combining "the electrical brain of the automatic telephone, the principle of air-conditioning and indirect lighting, the newest materials of airplane propellers and fuselages, and a trick electrical circuit making a complete change of air possible in 15 seconds, a fact hitherto considered well-nigh impossible. If it was considered at all." In brief, the Farnol-Archincloss smeller is a veritable Rube Goldberg smell detector.

It is a booth not unlike a telephone booth, in size and shape, though infinitely superior in other respects. To tell the truth, or part of it, the machine can do everything but smell for you.

A fan blowing at a rate of five miles per hour introduces air, and another fan, at the superior rate of six miles per hour, extracts air. As you can see, this would leave the poor booth without any air at all if allowed to continue to the bitter end. But there are also six nozzles at hand. A slight push on a button and from one of the nozzles issues the enchanting essence of "My Sin" (a perfume) or any other scent that has been put in the bottle.

The opalescent sides of the booth through which an inmate can neither see nor be seen raised an interesting problem in feminine psychology. "What," mulled the inventors, "will happen when a woman finds herself able neither to see nor be seen? Will she scream with claustrophobia?"

They nearly substituted clear glass before remembering a woman can't concentrate on smell when some one is looking at her. The opaque was retained.

When the booth was constructed in the now historical basement at 439 East Seventy-second Street, New York, it was too large to take out through the door. Dismounted, it was reassembled in an old store across the street. Estimates are being drawn and plans laid for the construction of 0 more. Unitl genuine mass production has been achieved on a conveyor belt basis the price F. O. B. East Seventy-second Street will hover at the $500 mark. Thus, for private homes, it must be definitely regarded as a plaything of the rich.

Nasal titillation, like most everything else—Vultee airplanes, blinis with beluga caviar, trips to Florida, penthouses with terraces and Deusenbergs (Bill Ferguson, take note) will be a perquisite of those with the dough.

Anyway, no matter how thinly you spray it, Farnol can smell it.

From Odd McIntyre we hear that Ernest Booth, discovered by H. L. Mencken while serving a life term in California, is, under a new law, to receive his freedom in four years, having served eleven. Since the ban on prison writing was lifted in California in 1928, Booth has achieved economic security for a devoted wife by writing for Hollywood studios, submitting his manuscripts through the mail, probably writing under a nom de plume. Under the prison regulations, however, inmates may not write about crime or prisons.

During his long travail, Booth, one-time burglar, has devoted his available hours from rock-breaking, to a historical research of Byzantine literature, and is now an authority on the subject. So much so, McIntyre tells us, that he has completed a novelized version of the rise of Justinian's mistress from a mimic to the exalted position of empress.

Rubinoff passed out on the spot, believing that his valuable instrument had been destroyed. When he came to it was with great difficulty that they convinced him that it was a cheap pawn shop model, and not his precious Strad that was splintered on his noble dome.

CHINESE RETURNING TO NATIVE OPERA AS INCOME ON FOREIGN FILMS DROPS

Greater Selection of Product One Hope of Distributors; Rebate Possible in Canton Local Censor Fee Dispute

by J. P. KOEHLER
Shanghai Correspondent

While it is yet a bit early to gauge the extent of the coming season's prospects, the cinema trade is facing the undoubted facts of reduced income for foreign pictures.

There is no question but what the present depression, lack of employment and the hardships incurred in widespread areas by floods and drought are having their reaction in the very evident lack of money being spent for cinema amusement.

Admission prices have been reduced in many cities, in order to increase attendance, but have had their usual result in a small box office return without relative patronage increase.

Many Chinese cinemas are resorting to the old-fashioned but popular Chinese native opera in an effort to get out of the red, and since for such shows admission prices are generally about one-half those charged by the theatre under their film exhibition contracts, the attendance for the stage shows is usually good.

A fair indication of the theatre depression is shown by the results of a European traveling variety show, now running in Shanghai. Last year a similar American company packed the house continually for three weeks, and today a scarcely inferior company is running to 25 per cent in the second week.

In Hongkong, Kings theatre is the premier house, with Queens next, and the Alhambra, across the bay in Kowloon, taking third position. These three cinemas constitute the only good first-run outlet in Hongkong—a few first runs going into the Central theatre, which has found Chinese production more profitable. Paramount and Warner-First National will run in the Queens this season, with MGM and Fox in the Kings. The Alhambra quite possibly will take second run after Kings, along with selected first release from the American distributors. No definite information is as yet available regarding RKO Radio, Universal and United Artists in Hongkong.

With 23 houses in the city showing American product, at least 15 of these include many Chinese productions and run only selected foreign product such as action or spectacular films.

Rebate Settlement Possible

The Canton situation is still in doubt. No American films have been released first-run in Canton since the dispute about local censor fees resulted in a boycott against Paramount and a concerted "Stop Service" by all large American distributors. The first run cinemas are facing irreparable losses by being forced to run the product of Chinese native studios—cheap European films and a few independent American productions, and most of this is being double-dated owing to lack of product to keep doors open.

The lost playdates will remain so to the American distributors and the result at the end of the season undoubtedly will show a curtailed release list with only selected product getting a chance.

However, there is now the possibility that Nanking will effect a settlement of this irritating situation by arrangement with distributors whereby the distributors will receive a rebate of all local censor fees paid in Canton, when the regular fees are paid at Nanking, which is entirely acceptable to the distributors, and leaves the entire matter of final settlement between the Chinese authorities.

Canton is one of the three largest outlets for American product in China and disputes like this one could have easily been avoided by a preliminary conference before arbitrarily putting into force a rule which the Canton authorities must have known would lead to resentment, and which in itself was illegal so far as the national law of Chinese censorship goes. It is another example of failure of the Chinese authorities thoroughly to examine prospective legislation affecting foreign film product in order to prevent unfair or impracticable rules from coming into force.

Shanghai Prospects

In Shanghai the trade is looking forward to a fairly good first-run season, and if productions live up to a good percentage of advance notices, subsequent-runs here should also be good. However, the general economical situation is such that it can be expected to see the box office below normal. Admission prices in the first-run theatres here cannot well be reduced owing to heavy investment in equipment, cooling systems, and so on. With 6,150 seats in the four leading cinemas and a top of C$2.00 evening and C$1.50 for two daily matinees and a C$0.60 minimum for both evening and matinees, these prices are still too high to admit the masses, so it can be expected that subsequent-runs, whose patronage is 90 per cent native, will take only selected product. Shanghai has 25 cinemas showing foreign product but of these only the first-runs and six or eight second-run houses can take an all-foreign type product.

The summer season just passed was rather unusual, in that many strong pictures were released. The policy proved that an air-conditioned theatre, given good product, can get results in any season.

Tientsin and Peiping

In the North—Tientsin and Peiping—things look pessimistic. Tientsin has 19 cinemas and Peiping 10 releasing American product with three first-run theatres in each city, capable of handling full time foreign programs. None is prosperous, and they undoubtedly will endeavor to book only the stronger product. Block-booking will show smaller lots divided among the eight major American studios.

In Nanking the New Capitol and New State, the last-named scheduled to open in February, 1936, will handle the cream of American product. Nanking now has five cinemas showing American first-runs, but at least two of these will be forced into subsequent runs by the new, modern, air conditioned cinemas now open or in process of construction.

Hankow has three first-runs and two subsequent-runs using American and occasional European product, but the subsequents in general use only selected action pictures. Hankow has just gone into a drastic admission price reduction that scarcely promises well for the distributors' share. It seems that some distributors will be left out in the cold in Hankow this year.

Exhibition Profit Found Dependent on Modern Theatres and Showmanship; Chinese Producers Wary on Predictions

Tsingtao, with three theatres handling foreign product, will probably be out of the running for new season's product for some time. Overbooking will not allow further new contracts until the situation clears up.

Other Theatres

The remainder of China's 160 cinemas that may be expected to handle American product will be limited, with only a few exceptions, to selected pictures, and the result is that only about 40 can be expected to handle all-time foreign product,

The time when China was a golden opportunity for foreign product is gone. Salesmanship and product now must take the place of the former "come and get it" idea. On the exhibitor's side, only those theatres which go in for modern construction, comfortable surroundings, good projection and sound, and exploitation showmanship, can expect to show a profit.

Chinese producers are not revealing, with any certainty, their coming releases or studio activities. One reason may be that advance notices of uncensored productions are strictly forbidden by law and all script must first be approved before a crank is turned.

Among the four leading Chinese studios are the Unique Film Company with headquarters in Hongkong and studios in Hongkong and Shanghai; United Photoplay Service, which is expected to release several films with China's leading stars; Star Motion Picture Company, whose leading star is Miss Butterfly Wu, China's outstanding film actress, commands a most favorable position due to her, though her latest release, with a personal appearance at the Strand, Shanghai, apparently flopped after a few days run, when it was transferred to an inferior theatre. Yi Hwa Motion Picture Company, with studios in Shanghai, will also turn out a few productions.

The new Central Studios in Nanking will confine its efforts to propaganda and educational films for the present; and it is expected that, sooner or later, all native controlled cinemas will be required to show such films as part of their programs. "Quotas" do not exist—but there is no telling when China will take such action.

Yet another burden has been laid upon the distributors in China. Films passed by the existing Central Film Censorship Committee are not subject to any charge for reissue of a lost certificate except the usual C$3.10, but film passed by a previous Committee must pay C$15.00 for feature and C$5.00 for shorts. The rule applies both to native and imported product, and such films must again be sent back to Nanking (at distributors' expense, of course!) for re-censorship by the existing Committee. Seems as if the standing Committee have little faith in the work of their predecessors.

EXHIBITORS IN BRITAIN PROPOSE GOVERNMENT REGULATE INDUSTRY

Standard Contract and Compulsory Arbitration Are Demanded; Also Reduction of the Theatremen's Film Quota

by BRUCE ALLAN

London Correspondent

Amendment of the Films Act, a matter of current negotiation between the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association and the Film Group of the Federation of British Industries, will take a form not contemplated in official plans if suggestions favored by rank and file exhibitors in various districts are forced to the point of adoption by the CEA Council. A unanimous resolution from the Leeds branch requests support for amendments to the Act calling for a Standard Contract compulsory distributor-exhibitor arbitration and, of course, a reduction in the exhibitors' British film quota. And there is evidence that the Leeds policy reflects the opinion of theatre men in many other districts.

The keen desire of British producers to obtain a more stringent quota offers exhibitors a certain bargaining power, in view of the necessity of arriving at an "agreed" policy for the Board of Trade. An exhibitor concession on quota, balanced by producer support for the exhibitors' Standard Contract demand, might produce a situation in which the distributor would be the main sufferer from a revision of the Act.

Recent events undoubtedly have tended to support the CEA Council's demand for increased powers from the rank and file.

Public Rates Authors

London Film Productions has now published an analysis of the first 10,000 replies to question 7b in its recent National Film Investigation. This question was: "Which three of our contemporary writers could, in your opinion, write the best film stories?" The following eleven writers led in the balloting, the next in order receiving less than 1,000 votes. In the listing are given the order of ranking, writer's name and total votes received.

1. H. G. Wells	8253
2. J. B. Priestley	7757
3. John Buchan	2837
4. Noel Coward	2567
5. Somerset Maughan	1932
6. A. E. W. Mason	1739
7. Rudyard Kipling	1487
8. Warwick Deeping	1439
9. G. B. Shaw	1343
10. Hugh Walpole	1269
11. P. G. Wodehouse	1225

The leaders in this list have all proved that they can write film material. Wells, who has "Things to Come" and "The Man Who Could Work Miracles" in preparation by London, has given the screen two big winners in "The Invisible Man" and "Kipps." Priestley's best seller, "The Good Companions," was filmed by Gaumont-British; Buchan wrote "The Thirty Nine Steps;" Noel Coward, "Cavalcade;" Maugham, "Rain" ("Sadie Thompson"); Mason, "The Four Feathers." Yet Yeats-Brown, of "Bengal Lancer" fame, got only 36 votes, and a best-seller like A. S. M. Hutchinson but 35 ballots. It was announced that "a very considerable number of entrants suggested that the screen should develop its own authors."

Its current activities are being carried on at British & Dominions' studio at Elstree.

No Censor for Ulster

A suggestion that an official censor be appointed for Northern Ireland was rejected in the Belfast House of Commons. Sir Dawson Bates, the minister for home affairs, declared that such an official was unnecessary "if Belfast Corporation will do its duty." This body has the authority, in view of its licensing powers, to prohibit films on grounds of immorality or unsuitability for exhibition. Special powers also are possessed by the Ulster Government to prohibit films likely to prove "subversive of law and order," but these powers never have been exercised. In the neighbouring Irish Free State, censorship is a Government matter and the official in charge is so active a civil servant that the UK distributor who gets in a subject quite without cuts thinks dolefully of the law of averages.

Preference shareholders in General Theatre Corporation who dissent from the reconstruction plan are protesting against the decision to allow them no representation on the directorate. Their allegation is that preference capital represents over £400,000 against £32,000 of ordinary capital held by Gaumont-British, who manage the company, and that the office of president occupied by Isidore Ostrer, is unauthorized.

BRITISH TURN DOWN "BOOKING HOLIDAY"

The Manchester branch of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association in England has tabled a resolution for discussion by the general council calling for a "booking holiday" at the expense of distributors making a 50 per cent price demand for any of their features. No bookings would have been placed in such companies for three months under the tabled plan.

Edward Shortt, British Censors' Leader, Is Dead

Edward Shortt, King's Counsel and president of the British Board of Film Censors, died in London early this week of blood poisoning that set in following an attack of influenza. He was seventy-three years old.

Mr. Shortt was Chief Secretary of Ireland in 1918 and 1919 and British Home Secretary from 1919 to 1922.

His signature was familiar to all British theatregoers as it appeared on the censor's certificate of every picture shown in England. He always admitted that he saw few pictures himself, but insisted on banning those of the "horror" type.

Mr. Shortt was appointed president of the censor board in 1929 following the death of T. P. O'Connor.

Mr. Shortt was born at Newcastle-on-Tyne and educated at Durham School and University. After leaving the university he studied law in London and was called to the bar in 1890. He built up a large practice, and in 1907 was made recorder of Sunderland, a position he held until 1918.

In 1910 he was elected a Liberal Member of Parliament from West Newcastle, a position he held for twelve years, and he achieved national prominence under the Coalition government. Toward the end of the World War, Ireland was in turmoil as the Irish fought conscription, then in force in Great Britain. Mr. Shortt was a leader in the fight against conscription in Ireland, and his appointment as Chief Secretary lessened the tension in that country.

Kohn, Schulberg Quitting Columbia

Ralph Kohn's contract as an executive producer for Columbia Pictures, which had six months to run, was cancelled last Friday at Mr. Kohn's request and at the same time B. P. Schulberg indicated he also would leave Columbia when his contract expires on May 1. Mr. Schulberg immediately will assume the vice-presidency of Schulberg Productions, Ltd., formed several months ago.

"At the expiration of my contract, Schulberg Productions will expand operations for an increased number of pictures," said Mr. Schulberg. The program will include a series starring Edward Arnold.

The developments corroborate reports current in Hollywood for some time that both Mr. Kohn and Mr. Schulberg were dissatisfied with their Columbia deals.

U. S. FILMS RETAIN PRESTIGE OVERSEAS

Two Brussels Grand Prizes Went to United States, Third to Feature Distributed in America

by J. K. RUTENBERG

Berlin Correspondent

World acknowledgment that American film arts and sciences are maintaining their supremacy is reflected by the large number of prizes awarded to motion pictures born in the United States at the International Film Festival organized by leading representatives of the Belgian industry and recently concluded at Brussels. An impartial jury presided over several weeks of continuous screenings of offerings from the studios of many countries.

Two Out of Three

Two out of three of the grand prizes for general entertainment features went to American product. The winners were:

The Informer, John Ford production for RKO Radio; awarded The King's Prize.

Way Down East, Twentieth Century production for Fox release. The Prize of the Chambre Syndicale Belge de la Cinematographie (organization of the Belgian industry).

Escape Me Never, British and Dominions picture, starring Elisabeth Bergner and directed by Dr. Paul Czinner. Released in America by United Artists. The Prize of the City of Brussels.

Grand Honorary Medals

Grand honorary medals were awarded to the following:

Best Scenario: "The Scoundrel," written by Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur and starring Noel Coward. A Paramount release.

Best Photography: "Bosambo," British production directed by Zoltan Korda.

Best Musical Interpretation: "L'Equipage," French picture directed by Anatol Litvak.

The prize for the best cartoon went to the Walt Disney color comedies, Mickey Mouse's "Band Concert" and the Silly Symphony, "Who Killed Cock Robin?"

Honorary medals for other achievements were given to the following:

Daro un Millione, Italian picture, directed by Mario Camerini.

Clive of India, United Artists production directed by Richard Boleslavsky.

La Bandera, French, directed by Julien Duvivier.

Pygmalion, German picture from the George Bernard Shaw play. Jenny Jugo and Gustav Gründgens were starred in the screenplay.

Call of the Wild, Twentieth Century production released by United Artists and directed by William Wellman.

Variete, French, directed by Nicholas Farkas and starring Annabella.

David Copperfield, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, directed by George Cukor.

In the field of the educational subject and the socalled cultural picture European producers divided the awards.

Pictures of an educational nature which won signal praise were these:

The Song of Ceylon, British, the Belgian Government Prize for best foreign production.

La Merveille de l'Occidente, French, by Maurice Cloche, the International Film Press Federation Prize for best travelogue.

Honorary medals in the educational field went to "Physiognomy of Great Britain," by Paul Rotha; "Coal Face," British picture by Wright; "B. B. C. the Voice of Britain," by John Grierson, and "Les Troits Mats," Belgian, by Storck and Fernhout.

"Culture" Pictures

In the classification "cultural films" were these winners:

The Sea Bear, British, by Hewer and J. Huxley, the Alberteum Prize.

L'Hippocampe, French, by Jean Painlevé, the Prize of the Chambre Syndicale des Distributeurs et Exploitants de Salles (Association of Distributors and Exhibitors).

The Strength of Plants, UFA, Prize of the Brussels Exhibition.

Honorary Awards

Honorary medals went to these:

Uit het Rijk der Kristallen, Dutch; "Schmetterlingsleben," German; "The Amoeba," British, Huxley and Hewer; "The Blowfly," British.

Other honorary medals in special fields of award went to the following:

Colour Box, British, by Len Lyl, and the following Fischinger German compositions, "Symphony in Blue" and "Studio 7" and "Studio 8."

The Grand Honorary Medal for best technical realization in natural colors was not awarded.

American Seating Company Shows Nine Months Profit

The American Seating Company, for the nine months to September 30 reports a consolidated profit of $237,236 after depreciation, interest and other charges, but not allowing for federal taxes. After allowing $26,000 for tax reserve, the net reduces itself to $211,236, which is equal to $1.05 a share on 202,875 net par common shares excluding stock held in the treasury. Profit before tax for the identical period last year was $95,579.

Lloyd Production Head

Theodore Allen Lloyd, who wrote, directed and produced "New York Uncensored" for Celebrated Pictures, Inc., has been placed in charge of all of the company's future productions.

Freeman, Griffiths New Members of Paramount Board

The board of directors of Paramount Pictures, Inc., have elected Y. Frank Freeman, who is in charge of Paramount's theatre operations, a vice-president and director of the company and have also elected Stanton Griffiths, of the New York brokerage firm of Hemphill, Noyes & Co., a member of the board. These two fill the vacancies left by the resignations of Frank Vanderlip and William S. Gray, Jr. There still remain, however, two vacancies on the Paramount board which have existed since the reorganization.

Robert K. Cassatt, Philadelphia and New York investment broker, has, meanwhile, advised the Paramount officials that he had abandoned consideration of resigning from the Paramount board and would continue as a member. Mr. Cassatt is serving a one-year term which expires next June. During recent weeks he has been considering resigning from the board because of the press of other business.

Mr. Cassatt's decision to remain stabilizes the board after its recent period of flux begun with the resignation some weeks ago of Mr. Vanderlip and Mr. Gray.

Sir William Wiseman, partner in Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and a former director of Paramount Publix, last week forestalled the beginning of examinations before trial of former officers and directors of Paramount who are defendants in an action brought by trustees of the company to recover large sums involved in the issuance and allotment to subscribers of Paramount stock in 1931.

Mr. Wiseman was the first of the defendants to be subpoenaed for examination last week before Special Master John E. Joyce in New York. Prior to the hearing he moved for an order to have the subpoena vacated.

Pathe's RKO Notes Sale To Be Studied

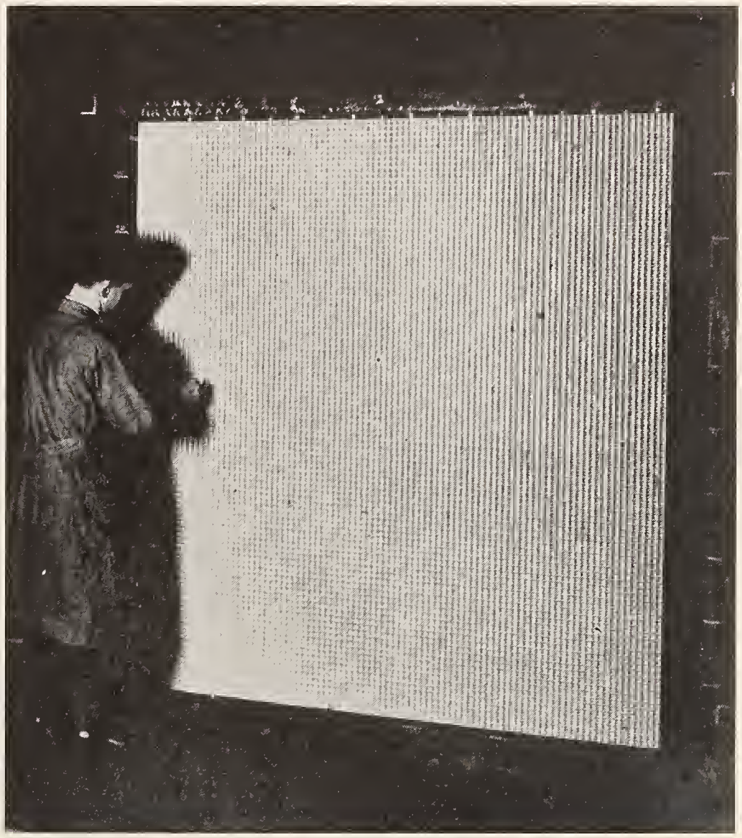
The purchase by Time of Pathe's $1,696,000 notes for $340,000 last spring will be included in the examination of Pathe officers and directors now being conducted before trial in New York of Pat Casey's stockholder action alleging mismanagement and dissipation of assets of the old Pathe company, it was indicated by Martin King, attorney for Casey.

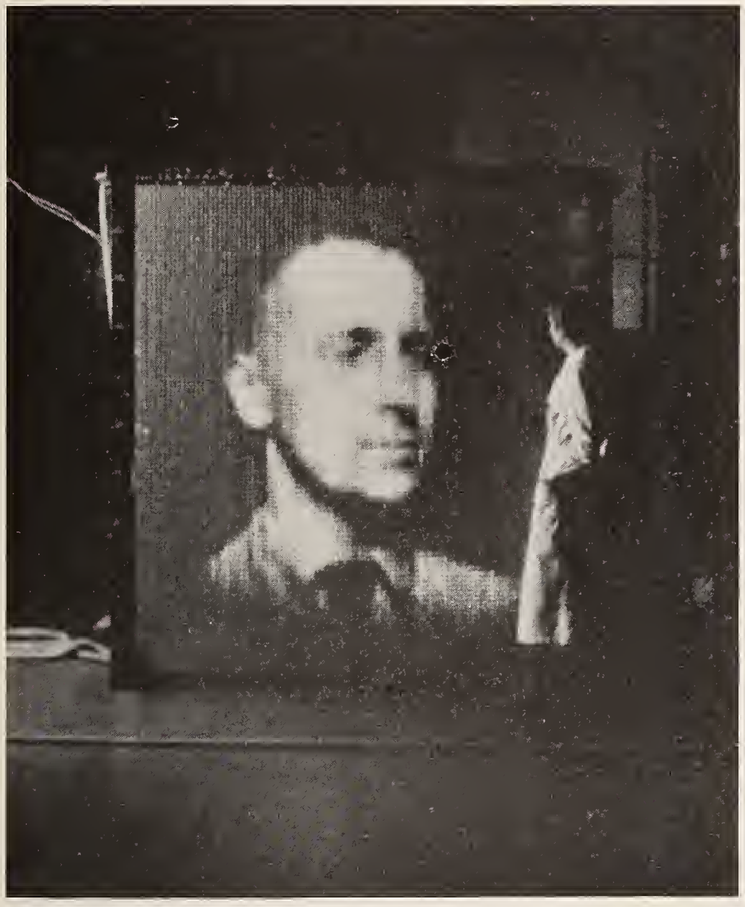
Mr. King said that with a reorganization of RKO pending under the financial direction of Atlas Corporation and Lehman Brothers the RKO notes which were given in exchange for Pathe assets purchased in 1931 soon might be worth "100 cents on the dollar." He said that Pathe officers would be questioned concerning a report that Henry R. Luce, publisher of Time and a director of Paramount, purchased the RKO notes from Pathe on the recommendation of Atlas Corporation.

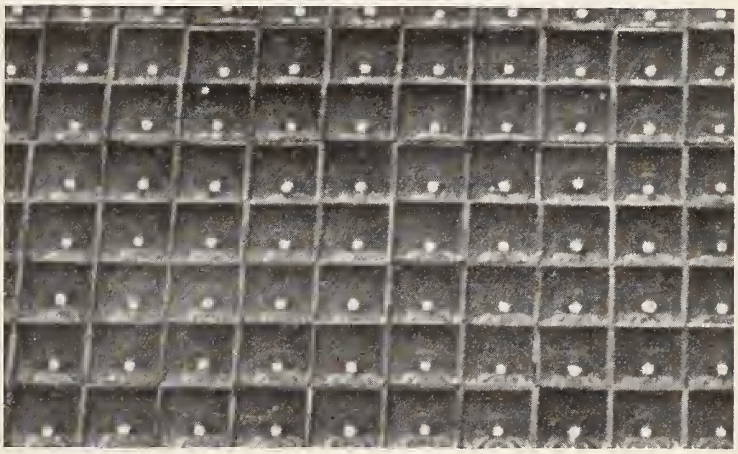
The examination of Frank F. Kolbe, president of Pathe Film, before trial of Mr. Casey's action, was continued this week by Mr. King. Robert W. Atkins, vice-president, is scheduled for questioning next week.

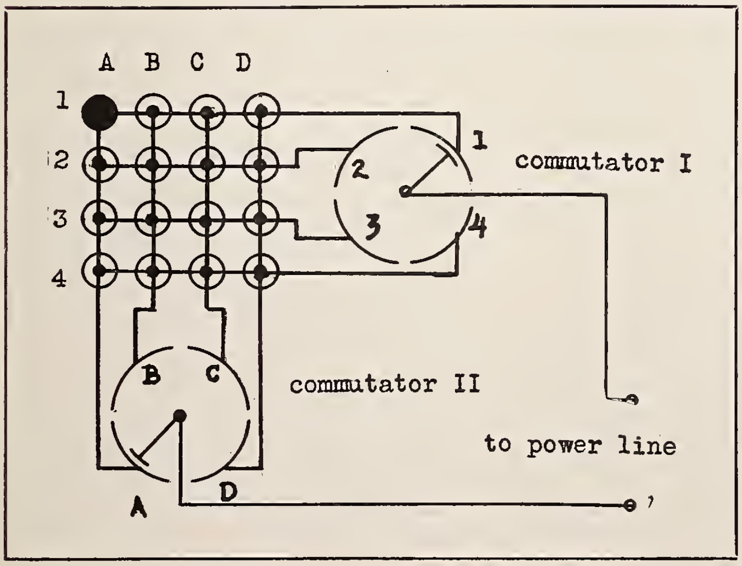
TELEVISION FOR THE GERMAN THEATRE

● Graphically reporting a new German development in television, a method described in that country as one adapted to reception in the theatre. Several theatres have been equipped with this system and are presenting Herr Hitler and other national figures in speeches. Large-scale scenes or groups of figures have not yet been successfully transmitted, and only the heads and shoulders of the speakers are shown. Features of the system, as represented, are described in the caption below.









● The major innovation in this method of television is in the lamp and circuit system of the screen. The screen is shown in the two larger pictures above with and without the transmitted image. The smaller picture shows a section of the screen in detail. The screen consists of a grid of shallow recesses, each of which contains a small incandescent electric lamp. There are 100 rows of lamps each way, making a total of 10,000 bulbs in an area 6.3 feet square. The lamps are of regular incandescent type, with tungsten filaments glowing in a vacuum. The filaments are extremely thin, however, and provide for complete loss of glow in one twenty-fifth of a second upon breaking of contact. The mechanism for supplying energy to the lamps is indicated in the digram at the left, showing a set-up of 16 lamps. With a screen containing 10,000 lamps, each commutator has 100 contacts. The speed of rotation of commutator No. 1 is four times that of commutator No. 2.

Argument Finished On City Sales Tax

United Artists completed presentation of its arguments against the taxability of New York film rentals under the city sales tax ordinance at a hearing last week before a committee of the city finance department, which reserved decision on the validity of the proposed levy.

The assessment by the city against the United Artists rentals is being contested as a test case for all New York distributors, whose rentals would be subject to an estimated aggregate tax of $700,000 if the city is successful in establishing the validity of its levy. An assessment was also made against Universal's New York film rentals, but further action on this has been held in abeyance pending the outcome of the test case.

The United Artists defense was based upon the industry contention that films are licensed under federal copyright laws and not sold, and hence are not subject to a local sales tax. Witnesses who testified at the hearing for United Artists included Paul Lazarus, Edward Mullen, New York branch manager for United Artists and Harry Muller, company treasurer. Gabriel L. Hess, Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America attorney, was an observer at the hearing.

Indications are, according to those close to the proceedings, that the city finance committee will hold film revenues to be taxable under the city ordinance in order to pave the way for a formal court opinion and precedent on the subject. The committee is empowered to pass upon the validity of the levy, but its findings are subject to review by the courts. In the event of the almost certain adverse ruling from the city committee, the industry, through United Artists, will appeal the case to the appellate division of the New York supreme court for a ruling.

Accountants for both the city and United Artists were given an indefinite period in which to agree on items of exchange income which would be taxable in event the levy was held valid.

Meanwhile, in Olympia, Wash., the state tax on film rentals was held unconstitutional in the state supreme court there, upholding the decision of the superior court. The state Tax Commission had appealed the lower court's decision.

On the other hand, the sales tax is in Missouri to stay, and the state cannot rely upon any other form of taxation to provide funds for old age pensions, Jerome Joffee, state senator and author of the Missouri old age pension law, said in Kansas City.

While Mr. Joffee regards the "bottle cap" tokens as a successful collection method, he believes the legislature will provide for metal tokens at the next session.

Film men in Nebraska are worried over the special session of the legislature that has been called to raise some $5,000,000 through new tax channels. The latest proposal is the two per cent sales tax which was defeated in the last session. Theatre box-offices are not included, as yet, in the measure but indications are they will be added.

Ryskind to Pickford-Lasky

Morrie Ryskind will write the screen play for the initial production of the newly formed Pickford-Lasky Productions, releasing through United Artists. It is to be an adaptation of a French play for which Jesse L. Lasky obtained the screen rights on his recent trip abroad, and will star Francis Lederer. Production starts next month.

Cecil B. DeMille will be an international sponsor of a memorial to be erected to Mark Twain at the latter's birthplace in Hannibal, Mo. The dedication exercises are scheduled for November 18. The memorial will be in the form of a statue by Walter Russell, who was commissioned by Mrs. Clara Clemens Gabrilowitsch, the author's daughter.

Mexican Impost Burden Easing

American influence in the person of Jack Gallagher, who produced independently in Hollywood and served in other capacities in studios there, is being exerted in the controversy between the Mexican government and American distributors over duties and the income tax. Mr. Gallagher is working with the ministry of finance to straighten out the rumpus; he says that great progress is being made toward an early and permanent settlement and that the Americans will not drop this country like a cold potato.

According to Mr. Gallagher, work is now being done toward inducing the ministry to withdraw film materials from the tariff classification of ultra luxury and gambling articles, and to class it as merchandise that benefits Mexico, and to give the income tax matter a better viewpoint to have it applied to the distributors' net instead of gross revenues. Good headway is being made along both these lines, he says.

When Mr. Gallagher finishes with his assignment, he plans to stay on here and work with those Mexican producers who are convinced that the only way for them to make more money out of their productions is to have an English language version. Several experiments along these lines already have been made.

Uncopyrighted Material

Uncopyrighted Mexican novels, poems or other literary works are the free property of any film producer; anybody can go ahead and make a picture based upon these works without paying any fees or royalties, the national supreme court has ruled. But if a copyrighted literary work is to be used, well, that is a hoss of another shade.

George Pezet Dead

Death has removed the young dean of the Mexican cinematographic industry, George Pezet, who died of pneumonia at his home in Mexico City. He was president of the Film Exchange, S. A., president of Producciones Fesa, and general secretary of the Association of Mexican Motion Picture Producers and the Film Board of Trade of Mexico, both of which he organized.

Born at Lima, Peru, on May 7, 1897, Mr. Pezet served for some time as a secretary of the Peruvian legation in Washington. D. C. He came to Mexico as the assistant manager of the Mexican City bureau of Paramount. He wrote several scenarios which were produced by Mexican companies. Mr. Pezet is survived by his widow, two sons and two daughters, and a brother, Juan, who is president of Mexican Motion Picture Distributors Company. Burial was in the French Cemetery, Mexico City. The funeral was attended by practically all Mexican and foreign film men in the Mexican capital.

Schermer Joins Republic

NEW ZEALAND STANDARD CONTRACT GOES TO WORK ON TRIAL FOR YEAR

Large Segment of the Trade Is Reported Skeptical of Success of New Agreement; Provisions Are Outlined

by CLIFF HOLT
Sydney Correspondent

The Standard Contract for the hire of all film between exhibitor and distributor is now operating as law in New Zealand. The Advisory Committee which governed the framing of the agreement has approved it for an experimental period of 12 months. At the expiration of that period the contract will be brought up for revision upon application of either the distributors' or exhibitors' association, but a joint application can effect revision at any time.

An extremely lengthy document, the Standard Contract cost a considerable amount of money and took several months in the drafting. Although both distributors and exhibitors have undertaken to cooperate to the fullest extent and avoid disputes, a large section of the trade is skeptical of its success.

Stripped of its legal embroidery and in abbreviated form, the contract sets out the following:

1. If the renter offers the exhibitor a lesser number of pictures than that specified in the agreement, a pro rata adjustment shall be made.

2. If the renter fails to deliver the full quota of films specified in the agreement, but releases any such films in the next renting season, he agrees to offer them to the exhibitor in the same relative priority to competitive exhibitors as he would have under the original agreement, had the films in question been duly delivered.

3. Unless specifically contracted for first- or second-run exhibition—the renter shall be under no obligation to fulfill supply until the film has played first—and second-run seasons in the city.

4. If the renter is unable to deliver on the due date any specified film, he shall have the right to make a substitution, but the exhibitor may, by giving at least 14 days' notice, refuse to accept it; and unless the renter has failed to deliver the film because of any one of a given number of reasons, the number of films specified in the contract may be reduced accordingly.

5. The hire on flat rental pictures, together with all advertising, freight and other charges, must be paid to the renter by the exhibitor not less than three days from the date of the film's dispatch to the exhibitor.

6. On percentage pictures the exhibitor is given seven days in which to make hiring payments. The exhibitor undertakes to provide, on a form satisfactory to the renter, a certified, itemized statement of the daily gross receipts, and the authorized representative of the renter is given the right to verify the receipts and inspect the books and taxation returns in respect of the gross receipts. Any information of this character must be treated as confidential by the renter, except before arbitration or in litigation.

7. Nothing contained in the above shall impose any obligation on the exhibitor if the film is not delivered in reasonable physical condition, and was not screened for that reason.

8. If the exhibitor fails or refuses to exhibit a percentage picture as provided in the agreement, he shall pay to the renter as liquidated damages a sum averaged on the gross receipts for the corresponding days over the preceding weeks, prior to the date or dates on which the film's exhibition should have taken place. If the exhibitor should exhibit the picture for but part of the specified season, the sum payable to the renter shall be computed at the rate of 75 per cent of the gross receipts on the last day of the screening.

9. The minimum admission clause may be decided upon at the discretion of the renter, but must be either 1/- for adults and 6d for children (or 3d for children at matinees), or else 6d for adults and 3d for children.

10. The exhibitor agrees that he will not offer any inducement to the patron which may have the effect of directly or indirectly reducing the minimum admission price.

11. The breach of clause 10 by the exhibitor shall make him liable to the renter for £5 in liquidated damages, but this provision shall not preclude the renter from exercising any further remedies to which he may be entitled.

12. In all advertisements the exhibitor agrees to mention the producer's name and to give full prominence to the renter's trademark.

13. The exhibitor shall not use any advertisement or publicity of which the renter has given his written disapproval, and the exhibitor shall indemnify the renter against any loss or damage suffered by the renter by reason of a breach of this obligation.

14. The exhibitor agrees that not more than two feature length films shall be shown on the one program.

15. The exhibitor is to pay all cost of transport and accessories from a renter's exchange and return, or to another exhibitor, as the case may be.

16. If any loss is incurred by the renter because of the exhibitor's failure to arrange the proper dispatch of film for reasons not beyond his control, the exhibitor will pay the renter's loss, and also indemnify the renter's loss in the event of any claims made upon the renter by another exhibitor who has suffered a loss because of this failure to arrange efficient dispatch.

Exhibitor, By 14 Days' Notice, May Reject Renter's Substitute Picture; Minimum Admission Prices Are Established

17. The exhibitor shall exhibit each film in its entirety, and shall not copy, duplicate cut or alter any film except with the written or telegraphic consent of the renter.

18. The exhibitor must report by prepaid telegram the loss, theft, or damage to any print, and unless this report is telegraphed before or immediately after the first public exhibition of the film, the film will be deemed to have been in the exhibitor's possession.

19. The exhibitor must pay to the renter the cost of any damage to the film if the damage was done while the film was in the exhibitor's possession.

20. The exhibitor agrees to insure and keep insured all films in his possession under a block risk policy effected and operated by a Board consisting of an equal number of representatives of the Film Exchanges Association of New Zealand (Inc.) and the New Zealand Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association (Inc.)

21. The broadcasting of or from any films supplied under the agreement is expressly prohibited.

22. No costs or expense in switching shall be borne by the exhibitor, unless done at his request.

23. The renter has the right to stamp his copy of the agreement, and to charge the exhibitor with the amount of stamp duty involved.

24. If the renter persistently fails to provide films on due dates or gives prior exhibition to competitive theatres or commits any other breach that strikes at the root of the contract, the exhibitor may terminate the contract or suspend payments until such defects have been remedied.

The contract also covers sound and projection equipment and copyright.

Adopted Foundling Of Variety Club Is Guest at Banquet

Approximately one thousand men, representative of every branch of the amusement industry, attended the Seventh Annual Variety Club Banquet at the William Penn hotel in Pittsburgh Sunday night. Many of the guests arrived a day earlier to attend the Army-Pitt football game.

The banquet was held in honor of the retiring staff: Mike Cullen, chief barker; Frank Smith, first assistant chief barker; Art Levy, second assistant chief barker; Dr. L. G. Beinhauer, doughguy; James G. Balmer, property master; C. J. Latta, Josepy Blowitz, Steve Cox, Albert Barnett and George D. Tyson, canvasmen, and Harold Lund and Dr. A. Wise, delegates to the national convention.

Among those present were: Governor Harry W. Nice, Maryland; former Governor W. G. Conley, of West Virginia; Attorney General Charles J. Margiotti; Secretary of the Commonwealth David L. Lawrence; Mayor McNair of Pittsburgh; Tony Sarg; L. Howell Davis, chairman of the Pennsylvania censor board; Joseph Bernhard, general manager of Warner Brothers theatres; "Rip" Collins and Joe Whitehead, of the St. Louis Cardinals baseball team; T. W. Carrol, general manager of Western Union; Herman Robbins, president of National Screen Service; Sam Dembow, of National Screen Service; George Dembow, of National Screen Service; William Rodgers, of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; George Skouras, president of Skouras Theatres; Mayor Frank Couzens, of Detroit; Jules Levy, vice-president and foreign sales manager of RKO and Ed Lowry, vaudeville and radio star who acted as master-of-ceremonies. Norman Frescott was toastmaster.

In the circusy atmosphere of the "Big Top" passed in review a score of vaudeville acts, a half dozen internationally known dance orchestras, beautiful girls and leading wits, but it was a little girl with "china-blue eyes, flaxen hair and cheeks as pink as sea shells" who stole the whole show.

She merely waved a chubby hand, puckered a tiny mouth as if to cry and then smiled in such a way that a thousand relieved men laughed and applauded.

Of course, the members of the Variety Club have a proprietary interest in her welfare and her future, for with her debut at the banquet she was christened Miss Catherine Variety Sheridan, 2nd, and so became the adopted daughter of the club's members and the successor to Catherine, 1st, who was adopted by the club after being left in the Sheridan theatre eight years ago.

The new Catherine was taken from Roselia Foundling Asylum, where she was chosen by John Harris, and was presented to her new foster fathers by Mr. Cullen and Art Levy, who succeeds him.

New Dietz Show Written

Howard Dietz and Arthur Schwartz have written a musical comedy, "Follow the Sun," which C. B. Cochran, English producer, will stage in London. Claire Luce and Nick Long, Jr., will be co-starred in the revue.

THEATRE STARTS OWN NEWSPAPER

A four-page weekly newspaper is being published by the Mesa Theatre, Westland house, in Grand Junction, Colo. Because of connections with the opposition theatre, the town's newspaper buried the Mesa ads, so B. V. Warren, manager of the house, started his own paper, carrying advertisements from merchants, theatre and film news and serial stories. The paper, called The Mesa Movie Revue, is sent through the mails to every home in the vicinity of Grand Junction as well as in the town itself.

'So Red the Rose' Opens in 11 Cities

The old Southern Confederacy will be revived for a night Thursday evening when Paramount has its world premiere of "So Red the Rose" simultaneously in the 11 cities which were the capitals of the Confederacy during the war between the states.

"So Red the Rose" will open with ceremonies in Austin, Tex.; Jackson, Miss.; Montgomery, Ala.; Tallahassee, Fla.; Baton Rouge, La.; Richmond, Va.; Raleigh, N. C.; Columbia, S. C.; Nashville, Tenn.; Atlanta, Ga., and Little Rock, Ark.

Governors of the 11 states have been invited to the premieres and leaders of the United Daughters of the Confederacy and other prominent Southern organizations will attend. The opening ceremonies will be broadcast by radio from each of the 11 states.

Members of the motion picture trade press will leave New York Thursday morning to attend the Richmond premiere, which will be held at the Colonial theatre. Those attending include James Cunningham, of MOTION PICTURE HERALD; Maurice (Red) Kann, of Motion Picture Daily; Don Carl Gillette, Film Daily, and Lou Guimond of Box Office. They will be accompanied by Al Wilkie, Paramount home office publicity manager.

At Raleigh, N. C., the father and family of Randolph Scott, who plays opposite Margaret Sullavan in the film, will attend the premiere at the State theatre. Governor J. B. C. Ehringhaus of North Carolina and United States Senator Josiah Bailey will attend together with Josephus Daniels, Jr., son of the former Secretary of the Navy and the present Ambassador to Mexico. The United Daughters of the Confederacy have appointed a committee for the opening.

Following the Southern premieres "So Red the Rose" will be presented at the New York Paramount theatre here on Thanksgiving Day.

Three State Units Of Exhibitors Meet; Others Preparing

Three state exhibitor organizations held meetings this week—Allied of New England, Allied of Michigan and Oklahoma's MPTO—and five others set convention dates: Texas Theatre Owners Protective Association, November 15th, at Dallas; MPTO of Arkansas, November 17th, Little Rock; Allied Theatre Owners of Iowa and Nebraska, November 18th, Des Moines; Independent Theatre Owners of Iowa, November 19th, Cleveland, and the Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina, December 9th.

In Boston, Allied of New England met and alleged extant and increasing product monopoly, plans to combat pari-mutuel betting, the Pettengill bill, demands for allegedly promised and now refused product from RKO and Columbia and local business matters headlined the gathering.

Allied of Michigan opened its sixteenth annual convention at the Hotel Statler in Detroit on Tuesday morning following the meeting of the board of directors the night before. More than 200 members attended the session, including national Allied figures as Sidney Samuelson, Abram F. Myers, general counsel; Fred Herrington of Pittsburgh; Aaron Saperstein of Chicago; Col. H. A. Cole of Texas and others.

Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina, Inc., will hold their annual convention at the Charlotte Hotel, Charlotte, N. C., December 9-10. Approximately 200 members are expected to attend and Martin Quigley, publisher of MOTION PICTURE HERALD and Motion Picture Daily will also be present.

Morris Lowenstein was reelected president and five new directors, Ralph Talbot, Homer Jones, Harry Lowenstein, Max Brox and L. C. Griffith were picked, and old age pension taxes were discussed by 250 theatre men in Oklahoma City Tuesday at the convention of the MPTO of Oklahoma. Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, was the principal speaker.

Eight topics are listed for discussion at the third annual convention of the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio to be held November 19-20 at the Deshler-Wallick hotel in Columbus. The issues include the preferred playing time law, music tax, bank nights, giveaways, distributor sales policies, restriction of feature pictures due to mergers, state tax on film rentals and a closeup of the legislative situation with respect to the present 3 per cent admission tax which reverts to 12 per cent on January 1st.

HIGHER GROSS TAX IN SPAIN FEARED IF IMPORT DUTY IS CUT UNDER TREATY

Better Ticket Sales Accounting Reported Needed; Eight First-Runs and Three Newsreel Theatres Among 84 in Barcelona

by HARRY CHAPIN PLUMMER

Barcelona Correspondent

Associated motion picture interests centered in Barcelona, both distributors and exhibitors, are currently concerned with two questions that directly affect the industry throughout Spain. One is the joint effort of the American and foreign producing houses, all actively represented by branch units in this city, to effect a reduction of the existing high impost of 7½ per cent upon gross receipts from all film sales, which, of course, has to be passed on to the buyer and so has its repercussion with the seller. Corollary is the movement to bring about the long contemplated commercial treaty between the United States and Spain, which automatically would reduce the customs duties levied against American films coming into the Spanish market. In this movement the picture interests have the benefit of the close cooperation of large automobile interests (General Motors and Ford maintain large branch assembling plants here) and the many radio, electrical, machinery and other corporate industrial entities represented in the American Chamber of Commerce in Spain.

The Chamber committee favoring a commercial treaty, headed by Jack Edelstein, general manager of MGM Barcelona, which is the general representation of that company for all of Spain, recently raised 15,500 pesetas for research work undertaken by the Chamber to obtain trade data of a character that might facilitate the labors of the American Embassy at Madrid in the treaty negotiations with the Spanish foreign office. President Roosevelt has just put forward to December 31 the date for the conclusion of the negotiations that originally had a time limit of the 31st of this month.

Fear has been expressed among the motion picture factors that if the treaty is consummated and lower duties go into effect on imported films, Spanish Ministerio de Hacienda may extend application of the gross tax to compensate for the loss occasioned by the lowering of the film import duty.

Ticket Accounting Need

The second matter, particularly affecting the exhibitors, is the growing need for better ticket-sales accounting methods. Indeed, except in the cines de categoría, or higher-priced first-run houses of the leading cities, such as Barcelona, Madrid and Bilbao, where the seating is numbered and reserved, "rule of thumb" principles may be said to apply. There is virtually no ticket sales accounting in the modern sense of the term and it is generally recognized that only the phenomenally high standard of honesty prevailing among the elements of the Spanish population from which the theatre box-office employees are recruited operates to prevent serious losses.

Even as it is there is the mounting conviction that due to lack of system, to confusion at periods of big attendance, such as Sundays and holidays, of which there are many in this country, and to the errors incident to medieval principles of bookkeeping, there are constant loss and waste, which, of course, would be corrected by introduction of the automatic ticket-registering devices common to American motion picture theatres.

Some Statistics

Of the 84 theatres and auditoriums in Barcelona devoted to pictures, eight are first-run and three newsreel theatres. Of the first-runs, two seat 2,200, one 1,500, three 1,000, two have 600 seats. Prices range from 3 pesetas to 2 pesetas nights, Sundays and holidays; 1.50 peseta to 1 peseta afternoons (double feature programs lasting a minimum of 2½ hours). The average seating capacity of newsreel houses is 450.

There are 34 subsequent-run houses, seating 2,000 to 1,700 and charging 1.25 peseta top. The remaining theatres seat from 2,500 to 600 and charge 80 to 25 centimes.

The average price per program for reels is as follows: 100 pesetas for a Spanish language picture; 75 pesetas for a "dubbed" picture; 25 to 50 pesetas for an American feature with superimposed screen titling, and 5 to 20 pesetas for shorts.

Booking combines are raising a serious problem of the industry in Spain. Different provinces, districts and cities are forming booking combines; especially is this true in the north of the republic, cities like Salamanca, for example. Two years ago as high as 4,000 to 5,000 pesetas was paid for a picture; now all the theatres of a given community are in the hands of a single exhibitor and 1,000 pesetas is his top price.

There are few large circuits in Spain. The most important is the Cinaes in Barcelona, which controls 26 houses; Sage, with headquarters in Madrid, with 18 theatres. There are two small units—Enesa and Traga.

Honor Fox General Manager

Three hundred or more notables of American film representation in Spain and heads and stars of Spanish producing organizations and representatives of the national provincial and municipal governments along with Claude I. Dawson, American Consul General, cheered Sydney S. Horen, general manager of Hispano Foxfilms, S.E.A., to the echo when he announced at a gala banquet, tendered in his honor here at the Hotel Rizt, that the year 1936 would see "the first production in Technicolor in Spain for the Spaniards" of Fox. The occasion marked the presentation to Mr. Horen of the decoration of "Oficial de la Orden de la Republica," the insignia being valued at 8,000 pesetas, or considerably more than $1,000. It was set in diamonds and rubies. (Picture of the gathering is in Pictorial section).

Federal Trade Body Curbs Film Schools

The misrepresentation of motion picture "training courses" has come under the ban of the Federal Trade Commission in Washington, it was revealed with the announcement that Harry L. Keepers, trading as the Hollywood Motion Picture Self Training Course at La Crescenta, Cal., has signed a stipulation agreeing to discontinue unfair advertising practices.

The school is said to have advertised in part as follows:

"Mr. Keepers, who is recognized as an authority on all matters pertaining to motion picture photography and projection, is the originator of self-training home study for the art and science of cinematography and sound projection. His experience in these lines of endeavor dates back to 1900, when he started with Thomas A. Edison at Orange, N. J., at the very birth of the motion picture in America."

The stipulation points out that in fact Mr. Keeper's experience does not point back to 1900 and that he did not start with Mr. Edison and that other representations made by Mr. Keepers were exaggerated and misleading.

CEILING ZERO

Warner

Subject matter of this story, box office worth of star and supporting cast names, value of spectacular production effects that are being incorporated, the drama, romance, comedy and thrill action through which it runs, all combine to inspire unusual showmanship effort. In essence, based upon a now current stage play by Frank Wead, who has written and contributed to many thrilling air stories, "Ceiling Zero" treats of a trio of war aces who turned to commercial aviation. Other than its romantic and comedy angles, it deals in dramatic incidents with which the public is vividly familiar. As it tells of two of the trio who sacrificed their lives that commercial transport aviation might be made safe, it blends thrill action with heart punch.

The topical worth of the story capable of standing on its own feet as an entertainment recipe, the quality of the cast playing it is something that should please showmen. It again teams the stars of "Here Comes the Navy," "Devil Dogs of the Air" and "The Irish in Us." Pat O'Brien and James Cagney will be seen in familiar characters, O'Brien the responsible manager, Cagney the dizzy firebrand of love and flying. To take care of romance the picture will present June Travis in her first feature part. Stuart Erwin is the third of the war ace trio. The supporting cast lists Edward Gargan, Barton MacLane, Isabel Jewell, Henry Wadsworth, Robert Light and Martha Tibbetts in important feature parts. Minor players include Carlyle Moore, Jr., Addison Richard, James Bush, Pat West and Richard Purcell.

The title definitely clewing the adventurous thrill action character of the production, the presence of O'Brien and Cagney in the cast should give the public a quick and complete picture of what they may expect to see on the screen. The familiarity which audiences have with the type of entertainment Frank Wead concocts has further significance in the choice of the director, Howard Hawks, who made "Hell's Angels," "Dawn Patrol," "Scarface" and the current "Barbary Coast."

MOTHER LODE

Radio

Based on a screen play by Dan Totheroh and George O'Neil, this is an action drama romance, and, as the title suggests, is being made in the California country where the first great gold strikes were uncovered. A yarn of man's ambitions for wealth, power and love, it plans to make use of all the old standby elements common to such entertainment and in addition to introduce much that is new in production settings and story twists. Particular attention will be given to the story in the substantiating romantic and comedy situations.

The production will feature Richard Dix, Leila Hyams, Andy Clyde, Moroni Olsen, Jessie Ralph and Onslow Stevens in the principal roles. Minor players include Ray Mayer, Art Mix, Ethan Laidlaw, Ted Oliver and George Lollier. Wallace Fox, who made the all western starred "Powder Smoke Range," is directing.

In the yarn. Dix and Clyde discover a bonanza claim. Rescuing Leila Hyams and Jessie Ralph from road agents holding up a stage coach, Dix falls in love and forgets to register the claim. Dix having trouble enough on his hands with badman Olsen, enters the real badman Stevens, intent not only on stealing the partner's mine, but also the girl. Dix and Olsen, becoming friends, combine to give Stevens a dose of his own medicine and in the meantime the girl registers the claim under her own name. The excitement packed finale has the villain rubbed out, the mine reverting to its real owners, as Dix and Miss Hyams and Clyde and Miss Ralph announce their bethrotals.

Being plotted for mass amusement, the production as previously indicated will make use of essentials in action and situations geared to appeal to mass minds. Story value, while novel in some ways, differs but little from standard formula, which necessarily puts the selling job up to the value of names and that certain audience interest that always accrues to outdoor, romance and comedy contrasted, action entertainment.

THE LITTLEST REBEL

20th Century-Fox

Considering previous pictures, this one's star, Shirley Temple, seems to be all that's necessary to arouse showmen to exploitation efforts which they can confidently expect to pay box office dividends. As all that was needed in past features and much that is new as it pertains to this is included here, there should be no fear that there will be any lack in essentials needed to stimplate maximum public attention.

In this, an adaptation of an old and popular legitimate stage attraction, there is a singing, dancing, acting Shirley snuggling her way into the hearts of foe and friend alike, in a dramatic role which mingles tears and heart throbs with smiles and laughs, as the story narrates one of the most pungent romantic dramas of the Civil War.

Adapted from the play of the same title by Edward Peple, the screen play is by Edwin Burke and Harry Tugend. David Butler, who directed Shirley Temple in several of her more popular features, is handling the picture, a B. G. DeSylva production.

John Boles, seen with Shirley in "Curly Top," again is her leading man and, of course, he will be heard singing. Bill Robinson, also another one of Shirley's old supports, will also be seen in a characteristic comedy role exhibiting his dancing abilities. Other players featured include Jack Holt, Guinn Williams, Karen Morley, Willie Best, Frank McGlynn, Sr., Bessie Lyle and Hannah Washington.

To be released during the holiday season, the character of the story lends itself readily to exploitation which should easily capitalize upon the popular mood of Christmas time.

LAST OF THE PAGANS

MGM

The stars of this picture are Mala and Lotus, the stars of "Eskimo." It is a story of the South Sea Islands. For the most part, its supporting cast is composed of Polynesian natives. In character it is a love story, the exotic, glamorous love of a raiding native warrior for a girl he has made captive. Its drama is that of a simple, honest, pagan people who lived in idyllic peace, menaced by native conflict until the white man came, bringing with him all the curses of white civilization to encompass the wrecking of an aboriginal people.

The potency of such a uniquely contrived entertainment idea being demonstrated as commercially valuable by the success of the "Eskimo" and in a different but at the same time relative degree by that of "Sequoia," "Last of the Pagans" is being produced with a direct idea of being a follow-up. Localed entirely in the South Sea Islands, unusual photography has captured the full charm of strange and beautiful backgrounds. Substantiating this feature as a patron interesting angle is the musical score, played by a large symphonic orchestra directed by Herbert Stothart, who scored the current "Anna Karenina" and the current "Mutiny on the Bounty."

To make the feature, a large company of actors, technicians and production crew spent months on the Islands, as a result of which all that will be seen on the screen is actual and authentic. As the backgrounds are real, so is the character of the story. With simple humans featured, it concentrates on humanness in its strange love interest and gripping drama. Not the kind of attraction that can be sold in orthodox ways, it is possible that, like "Eskimo" and "Sequoia," the public will grasp the significance of its sheer but beautiful simplicity in all phases if their memory is jogged and they are convinced by this means that this attraction is equally worthy of their support.

FRESHMAN LOVE

Warner

The title providing the descriptive key, this production is a unique action atmosphered comedy of college life and love, yet all that will be included in the picture is not included in title significance. Substantiating production values are novel. The theme idea, supporting straight comedy and romantic story content, has a timely but different topical appeal. It deals with the matter of collegiate athletic proselyting. Rather than concentrating on the now current subject of football, the subject treats of crew commercialism. In doing so it does not approach the matter from a satirical or condemning viewpoint, but makes this feature a part of its comedy and romantic, as well as commercially valuable, romantic comedy.

The original story is by George Ade, a fact that in itself is of showmanship exploitation value. The screen play is by George Bricker and Earl Felton. Direction is by William McGann, who has handled several recent Warner features. While, with the exception of Ade's prestige, these credits are not of much commercial value, showmanship consideration must be directed to the worth of cast names as well as that modern topical timely story interest. In addition to these features is the asset of new and different musical utilization.

In the story, a college crew sport has gone on the rocks. To rectify the condition, the coach embarks upon building school prestige in this form of sport by going out and getting the necessary men. Differing from established methods, he depends greatly upon the assistance of collegiate romance, the lure of campus sirens and the natural rivalry for a fair co-ed's affections to get a crew which, affected by romantic complications, looks like a dud, but under the inspiration of stirring collegiate music and patriotic anthems emerges as conquering champions.

The topical, familiar nature of the story, which is of unusual interest to adolescent and younger contingents of prospective audiences, is substantiated by cast selections. The cast is composed almost entirely of known screen names. It includes Patricia Ellis, Frank McHugh, Warren Hall, George E. Stone, Walter Johnson, Joseph Cawthorn, Joseph Sayer and Spec O'Donnell in the principal roles.

RIFFRAFF

MGM

Of primary showmanship importance, the fact that this is the girl of "Red Dust," of "Red Headed Woman," the China Doll of "China Seas," Jean Harlow, in exactly the kind of story and the kind of role where she has proved most valuable at the box office, keeps the entertainment character and showmanship worth of this production. That she also is a hard, brittle but loveable Min of "Min and Bill" fame further establishes the show's popular worth.

"Riffraff" is a story of the water front; a story of men who lived and loved lustily, but also and more important from the exhibitor point of view, it's the salty yarn of a woman who lived hard and loved hardly; a girl who dreamed grand dreams, hoping some day to leave the sordid surroundings of her girlhood behind her, but when the time came for her to realize her ambition, she couldn't be anything but the girl she always had been. As such it is a comedy drama in which the tensity of every dramatic situation is eased by a hearty laugh as it details the experiences of the girl, her boy friend, her menace and his rival. Always the story, in stars and support, concerns colorful, interesting characters. It is related against equally colorful and interesting settings.

The story is by Frances Marion, author of the screen plays for "Anna Christie," "Min and Bill" and many other successes, including "The Big House" and "The Champ." Direction is by J. Walter Ruben.

Spencer Tracy, last in "The Murder Man," with Joseph Calleia, remembered for "Public Hero No. 1," share the important roles with Miss Harlow. The name value represented by these personalities is furthered by the worth of the supporting cast, which lists, among many others, Una Merkel, Mickey Rooney, Baby Jane Quigley, Roger Imhoff, J. Farrell MacDonald, Vince Barnett, Dorothy Appleby and Judith Wood.

THE BRIDE COMES HOME

Paramount

Indications of what to expect in the line of potential showmanship availability and audience interest of this picture are noted in the unconcealed efforts of the producing company to have another "The Gilded Lily." It features that picture's two leading players, Claudette Colbert and Fred MacMuray, with the work of MacMurray in "Hands Across the Table" almost sure to win him many new friends and make his name more valuable. It is being directed by Wesley Ruggles, who made "The Gilded Lily." The screen play, from Elisabeth Sanxay's story, is by Claude Binyon, who functioned similarly in the previous picture.

In character, the story is an up-to-date and modern dramatic comedy romance. Taking full advantage of all the dramatic and romantic ingredients, it leans heavily on comedy contrast to put it in the same class as "The Gilded Lily." It deals with a spirited girl and a boy with a temper. Madly in love, they fight with each other, but both combine to fight against any and all comers who menace their romantic happiness. Battling all the way, in action and dialogue, they stake their biggest and most sensational brawl just prior to their wedding, when the girl threatens to wed another man and the boy has to battle harder than ever before to win his fighting sweetheart back. Yet even in the climactic, peaceful romantic scene there is a promise that their armistice may not be long enduring.

Claudette Colbert and MacMurray are in the leading roles with Robert Young the triangle menace. Supporting players include William Collier, Sr., Donald Meek, Richard Carle and Johnny Arthur, with Charles Sylber, Bob McKenzie, William Arnold, Eddy Dunn and Jerry Mandy in minor parts.

A TALE OF TWO CITIES

MGM

A Charles Dickens story, this in barest detail is that of a man who loved and lost—a man who willingly sacrificed his life that the happiness of the woman he loved would be secure. Potentially an important feature, it is being produced by David O. Selznick, who made "David Copperfield." The drama of its romance is played against the turmoil of the French Revolution. Its outstanding production feature will be the taking and destruction of the Bastile. This sequence, those leading up to it and those succeeding will present thousands of players on the screen.

Historical in atmosphere, the theme nevertheless is a love story. Its content made familiar through its inclusion in the courses of study in almost every high school and college, and public interest already reawakened in Dickens' works by means of "Copperfield," there is little necessity for a description of the story that moves to the tune of world shaking drama. It features Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allen, Donald Woods, Edna May Oliver, Reginald Owen, Basil Rathbone, Blanche Yurka of stage note, Henry B. Walthall, Walter Catlett and Fritz Leiber in the principal roles. The supporting cast provides a wealth of screen names, with such artists as H. B. Warner, Claude Gillingwater, Billy Bevan, Isabel Jewell, Lucille LaVerne, Tully Marshall, Ely Malyon, E. E. Clive, Lawrence Grant, John Davidson, Ralf Harolde, Tom Ricketts and scores of other featured players.

Evidence of the efforts that have been made to make sure that all the great values of the Dickens story are preserved is seen in the selection, as director, of Jack Conway, remembered for his "Viva Villa" particularly, and the employment of W. P. Lipscomb, who functioned on "Cardinal Richelieu," "Les Miserables" and "Clive of India," to adapt the screen play.

The entire production being on a lavish and authentic scale, showmanship that understands the value of an important picture in story, cast and production qualities must be applied in its marketing.

ANYTHING GOES

Paramount

A musical romantic comedy, showmanship that pays more than usual attention to production credits should key the type of publicity necessary to market this feature. It is adapted from one of the New York's recent and most successful stage plays. It was originally written by Guy Bolton, P. G. Woodhouse, whose screen contributions are familiar, Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse. The present screen play is by Benjamin Glazer and Morrie Ryskind. The music is by Cole Porter, Frederick Holander and Richard Whiting, with lyrics by Leo Robin. Among the many numbers, Porter's "You're the Top," "I Get A Kick Out of You" and the title theme song are featured. Direction is by Lewis Milestone.

Bing Crosby and Ethel Merman are featured, but the comedy character of the story is established by the presence of Charlie Ruggles and Arthur Treacher in the cast. The worth of their name values is supplemented by those of Ida Lupino, Grace Bradley, Robert McWade, Laura Treadwell, Margaret Dumont, Jerry Tucker and the specialty dancers Sanami and Michi.

Being elaborately staged in settings and costumes, practically all the action happens aboard ship. The gist of the story has Crosby madly in love with Ethel Merman, a young lady without tickets or passparts, all over the ship. Crosby, in turn, is being hectically pursued by Ida Lupino, blonde menace to his romantic ambitions with Miss Merman. In turn, accentuating the comedy motivation, Charlie Ruggles is being trailed by a bunch of cops and detectives. Naturally, the music, featuring Crosby and Miss Merman, interludes all the action in dialogue and situation.

Promising to be tuneful comedy entertainment, the picture should be sold on not only production credit values, but also with a campaign that definitely establishes its character.

HER MASTER'S VOICE

Paramount

A domestic comedy drama, this story spots Edward Everett Horton in the kind of part where he shows to best advantage. He's an in-law pestered husband of a young girl whose wealthy mother and aunt consider her marriage to Horton one of life's major tragedies. The wife, spirited away by her folks, Horton, his identity unknown, is hired as butler in the aunt's home where the girl is secreted. Endeavoring to get into his wife's room, he inadvertently lands in her aunt's, whereupon, his presence being discovered, he is accused of philandering, particularly by the aunt's middle aged suitor. But when the suitor, who is owner of a great radio chain, discovers that he and Horton are old pals, the stage is so set that, though it runs through many comedy complications, Horton emerges as a star of the air waves whom the in-laws are proud to honor as a member of the family.

The yarn is an original by Clare Kummer, with screen play by Dore Scharey and direction in the hands of Joseph Santley, who made the current "Harmony Lane."

Peggy Conklin, in "One Way Ticket," will be seen in the part of Horton's wife, with Elizabeth Patterson as her mother and Laura Hope Crews as the aunt. Grant Mitchell is the other member of the cast. As with the exception of Miss Conklin the cast is composed of older artists, it might appear that the appeal of the picture would be directed mainly at more mature audience contigents. Such is not the case, however, inasmuch as comedy is the principal motivation and Horton's popularity with all ages and classes should be enough to convince general audiences of the picture's entertainment worth to them.

Bluebook School Question No. 285 was: (A) I have a small sound a.c., 46-B, using No. 264 tubes in a modified amplifier, Western Electric. One day recently I found that in order to get my filament reading up to 300 milliamperes it was only necessary to turn the filament control rheostat knob half as much as was formerly necessary. Before this I was obliged to turn it all the way when the batteries were low. Now when the batteries are low enough to require charge, the control knob is only in mid-position when the reading is right. I questioned the engineer, who told me he had found a fuse that was offering abnormal resistance and had replaced it with a new one. I have my doubts about this and would like to have it verified by the engineers. (B) In a certain type of equipment there is what is called a "mechanical damper." As I understand it, such devices are merely to smooth out small, sudden changes in speed as the film passes through the sound head, but that they have no effect whatever on the speed of the film as a whole. Will the engineers explain, in not too complicated form, just in what way and by what means this is done?

As to section A, all the engineers reply substantially as follows: "It is quite possible that the difference described arose from a defective fuse, or a fuse making poor contact, as the service engineer stated. Several cases have been reported where fuses have developed resistance sufficient to materially affect the current in that particular circuit."

(B) This has to do with a certain kind of equipment, the engineers of that company replying as follows: "We are all more or less familiar with flywheels as applied to rotating machinery, such as automobiles, gas engines, reciprocating steam engines, and so on. The purpose of such wheels is to smooth out the motion of the engines, the power of which is not evenly applied throughout the stroke of the piston. This they accomplish by reason of the fact that in the rim of such wheels is relatively great weight running at high, steady speed. Naturally great weight running at high speed, therefore, having great momentum, is not subject to sudden changes. It therefore compels approximate steadiness in speed of what it is attached to, regardless of forces tending to cause small fluctuations therein. However, be it noted that the flywheel does not alter the running speed of the device to which it is attached, once that speed has been attained. It merely prevents sudden small changes in speed. However, the addition of a flywheel will increase the time required to reach running speed, as well as the time required to come to rest when power is shut off."

And this is the office of the "mechanical damper" referred to. It is a flywheel with certain modifications. As such it has the effect of ironing out possible small inequalities or changes in speed of the film as it passes through the sound head.

The list of correct replies to these questions is very small. Messrs. C. Rau and S. Evans answer section A thus: "There is small reason to doubt the engineer's explanation when it is remembered that the current in question is very small, the 300 milliamperes being only three-tenths of an ampere. It then is evident that any extra resistance offered, no matter how small, will have a comparatively large effect in proportion to the total current.

"True, the added resistance might be in some other part of the circuit. The rheostat, for example, might have dirty or corroded contacts, but if the engineer found that a new fuse cleared up the trouble—well, that was that, or so it seems to us."

In the foregoing B. N. Alsbrook, G. E. Doe, H. Edwards, J. Wentworth, P. and L. Felt, N. L. Simms, C. Mellinger and H. Pitchkey; T. Turk, T. L. Evans and L. M. and C. B. Traxler agree.

N. L. Daniels replies to section B thus: "The mechanical damper has no effect upon film speed as a whole, either through the sound head or elsewhere. That speed is 90 feet per minute. But some little lost motion in mechanical parts may cause slight differences in speed of the film as it passes through the sound gate, when small differences may become big wows, which audiences do not in the least admire.

"The 'mechanical damper' referred to is in effect a flywheel with some modifications. As such it acts as any flywheel does and prevents any sudden small change in film speed due to whatever cause. It irons them out as the laundry iron wrinkles out of clothes."

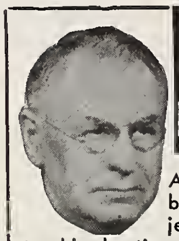
I note that Brother Dale Danielson adds a postscript of inquiry regarding the sixth edition of The Blue Book of Projection. I have just been advised that the first books will be in the office either Wednesday or Thursday of this week. They will be in the mail just as fast as I can autograph them, but that will be no small job itself, because I intend, as at least some repayment for the delay, to autograph every book ordered up to the time the books actually arrive at the office.

And now, men, this book is going to surprise you. It is something wholly new. Nothing like it was ever done, so far as I know. I want you to get used to working with that new subject index. Then, as a personal favor, write, telling me just what you think of it.

I am not asking for "bouquets." I want your honest opinion, and that only after you have tried it out thoroughly. Some to whom the plan has been shown have pronounced it the only real handbook of projection ever written, for the reason that as soon as he becomes acquainted with that subject index the owner can find anything he wants almost instantly. No hunting for it. Just turn to it and that's that. And you know how that counts when trouble comes and one is in a hurry.

You will find the new book to be "solid." It does not contain a lot of stuff that is all haywire after a few weeks because equipments have had small changes made in them.



F. H. RICHARDSON'S NEW BLUE BOOK OF PROJECTION

A new edition of this famous book is now on the press. Projection sound reproduction and trouble-shooting all in one compact, handy volume of 700 pages, including 153 illustrations of hook-ups, wiring diagrams and schematics.

Experts consider it the most up-to-date and practical projection manual on the market. Contains an extremely simple index system for instant use in emergency breakdowns. A book that should be part of every projection room in the country. OUT NEXT WEEK.

Sentenced To See Film

Thomas Wright, 18, of 105 S. Kentucky-av, was "sentenced" in City Court Saturday to see the movie, "The March of Time," depicting deaths in auto accidents.

The film is based on the article "And Suden Death," which was reprinted in The Evansville Press after appearing in The Readers' Digest.

Judge Rice ordered Wright to report back to court next Monday and relate what he saw in the movie and receive an additional sentence.

Wright was arraigned on a speeding charge. He admitted "driving to fast on Main Street while racing with a taxi driver."

QUALITY PLUS

OF ALL the reasons for adopting a new raw film, photographic quality... what the audience sees on the screen... ultimately stands supreme. That explains why the great majority of today's motion pictures are being made on Eastman Super X Panchromatic Negative. Speed, fine grain, versatility... all of these are overshadowed by the fact that Super X gives to the world's screens quality plus. Eastman Kodak Co., Rochester, N. Y. (J. E. NEWS NOTES FROM CHICAGO SECTOR

LOCAL theatre men and motion picture executives are enthusiastic over the selection of Attorney Leo Spitz as president of Radio-Keith-Orpheum.

Mr. Spitz has been legal counsel for Balaban & Katz, Essaness Theatres and other amusement concerns here and his knowledge of the motion picture business is most comprehensive.

The attorney, who plans to establish his residence in New York soon, is expected to leave for the Coast next week to give the studio the once over. Accompanying him will be Ned E. Depinet, president of RKO Distributing Corporation.

Charles A. Lindberg, one of Roy Bruder's ushers at the Chicago, has received an appointment to West Point and will leave shortly. Lindberg incidentally is interested in flying, his father having been an officer in the U. S. Army Air Force.

Jules Rubens, Great States theatre executive, is one of those most interested in the production of the WLS Barn Dance feature picture which is slated to start shooting soon, we are told.

Rubens, we understand, will finance the film, which will be produced here, and WLS will supply the cast, which will be selected from among the 80 Barn Dance performers.

The Catham theatre, a Warner house which has been dark for some time, will be opened about January 1. The house will be thoroughly remodeled in the most modern style and will open under a new name. More than $75,000 has been appropriated for the modernization of this theatre, which is located on the south side at 76th St. and Cottage Grove. Work on the theatre will start at once.

Mort Singer, local theatre executive, is visiting with his family in Hollywood. He left just in time to escape the bad weather.

Gene Markey and the Missus, better known as Joan Bennett, went through town Armistice Day en route to Hollywood. They stopped off long enough for a short visit with Markey's parents at Evanston.

John Balaban, Jack Miller, Aaron Saperstein and their cohorts are to be congratulated for their efforts in handling their portion of the work in the Community Chest drive. A quota of $20,000, a new high, was reached, but only after a tough struggle.

Last week the Palace here, advertised as follows: See the Folies Bergere Revue; LAST WEEK IN AMERICA! Three days later the show reopened in Davenport. The Iowa citizens, who broke attendance records at the Orpheum theatre, where the show is playing, haven't decided whether to be insulted or not.

George Stevens, Hollywood director, has been in town visiting his uncle, Ashton Stevens, veteran critic on the Chicago American. George was en route to New York.

The Jack Hylton one-reel picture made by Wilding Pictures, Inc., for the Standard Oil Co., of Indiana, will be released as an entertainment short by Paramount. The advertising part was made at the end of the film and it will be deleted. Wilding pictures also announce that six one-reelers and one six-reeler are in production for the Norge refrigerator company.

Two Essaness houses have upped their admission prices and as a result get new classifications under the release system. The Sheridan, starting Friday, becomes a class "B" house while the Devon goes from first-week-of-release to "C" week. "Dark Angel" goes into the Sheridan for a week's showing as the first picture played on this plan under the new deal the circuit has with United Artists.

Paramount's muchly praised "Peter Ibbetson" goes into the Chicago theatre with a special advertising campaign to start it off. B. & K. officials after seeing the production felt it most worthy of the special campaign and a picture that would add much prestige to the theatre.

Armistice Day was celebrated along Film Row with the closing of all exchanges at noon, Monday, November 11. Theatre business, which usually is very heavy on this holiday, was away off, as rain and wind kept patrons at home.

Clyde Elliott, who distributes Screeno in Texas, reports that the colored folk who attend the Harlem theatre in Dallas are so interested in the game that the manager had to open his other house, the Circle, which has been dark for five years, in order to handle the crowd. Only Screeno is shown in the reopened house. They have to come back to the Harlem to see the pictures—at the next show.

"Life Begins at Minsky's," the stage attraction at the Oriental this week, is being advertised through the use of many Hollywood film names. In the advance trailer the pictures of Hollywood stars who saw and commended the show were prominently presented. In the lobby this week practically all the space is given to Hollywood film faces. The shapely chorines are crowded off the boards in the attempt to show that this show was one that dazzled blasé filmland. Names and photos used in the advertising included: Clark Gable, Fredric March, Ruby Keeler, Al Jolson, Jack Oakie, Cary Grant, Glenda Farrell, Alice Faye and Pat O'Brien. Burlesque apparently went Hollywood in a big way. Or was it vice-versa?

With messages coming from various pulpits to the effect that "Barbary Coast" is on the banned list, local publicity men are active in pointing out that the name, and not the story, is all that was used by Sam Goldwyn in making this picture after the film cleanup campaign took place.

Members of the Chicago Amusement Publicists Association are planning a special activity which will be announced publicly next week. At the meeting, held with Jack Miller as guest of honor, a new idea was created and the result will be forthcoming soon.

Warner Club members, only, will be allowed to attend the monthly previews to be held at Warner theatres starting at the Beverly November 26.

C. E. Levine has been chosen as manager of the Essaness Town theatre, which opened this week. Levine was formerly assistant manager at the Byrd theatre.

LaVera Fritz, cashier at Warners DeLuxe theatre and Paul Van Alven, of the B&K Crystol, were married at St. Lukes Church November 7. Congratulations!

The B & K basketball season will be launched this month. Fifteen teams will be picked from staffs of the 35 B & K houses. This is an annual procedure with this circuit, and is one of the reasons for the fine spirit of friendship and loyalty which marks this organization.

Last Armistice Day he went wading at Waikiki. This year he strolled shiveringly down Michigan Ave., and as the icy blasts (icy to him) tore through his topcoat . . . just why—was all a mystery to

CROUCH

Court Upholds Ban On Empire Pickets

Justice Samuel I. Rosenman in the New York supreme court has signed an order granting a permanent injunction to Edjomac Amusement Corporation against the Empire State Motion Picture Operators' Union to end picketing in front of the plaintiff's theatres.

Hoblitzelle Deal Discussed

A one-year extension of Karl Hoblitzelle's Interstate Circuit operating agreement with Paramount is under discussion and may be decided within the next few days, it is understood.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE BOYS

Dear Boys:

We wish to thank you, each and every one, for the hundreds of sympathetic letters we have received from you, and we wish to assure you of our gratitude and our thankfulness that we have so many sympathetic friends, and to assure you also of our wish that we could write each and every one of you directly. But that being out of the question, we are taking this means of replying, in the hope that each of you will accept this as a personal acknowledgment of your very kind letters. We are trying to follow the instructions of an eminent writer who once said, "Do not permit your sorrow to shadow the lives of others." Those of you who have gone through the same experience will excuse us from writing a lengthy letter, we feel sure.

Showmen Who Know

Some little time ago we went up to Rapid City, South Dakota, with Sherm Fitch of Sioux Falls. We went up there on purpose of meeting Leo Peterson, who operates the Elks theatre, and while there we met several of the boys, Charlie Klein of the Deadwood theatre, at Deadwood; A. J. Johnson of the State theatre, at Rapid City, and the manager of the Rex theatre, at Rapid City.

We have just forgotten this manager's name, but we remember calling on him once when he was managing a theatre in North Platte, Nebraska, for the Fox organization, and if we could see "Little Bobbie," his cashier at that time, she could tell us his name. Anyhow we had a nice visit with him, as well as all the other members of the Black Hills Amusement Company. We wanted to get up to Lead to call on our old friend M. C. Kellogg, who manages the Homestake theatre, and to get down to Hot Springs to call on the theatre operator down there, but we were called home on account of the sickness of our wife and had to cut our visit short. Some day we hope to go back when we can have more time.

General Store and Manager

On our way to the Hills we stopped at Bonesteel and called on R. E. Blakkolb, who manages the Bonesteel theatre. R. E. and his father operate the largest general store there is in the Bonesteel country, in addition to managing a theatre.

Bonesteel is located about in the heart of the Bonesteel country and this is the country that has been hit so hard the past year with drouth and for several years with a scourge of grasshoppers, and how this country can continue to look the depression in the face and smile is something that can't be accounted for, and only the Bonesteel folks can offer any kind of a solution. Our guess is that the folks up there all came from pioneer stock, and it was the pioneer stock that discovered these United States of America and have made it what it is today, the best United States on earth.

Charles Allen operates the Allen theatre at Martin. Martin is located in the section that has been experiencing a period of drouth for several years besides a scourge of grasshoppers that ate up about everything except the stove pokers and the door hinges. Martin is a little more fortunate than most towns in the Bonesteel country, for the folks up there can run down to the Hay Creek marsh and shoot what ducks they want, and this makes Martin the envy of all the balance of the country.

No "Calamity Howlers"

B. F. Shimki has been operating the Gem theatre in Philip for eleven years and he has gone through so many dry years and grasshopper years that he has become so hardened to it that he can smile and look this depression right square in both eyes and kickell out of it; that's the kind of a guy B. F. is. Say, Ezra, if you are looking for "Calamity Howlers" don't go up in the Bonesteel country, they shoot 'em up there.

Grasshoppers Leave River

Then we stopped at Burke to call on Mr. and Mrs. C. Gehlsen, who operate the Burke theatre, and doggone our hide but there's a swell couple. We wish everybody in the business were as nice as these two are, but then maybe that would be asking a little too much of the human family.

Burke is just about where the grasshoppers commenced and where they left, but they didn't leave a darn thing except the White river and the state line, but in spite of all this, this most excellent couple wear a smile that won't come off, and they will divide the last piece of huckleberry pie with you. All of those Bonesteel folks are just like that.

FILMS ADVOCATED TO IDENTIFY CRIMINALS

At the recent Interstate Crime Conference held in Trenton, N. J., several resolutions were adopted endorsing various methods of identifying criminals and among these was the motion that sound motion pictures be more extensively employed toward this end. It was only a short while ago that several young boys, accused of the murder of a subway guard in Brooklyn, N. Y., repeatedly professed their innocence until placed before a newsreel camera, where their vanity got the better of them, and they fought to tell their stories for the screen.

We have known some countries (but we wouldn't want to mention their names for fear the boys might get sore about it) that, if they should experience one dry year, like South Dakota has experienced for four or five, they would yell so loud that they could be heard clear across Chesapeake bay and they would try to double the price on Michigan Northern Spies and Lawton grapes. In fact, we pay $2.25 a crate for Michigan peaches right now.

You talk about hard times, but listen here, Gertie, when it has been so dry for several years that you couldn't raise potatoes and you have to pay 45 cents a bushel tax on what potatoes you buy for the kids to eat, and they kill off your sows and little pigs to make the price of your meat higher, it is apt to cause you to wonder whyinhel Columbus went to the trouble of discovering this country. But then, when they get that "Shelterbelt" built out there so the Blue Pelicans can have a place to roost, everything will come out all right.

But speaking of Rapid City, South Dakota. Out there is where they are going to try and get that "stratosphere balloon" to go up. They have been working on it for over a year now and it hadn't gone up when we were there a few weeks ago, but it doesn't matter much to humanity if it never goes up, for who wants to go up in that stratosphere anyhow? And who wants to go and live down at the South Pole with the penguins and icebergs? This stratosphere and Pole stuff never made much of a hit with us nohow, for this ice that is covering the trees, walks and streets out here, inclines us to the belief that we are near enough to a pole right now.

Some people like front page space, they like to be acclaimed the greatest this, that and the other thing. We knew a star once who got mad and threw a fit because another girl's name was put in electric lights, while both of their mothers were home mopping the kitchen floors and baking biscuits for dinner. But then, none of this has anything to do with either Pole or the stratosphere.

Just a word to the Nebraska boys. We are going to come and see you just as soon as this ice is gone and the weather will permit. Get a good hold and hang on.

Dramatic Romance

This adaptation of a widely read novel is serious in its entertainment conception, manner of narration and audience appeal. Essentially it is a dramatic romance, the background for which is the tragic turmoil of the Civil War and the way in which that strife wrecked the lives and fortunes of a proud old Southern family. Practically, it is three stories in one. One chapter deals with the romance between the hero and heroine, the second with the family head as its symbol details the reaction of the South to the war, and the third is a heart touching portrayal of the courage, fortitude, faith and sacrifice with which the women of the South met and combated the challenge of war. While the menace of war atmospheres all action, it is not actually a war picture inasmuch as the scenes of combat are but few yet their potent menace always makes for complete and understandable illusion.

Opening in a manner graphically reflecting the traditional happy family life and hospitality of the South with Vallette Bedford, madly in love with Duncan, teasing him with a flirtation with visiting Pendleton to make acknowledgment of his affection. War breaks out. The idealist Duncan prefers to remain at home and the elder members of the family, Malcolm, Sally and Mary Cherry, maintain that it cannot last long. Pendleton, who has volunteered immediately, is killed. His friend, Edward Bennett, bent on hot-blooded vengeance, is also soon a victim. These horrors having their effect on the women folk, and Malcolm, the father joins his friends in arms. Meanwhile, Vallette is pleading with Duncan to take his place in the ranks.

The storm of war rages about the plantation. Led by Cato, the slaves rise in rebellion, cruelly maltreat faithful William, only to be placated by Vallette. Then Northern troops invade the plantation. Duncan enlists. A Yankee boy is wounded. Shielding him, Vallette clothes him in a Confederate uniform to save him from the vengeance of counter charging Southerners. Again comes the Yankee host, after Vallette has convinced Duncan that the boy is one of their own, to find the boy in enemy uniform and kill him. For sheltering a supposed enemy the mansion is burned, the slaves are driven off and the women folk, deprived of the counsel of Malcolm, who has come home to die, are left to work out their own existence.

With peace, Vallette, Sally and Mary, with little Middleton, are working the soil when Duncan comes home to have Vallette rush into his arms, with their marriage to be the first stepping stone in the effort to recreate the proud old Bedford heritage.

At first glance, as the production concentrates so heavily in detailing the suffering and sacrifices endured by the women folk, it might appear that the picture was exclusively a woman's attraction of the character in which tear drops are mingled with smiles. While that is true, there is also much in the way of commercial and entertainment worth to interest general audiences. Without being historical, the picture nevertheless is historical inasmuch as it details actions and events that more often than not are ignored in telling a semi-historical story. Production effects taking ample care of the martial background, accomplished acting performances on the part of the principal players, mainly Margaret Sullavan, Walter Connolly, Randolph Scott, Janet Beecher and Dickie Moore, together with those of Daniel Haynes and Clarence Muse, give the picture an atmosphere of human heart interest.

Sold as a moving love story that carries through a welter of heartbreak and tragedy, but so wording copy that it does not create a depressing reaction, the picture has the entertainment values for appeal to any type of audience.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Mary Burns, Fugitive

(Paramount)

Love Drama

Gangster backgrounded as it is and almost certain to be received by the public as a picture of that classification, "Mary Burns, Fugitive," is, in a stricter sense, a love drama of the kind seldom seen on the screen. Also it is an action drama which, not ignoring the worth of poignant dialogue, brings a coherent series of pounding, gripping dramatic sequences, the powerful suspense of which perched the preview audience on seat edges until the excitement packed climax, in which there are thrills enough to sate the most avid appetite. It concentrates on melodramatic drama, but it's not always melodramatic. It has a warmly human love interest contrast, one that plays upon the most tender human emotions as it rivets attention on its heroine, hero and menace.

Featuring Sylvia Sidney, in a role which regardless of past appearance is sure to restore her old prestige and make many new friends, the picture also presents a promising newcomer in Alan Baxter, whom audiences will be talking about after they have seen the show. They with Melvyn Douglas carry the story load.

The picture opens in a manner that gives no clue as to what is to follow. Mary Burns happily awaits the coming of her sweetheart. The story turning quickly dramatic to the tune of bursts of gunfire, audiences at once realize that Babe Nelson is a wanted public enemy. Nelson, escaping the Harper-led G-men, Mary is captured. There is tense drama to the court scenes, where Mary in her great love for the man whose identity she did not know permits circumstantial evidence to convict and sentence her to jail. There's heart-break drama to her prison life, drama that becomes tense as Goldie and Mary escape. More drama ensues in their hideout. Babe's henchman, Spike, arrives and is killed. Now the audience becomes aware that her escape was a police frameup, staged purposely so that she would lead the G-men to Nelson.

Trailed continually, Mary gets a job in a hospital, where the snow-blinded Powell finds her soft voice the only pleasant thing he has experienced during his long stay there. Hounded by him, by the officers, and menaced by the fear that Nelson, whom she now hates, will show up. Mary's life is a stark thing. In the quiet of a church service, Babe finds her. Trapped by the G-men, he holds them at bay and again makes his escape by threatening to explode a hand grenade among the congregation. Thrill action marks the ensuing chase, wherein Nelson again evades the officers by dynamiting a bridge, after which the fleeing pair separate. Mary, a fear-stricken, hunted girl, makes her way across the country to Powell's mountain lodge. Finding a semblance of peace and happiness there with him in delightful romance, the picture turns again to suspense packed drama. Nelson, slipping by the G-man trap, confronts the lovers. He announces his plan to kill Powell, then forces Mary to give evidence of her affection to him. Powell, intervening, is shot. But Mary has her own revenge, killing Nelson with his own gun. Powell's political influence gets her a pardon, assuring a happy romantic future for both.

As a gangster production the picture naturally is sensational. That kind of picture has usually been popular and profitable, and it is not to be expected that showmen will not avail themselves of the lure of all the entertainment and commercial values which that kind of picture affords. But to achieve the best results possible from this picture, it should be sold for exactly what it is, an action love drama. In publicity copy and exploitation, for which there are many suggestions, straight from the shoulder lines that establish the picture's character convincingly should be used. It presents a better than average combination of stars, supporting cast and story values, and offers a real drive to stimulate feminine interest.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Nevada

(Paramount)

Western

Entirely a western, this picture deals solely in those essentials that have made this form of screen entertainment so popular with the masses and younger audience contingents. While introducing little that is new, although the motivating story has a unique twist, it makes its drama dramatic, the comedy funny, and its romantic angle provides just enough love interest to counterbalance the other ingredients. The action moves with speed through a series of personal combats to a spectacular cattle stampede in which the hero proves he is the right kind of a man to win the girl and the badmen rustlers get their just desserts.

In the yarn, Nevada and Cash Burridge, a couple of jailbreaking outlaws, thankful over eluding a posse, decide to go straight. Preventing a crooked gambler from swindling an old cowman out of his ranch, the pair decide to take it over when Ben Ide takes his own life. With Cash providing much unexpected comedy, romance enters, involving Nevada and Hettie. Joining a cattlemen's marketing association, the pair find themselves in a spot when the Clem Dillon rustlers contrive to make their previous criminal records known and make it appear that their intentions are anything but honest. The association, souring on Nevada and Cash, start driving the cattle to market. Then the rustlers get in their dirty work. Building to a running fight, Nevada gets the real information as to who Dillon is and what his plans are, and reestablishes himself to lead the ranchers in a stampede gun fight that wipes out the badmen and paves the way for the pair to prove themselves and for Nevada to win Hettie.

Not a pretentious attraction, but withal one that is intelligently produced, acted and directed, the show has all the showmanship elements necessary to stir the enthusiasm of outdoor action fans and be something in which the youngsters will find much enjoyment.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Man of Iron

(Warner)

Drama

A character drama, narrated against a steel mill background, this feature bases its entertainment appeal on a potent kind of human conflict. He-man in atmosphere, it presents Barton MacLane, featured in "Black Fury," in the principal role. It's the story of a man's ambition; the jealous schemings of a disappointed rival; the loyalty of two old co-workers of the hard labor days and of social and business success, the sham of which leads to debacle through which the hero, as a real hero should, sees the error of his grand ambitions and returns to the character that made him the most beloved man in the plant.

Concentrating on drama, there is comparatively little romantic love interest. There is quite a bit of comedy, however, and it is of the type usually most appreciated by the common herd, as it deals with the funny things that happen to one of its own kind when he assumes to be the kind of man he never was intended to be.

In the yarn Chris Bennett, a steel mill worker, who always looks at every question from the workman's viewpoint is made manager of the Balding plant. His promotion is a bitter pill to Tanahill, who thinks he should have had the job. Together with secretary Vida, he conspires to make Bennett's path anything but one strewn with roses. Secretly conspiring with disgruntled workmen, he makes them believe that their old pal has gone high hat, and Bennett has only two loyal friends, Martin and Collins, to come to his defense.

Climbing the social ladder, Bennett encounters all the obstacles usual to those befalling the wrong people in the wrong spot. Unwilling to believe that he is any different than he was in the old days, his activities in business and society eventually stir the workers to frenzy. A riot breaking out, the falsity of his position becomes apparent to Bennett, and realization of what Tanahill has done to him and the men leads him to desert his swank social friends and brings him back to reason with the men before they can wreck the plant. Fearfully beaten, Bennett returns to his true character of friend of all as Martin and Collins finally convince the workers that Bennett always had their best interests at heart.

A man's story, the picture nevertheless is hardly of the caliber to serve as anything but an average attraction. With Barton MacLane's prestige as a man's man to keynote the publicity campaign, there is ample opportunity for cleverly concocted catch lines to establish the story's atmosphere and with its steel mill setting and swank social contrast plenty of suggestions for unusual exploitation stunts.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner-First National. Directed by Wm. McGann. Assistant director, Carroll Sax. Screen play by William Wister Haines. Based on story by Dawn Powell. Photographed by L. W. O'Connell. Film editor, Terry Morse. Art director, Edward Smith. Musical director, Leo F. Forbstein. P.C.A. Certificate No. 1556. Running time, when seen in Hollywood, 63 minutes. Release date, December 21, 1935. General audience classification.

La Maternelle

(John S. Tapernoux-Metropolis)

Drama

A drama of the poor children of the slums of Paris, this picture, in French but with adequate English titles, is one of the better importations to come from France in the past year or two. The picture is based on the Prix Goncourt novel of the same name by Leon Frapie; translated it means, Children of Montmartre, and was directed with intelligence and care by Jean Benoit-Levy and co-director Marie Epstein. The picture was made two years ago and is only now arrived in America. Consequently the photography suffers in comparison with the standard of today. The picture's chief distinction is its artistic simplicity.

It is a picture for a discriminating audience and is adult fare. Noteworthy performances are turned in by Madeleine Renaud and by the child actress, Paulette Elambert. A very human story its appeal to audiences lies in its sincerity of purpose and its simplicity. There are no well known names in the cast and the story by Mr. Frapie is little known in this country, but the story as it unfolds on the screen is easily understandable and in addition there are sufficient English titles superimposed for those who do not understand the French dialogue.

In the story, Rose (Madeleine Renaud) a young girl and daughter of rich parents, becomes destitute after her father goes into bankruptcy and is forced to work to support herself. She succeeds in getting a job as a children's maid in a day nursery, in the slum section of Paris. She is fascinated and happy in her work among the poor children and is a great favorite with them, and especially with Marie (Paulette Elambert), a child who has been deserted by her mother. The child becomes deeply attached to Rose and is jealous of any affection Rose shows to the other children. Rose brings Marie home to live with her when the child's mother runs off with her lover.

Rose is almost dismissed from her employment when she is discovered in the classroom teaching the children, it being contrary to the regulations for a maid to assume a teacher's role, but the intervention of the nursery's doctor prevents Rose from being dismissed. The doctor falls in love with her and proposes marriage. Marie witnessing the scene is heartbroken and flees the nursery. She attempts to commit suicide by jumping into the Seine but is saved by onlookers. The doctor realizing the deep attachment of Marie for Rose brings the child home to live with him and Rose.—Mooney, New York.

Distributed by John S. Tapernoux in association with Metropolis Pictures Corporation. Produced by Studios Photosonor, Paris-Courbevoie. Directed by Jean Benoit-Levy and Marie Epstein. Based on the novel by Leon Frapie. Music by Edouard Flambert. Songs by Alice Verlay. Edited and titled by Martin J. Lewis. Running time, 80 minutes. Release date, October 14, 1935. Adult audience classification.

She Couldn't Take It

(Columbia)

Comedy

But for the names of George Raft and Joan Bennett, this picture would leave exhibitors and showmen in somewhat of a predicament. It is timeworn material that has been presented on the screen again and again, though there are a few novel twists.

Walter Connolly and Billie Burke have the other two important roles in the film and it is unfortunate that one with the proved histrionic ability of Connolly should have it wasted in such a role as he has here. His name in itself of course means something to audiences.

The story places Raft in the type role he does best, and his performance is reminiscent of his work in "Scarface." Miss Bennett, likewise, is her capable self, but the combined and sincere efforts of these two fail to lift the film out of mediocrity.

The action is slow in getting started and doesn't really begin to move until it is almost too late. The last third of the picture is good entertainment, concerning itself with the efforts of Raft to rescue Miss Bennett from kidnappers.

Exhibitors will have to concentrate on those elements of the picture that are suitable for their situations, combining these with the values of Raft and Miss Bennett.

The story places gangster and former bootlegger Raft in full charge of the socially prominent and wealthy Van Dyke family upon the death of old man Van Dyke. He is to curb their extravagances and subdue them, if he can, according to the terms of the old man's will. Naturally, he meets with resistance, and is out of his element, but all works out well in the end.

Walter Connolly, unable to stand the escapades of his wife, Billie Burke, of daughter Joan Bennett and of son James Blakely, refuses to fight an income tax evasion charge filed by the government and goes to prison for a rest. There he becomes the cell-mate of Raft, who is serving time for the same offense, but who had been a mobster instead of a banker.

Raft offers counsel to his cell-mate, and when the latter dies finds himself executor of the deceased's estate with full power over the remaining members of the family. Upon being released from prison Raft goes up to New York to look over his new charges and meets with all kinds of obstacles, the chief one being his falling in love with Miss Bennett, and vice-versa.

After several brushes with the various members of the family, Raft appears to have won his fight when Miss Bennett arranges with his old gang to kidnap her for ransom, which is to be equally divided. The mobsters, however, turn the trick but intend to keep the money and kill the girl instead. Raft, to thé rescue, ignores all warnings and caution, and nearly succeeds. Miss Burke, in another of her scatter-brained moments, notifies the police and things really do look bad when the gangsters find out the police are also on their trail.

In an amusing, and no less dramatic climax, Raft effects Miss Bennett's rescue and is the means of capturing the kidnappers. Safe in her guardian's arms, the heroine gives up the fight.—Baehler, New York.

The Man Who Broke The Bank at Monte Carlo

(20th Century-Fox)

Comedy

With gayety that sparkles and bubbles as its outstanding trait, this comedy of adventuring in gambling, romance and intrigue is a feature that should prove as popularly alluring as is the significance of its title in sense and locale. Novel and fresh in its principal quality, it also embraces a broad scope of additional substantiating entertainment quantities equally valuable from a showmanship viewpoint.

Soundly produced, a condition reflected by the smoothness with which the story flows in dialogue and action, the value of backgrounds, inclusion of one or two specialty musical numbers, selection of cast and quality of direction, the show possesses a continuously light and airy atmosphere. None the less, there is a running thread of suspense which, in the manner in which it leads to unanticipated developments, endows the feature with a unique punch and color.

In context it's a yarn of a daring conspiracy that worked, and its flareback. A group of expatriated Russians pool their meager resources that their most adventurous member, Gallard, may take a crack at Monte Carlo's famous bank. He does and then, defying all laws of gambling, walks out with a fortune. But the bank does not intend to let him get away with it. He meets a girl. He falls in love with the charming Helen and thinks that she does with him. But Helen is only a tool in the hands of the gamblers. Rather infatuated with the debonair Gallard, but really spurred on by Bertrand Berkeley, she lures Gallard, who has divided his winnings not only with her, but also his fellow countrymen, back to Monte Carlo. This time the situation is reversed. Gallard who cleaned up is cleaned out. Reduced to the status of taxidriver, he again encounters Helen. Togging himself up in his best regalia, he goes to the place intending to and actually revenging himself on the girl who had duped him. But in the end there is a general understanding that reunites the odd couple, and financed by the contributions of the winning Russians their future will be rosy.

Spun of marketable material, a campaign that capitalizes on what is provided in the picture in value of story content and worth of the principal and supporting screen names should bring results. Unusual for most pictures that have a class basis, there is wide opportunity for attention creating ballyhoo. Dialogue lines adapting themselves readily to ad copy purposes, the influence which these will have in arousing attention can be furthered by the use of cleverly contrived exploitation stunts which reflect the picture's theme.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Twentieth Century-Fox. A Darryl F. Zanuck production. Directed by Stephen Roberts. Associate producer, Nunnally Johnson. Screen play by Howard Ellis Smith and Nunnally Johnson. From the play by Ilia Surgutchoff and Frederick Albert Swann. Special music composed by Bert Kalmar and Harry Ruby. Photographed by Ernest Palmer. Art director, William Darling. Film editor, Harold Schuster. Costumes by Gwen Wakeling. Sound, Joseph Aiken, Roger Heman. Musical direction, Oscar Bradley. "The Moon in the Sky" sung by Joan Bennett; words and music by Bert Kalmar and Harry Ruby. P. C. A. Certificate No. 1546. Running time, when seen in Hollywood, 71 minutes. Invitation to the Waltz

(Associated British Pictures)

Costume Romance

Lilian Harvey, who scored a big hit in "Congress Dances" and since has been seen in several Hollywood productions, is here cast as an English dancer who, in the period of Napoleon's conquest of Europe, is used as a secret agent of British diplomacy. The period provides a background of colorful sort, in which uniform and court dress provide the prevailing note and the figure of Napoleon is introduced, in the traditional "human" aspect. Another exploitation angle is that the danseuse is pictured as introducing a "new" dance, the waltz, elaborated by the composer Weber from folk dances.

The story, by Holt Marvell, the British broadcasting celebrity, contains good screen material, the essence of the plot being that the girl, pursued by the roué Duke of Wurtemburg, exploits his infatuation in order to persuade him to sell his army to the Allies instead of to Napoleon. The latter appears on the scene in person to defeat her schemes but benevolently allows her to escape and to smuggle to England the Wurtemburg officer whom she loves and who has tried to effect her escape.

The waltz theme is well used and generally the musical background is attractive, but the production as a whole is not very expert and many good situations are inadequately used. The title, the musical appeal and Lillian Harvey's name and reputation as a dancer offer the best opportunities of putting it over.—Allan, London.

Produced and distributed by Associated British Picture Corporation. Original story by Holt Marvell. Directed by Paul Merzbach. Ballets devised and directed by Anton Dolin. Photography, Ronald Neame. Sound, C. V. Thornton. Running time, 80 minutes. General audience classification.

I Give My Heart

(Associated British Pictures)

Costume Musical

Here is a costume musical offering several angles of exploitation. An adaptation of "The DuBarry" operetta, a stage success, it offers story values of well established screen appeal; public knowledge of the plot goes back to "Passion" and Pola Negri. The musical appeal is considerable, both for its own merit and because its vehicle is Gitta Alpar, a new singer from Vienna who puts over a theme number and several other tuneful items. It is also well staged and notably better costumed than many British efforts, and its best spectacular effects come at the right place—the end.

The story is a romanticized version of the elevation of Jeanne, a pretty Paris milliner, to the place, vacant on the death of Madame Pompadour, of mistress to Louis XV of France. Two factions are competing for the power to place a nominee in this influential position, and after Jeanne has been given a social status by marriage to the penniless and complaisant Count DuBarry, and duly introduced to the King, first Minister Choiseul finds in prison a penniless poet who once loved Jeanne and employs him to foment discontent by lampoons against the King and his new mistress. Jeanne brings the poet again to her feet and with his aid turns the mob's descent on Versailles into a triumphant procession; Choiseul is dismissed and the DuBarry is all powerful.

A succession of effective stage pictures and of really tuneful numbers, "I Give My Heart" is, in its vein, an efficient piece of work in which an efficient exploiteer will find many opportunities for tie-ups and for specialized appeals.—Allan, London.

Produced and Distributed by Associated British Pictures. From the operetta "The DuBarry" by Paul Knepler and J. M. Welleminski. Directed by Marcel Varnel. Camera, Clause Friese-Greene. Lyrics by Desmond Carter. Adult classification. Running time, 85 minutes.

It's in the Air

(MGM)

Comedy

Comedy, particularly of the type that has lifted its star to the top rung of radio popularity, is the keynote of this production and Jack Benny fans should be more than satisfied at the remarks and antics of their favorite. As a vehicle for the talents of the featured players, however, the story appears to be quite weak. The combined ability of Benny, Ted Healy, Una Merkel and Nat Pendleton, on the other hand, has produced a comedy of such merit as to forgive the lack of strength in the story.

Showmen have a natural exploitation medium in the person of Jack Benny because of his radio popularity, and in this picture his work is vastly similar to that on the air.

This picture is based on a flight into the stratosphere, with Benny and Healy the balloonists, and this also offers itself to showmen for unique treatment. Tied in with the recent record flight into the higher reaches by the United States Army-National Geographic stratosphere balloonists, Captains A. W. Stevens and Orvil Anderson, it should prove doubly effective.

The names of the other featured players all have marquee value and in this case signify comedy of the first rank as well. Healy and Miss Merkel turn in excellent performances, particularly Healy, who, in this picture, seems to fulfill the promises made for him when he left the Broadway stage for Hollywood. He proves an excellent foil for Benny.

Director Charles F. Riesner, director of comedies, keeps the action moving right along. The photography of Charles Schoenbaum does much to enhance the film's values, particularly during the later sequences.

The story, in brief, concerns Benny and Healy, who live by their wits fixing races, fights and other sports events, seeking cover from a G-Man intent on jailing them for income tax evasion. They pose as balloonists and find themselves roped into a stratosphere flight, which proves the comic highlight of the film.

Fleeing New York and Pendleton, who is seeking to arrest them for income tax evasions, Benny and Healy arrive at Desert Springs, Calif., where they hope to remain under cover and where Benny hopes to win back Miss Merkel, his wife who left him because of his gambling. Using a ruse to reach the resort, Benny is mistaken for a famous balloonist and scientist and he carries out the idea for safety's sake. Healy, likewise, poses as a retired Army balloon expert.

Grant Mitchell, airplane manufacturer, decides to stick Benny and Healy with a stratosphere balloon he built, and makes it known the two will make a flight from the hotel grounds. This causes several business men, all intent on advertising their products, to join him, and before Benny knows what's happening he is signed to make the flight. He has other plans, however, hoping to leave when he gets the money from the advertisers but when his wife shows such faith in him and especially when he is finally tracked down by Pendleton, he takes off.

The rest of the picture concerns the antics of the two in the balloon many miles above the earth and produces scenes that bristle with excellent comedy. All ends well, however, and when the flight is so successful that Mitchell offers the heroes jobs, the way is paved for Benny's reconciliation with his wife.

Played up as a comedy, with the campaigns centered on Benny, Healy, Miss Merkel and Pendleton, exhibitors should derive adequate box-office satisfaction. It's not a pretentious picture by any means, but it does appear to be one that has entertainment to offer.—Baehler, New York.

Wanderer of the Wasteland

(Paramount)

Western

This is a real action western picture of the type which continuing legions of patrons demonstrate they appreciate. It is a story of a wanderer of the desert, a young man who, believing that he has killed his brother, flees to the desert to escape the death penalty. Befriended by an old prospector, who teaches him the ways to combat the treacherous barren soil, the outlaw in turn pays back the debt by saving the prospector's gold from a robber band. The wanderer, when he returns to the mining town, finds it almost deserted now that the gold has petered out and discovers that his brother did not die at his hands, but months later in another brawl. An outlaw no longer, the wanderer is free to marry the girl he left when he flew to the desert's haven.

Lending itself readily, in production values, story content and personnel, to the type of exploitation making for western popularity, the type of accompanying showmanship should not be difficult to apply. The picture is based on the Zane Grey novel of the same name, a point worth special mention in the exploitation campaign. The cast is headed by Dean Jagger and Gail Patrick and includes such well known supporting players as Edward Ellis, Benny Baker, Buster Crabbe, Trixie Friganza, Monte Blue, Raymond Hatton, Fuzzy Knight, Anna Q. Nilsson and Tammany Young.

Aboard a river steamer, Dean Jagger, on his way to meet his brother in the small mining town of Picacho in California, meets Gail Patrick and falls in love with her. Arriving in Picacho he greets his brother, unaware that the brother has changed and intends to relieve Jagger of his money to pay a gambling debt. Unable to get Jagger to turn the money over to him, the brother involves Jagger in a gambling game. Jagger accuses his brother of cheating and a fight begins, ending when Jagger, in grappling for his brother's gun, pulls the trigger accidentally. Jagger flees, believing his brother dead.

Out in the desert, Jagger, completely exhausted, is saved from death when a prospector revives him. The prospector brings Jagger to a mining camp which the prospector owns. Outfitting him and giving him a mule, the prospector sends Jagger on his way, telling him to come back in a year's time. The year passes and Jagger is on his way back out of the desert. He is set upon by a band of outlaws and robbed. The outlaws hold him prisoner, and while in their camp he learns they plan to rob the old prospector. Freeing himself in the night he escapes and goes to Picacho, where he learns the old prospector has returned to his mining camp and has taken Gail Patrick along with him.

Setting out in pursuit, Jagger, nearing the mining camp, is met by the prospector's Chinese helper, who informs him his boss and the girl are prisoners of the outlaw band. Jagger arrives at the camp and disperses the gang after killing its leader, rides back to Picacho and prepares to give himself up to the sheriff for the murder of Jagger's brother. Discovering he is not wanted for murder and that his brother hadn't died by his hand, Jagger returns to the camp and is reconciled with Gail Patrick.—Mooney, New York.

Art direction by Hans Dreir and Dave Garber. Phtographed by Ben Reynolds. Film editor, Everett Douglass. P. C. A. Certificate No. 1023. Running time, 66 minutes. Release date, September 20, 1935. Aladdin's Lamp

Fair

The animated cartoon character of the Terry-Toons series is here presented in Bagdad and like the legendary character of Arabian folk lore the animated youngster uses the lamp to advantage. Rubbing the lamp, however, produces some well known genius such as Ed. Wynn and Bert Lahr. The animated youngster sails on his magic carpet into a harem and when discovered is sorely beset but with the aid of the magic lamp escapes.—Running time, 10 minutes.

West Indies Cruise
(Fox)
Travels

In this short from Fox Movietone, the Magic Carpet takes the audience to the West Indies. There the beautiful scenery and the old buildings, centuries old which still stand, are recorded by the camera's eye. A variegated collection of shots has been gathered to make this an interesting and instructive short and not the least of the shots is one depicting an old fortress in Nassau, that repelled many an invader long ago, and which today retains its implements of defense, long outmoded cannons and cannon balls.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Hollywood Capers
(Vitaphone)
Fair

The animated character, Beans, gains admission to a motion picture studio, after several unsuccessful attempts, by impersonating a picture star. He disrupts some scenes being taken and winds up in a room with a mechanical monster. Beans pulls a switch and the monster, charged with electricity, comes to life and proceeds to demolish everything in its path. Beans succeeds in besting the monster after some trying moments.—Running time, seven minutes.

Hey Diddle Diddle
Good Cartoon

This cartoon, of the Terry-Toon series, seems to combine several characters of wellknown nursery rhymes into one story, but the result is good. The Cow that Jumped Over the Moon, Jack and Jill, Mary and her Lamb, and many others, all attend a school held in a large shoe. Dancing is the chief subject taught, but while the pupils are doing their routines they are visited by the Parent-Teacher Association officials and things quiet down. Mary, however, breaks loose in a dance, and much to the surprise of everyone present, the members of the association drop their dignity and join in. As a whole, this should please most audiences, particularly children.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Camera Thrills
Great Entertainment

So spirited and rapid-fire is the movement of this two-reel production that it is immensely promising as entertainment. Critical, indeed, would be the patron who would discount the picture because he has seen some of the shots before in newsreels. Thrill is piled upon thrill in such speedy sequence that it all appears entirely fresh, and Graham McNamee is at his best as narrator with such material. Charles Ford produced the picture.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Playgrounds
(Vitaphone)
Scenic Resorts

Views of various playgrounds are presented in this interesting subject from E. M. Newman's series of "Our Own United States," with narrative by James Wallington, of radio fame. Glimpses of Virginia Beach, Pinehurst, Jones Beach, Coney Island, Palm Springs (California), Atlantic City, St. Petersburg, Miami Beach, Lake Placid, Old Orchard Beach and Lake Maranacook in Maine complete the short.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Camera Hunting
(Vitaphone)
Interesting

Covering a wide range of territory and with a verbal description by Paul Douglas, this short from E. M. Newman's series of "Our Own United States," is very interesting. It opens with scenes of goat life in the Ozark Mountains. Then there are the Everglades, where the Seminole Indians have developed alligator farms; Alabama with its cigarette-smoking horned toads; further north, a strange friendship between a monkey and a cat; a two-year-old boy handling rattlesnakes as if they were fishing worms. Back in Alabama a husky farmer is shown carrying an 800-pound bull on his shoulders; Yellowstone Park beavers slicing trees with their sharp teeth to build a dam, and ducks at ease in one of the conservation districts of the South.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Rhythm of Paree
Musical Comedy

This is a miniature musical comedy that has a good cast, pleasing little story and background and tuneful music, all combined for satisfactory screen fare of this type. Audiences should be well entertained by this. The story has Earl Oxford and Fred Lightner stranded in Paris and meeting Niela Goodelle and Nell Kelly, entertainers in a night club. The boys go to the club to visit the girls, but having no money to pay their bill, they arrange with the police to raid the place and rescue them. Complications set in, but all is cleared up, after several pleasant musical numbers are presented.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Italian Riviera
(Fox)
Travelogue

This latest of the Magic Carpet of Movietone series takes the audience to a spot seldom included in travelogue material, but the subject falls short in interest holding matter. Starting at San Remo, where the gambling casino is shown in full swing, the camera journeys up the Italian Riviera toward Genoa, taking in all the summer resorts on the way. Ed Thorgerson does the off-screen dialogue and even he seems to be minus his usual vivacity and enthusiasm.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Hazardous Occupations
(Fox)
Cameramen

In this short from the series of the "Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman," the cameraman focuses attention upon himself and the hazardous tasks he is called upon to perform in carrying out the editor's orders. Climbing to perilous heights on skyscraping towers to photograph some more towers, taking close-up shots of a raging volcano and other intrepid deeds are performed by the cameraman in illustrating the dangers he undergoes to obtain suitable newsreel material for the public.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Little Dutch Plate
(Vitaphone)
Colorful

An amusing cartoon from the "Merrie Melody" color series presents a little Dutch shaker in love with a cute girl on a Dutch plate, who lives in a windmill. Mr. Vinegar, the villain, demands her hand in marriage or immediate payment by 12 noon of the mortgage which he holds on the windmill. The salt shaker defies him and announces he will have the money at the appointed hour. True to this word, the salt shaker returns with the money and throws it at Mr. Vinegar. A fight ensues in which the little hero emerges victorious, much to the delight of his sweetheart.—Running time, seven minutes.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

First National

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—Joe really went to town in this picture. High class entertainment that clicks with the patrons. Ann Dvorak is swell. More pictures like this and we'll all get well. Running time, 83 minutes. Played October 13-14.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—The best Joe Brown picture in years. We said the same about "Alibi Ike," but this was even better. The situations were hilarious and Joe showed his accomplishments at singing and dancing. Business was very good.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

IN CALIENTE: Dolores Del Rio, Pat O'Brien—A good musical picture. Production perfect. Was well liked in every respect. Running time, 84 minutes. Played October 6-7.—Charles C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—Here's a knockout. It's got everything a picture should have. A perfect cast in a perfect story. This is the outstanding picture of the year. It pleased absolutely everyone in a big way. Play it, by all means. Running time, 80 minutes.—Phil Billiet, Coliseum Theatre, Annawan, Ill. Small town patronage.

MARY JANE'S PA: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee—People liked it. Double billed it with "Strawberry Roan," which I give credit for business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

OIL FOR THE LAMPS OF CHINA: Josephine Hutchinson, Pat O'Brien—Good picture, despite the length. Will get extra business if properly exploited. Running time, 97 minutes.—Charles C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

Mascot

IN OLD SANTE FE: Ken Maynard, Evalyn Knapp—Just about the best western we've ever played. Story good. Ken can sing—also Gene Autry and his band that gives it a musical background. Running time, 6 reels. Played October 25-26.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AGE OF INDISCRETION: May Robson, Madge Evans—The picture is okay of its type, the old story of two women and the position of the child at the breakup of the home. It has been done many times before and the exhibitor will have the problem of selling it with the above title. The acting saved it, but just ordinary business.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—An A-1 production. With three outstanding stars, each having a following of their own, a gripping interest-holding action drama, thrilling scenes of storm and peril and the masterful treatment of every human element make "China Seas" outstanding mass entertainment. One of the best drawing cards to date. Played September 15-17.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—A good picture. One of the box office tonics Nicholas Schenck referred to in that now famous saying of his. I don't mind at all paying money for a picture like this for it brings the people in, and that is the idea of running a theatre in the first place.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

MAD LOVE: Peter Lorre, Frances Drake—Terrible. One of the worst pictures I have ever shown. Absolutely nothing to it. I had more walkouts on this picture than I ever had before on all the rest of the pictures I ever ran in the history of the theatre. The plot is impossible and there were altogether too many horror scenes. Running time, 69 minutes. Played October 30.—Phil Billiet, Coliseum Theatre, Annawan, Ill. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN THE FLEET: Robert Taylor, Jean Parker—A rather ordinary program picture that was box office because of Robert Taylor.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MURDER MAN, THE: Spencer Tracy, Virginia Bruce—A very entertaining murder mystery in which the chief "searcher after facts," a newspaper man, turns out to be the murderer. Tracy gives a good performance and it did a good business in spite of my predictions to the contrary. "Diamond Jim" on the same days of the week previous was 25 per cent less.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

SMILIN' THROUGH (Re-release): Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard—Good picture, but failed to draw. Have played my last reissue. Running time, 100 minutes. Played October 13-14.—Charles C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

WHITE SISTER, THE: Clark Gable, Helen Hayes—Boys, if you live in a Catholic community, get behind this, boost it to the limit and you'll clean up. Yes, it's old, but the print is O. K. and oh! what a sweet picture it is. We had the nuns and priests of our Catholic Church at the matinee and from then on we held out the SRO sign for the first time in the last ten years. Take my advice, boys, book it, boost it, and clean up. Running time, 9 reels. Played September 29.—Phil Billiet, Coliseum Theatre, Annawan, Ill. Small town patronage.

WICKED WOMAN, A: Mady Christians, Jean Parker, Charles Bickford, Jackie Searl—This picture deserves a lot of compliments. I, personally, liked it. Didn't do any startling business for us.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

WOMAN WANTED: Joel McCrea, Maureen O'Sullivan—A good program picture without any draw to it that satisfied the customers who came in to see "Bright Lights." The mystery was somewhat obscure and could have been settled a whole lot earlier, but on the whole it wasn't bad.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

Monogram

KEEPER OF THE BEES, THE: Neil Hamilton, Betty Furness—A strong box office attraction that pleased every patron. Well produced.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

KEEPER OF THE BEES, THE: Neil Hamilton. Betty Furness—This picture pulled them in, but did not satisfy nearly as well as previous Gene Stratton-Porter productions. Many of Republic's productions seem to go along smoothly through the picture until they come to the end of the story or the climax. Then they seem to fall down or sort of fizzle out. Running time, 80 minutes. Played November 2-3.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

Paramount

ACCENT ON YOUTH: Sylvia Sidney, Herbert Marshall—A fairly amusing highbrow comedy that failed to draw even average business. The picture will please those who like "class" pictures and bore anyone else.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

ACCENT ON YOUTH: Sylvia Sidney, Herbert Marshall—If your audience will go for a lot of stilted dialogue and a man hot and bothered with a young girl, he well along in years, you know that your audience can certainly take it, but mine couldn't. And I saw that in the Herald it was a Box Office Champion, but that certainly would not go for a small town audience. They were bored to tears with this picture and they so expressed themselves. An all dialogue picture is hard to take for the rural town audiences; they want some action and this had none.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

BIG BROADCAST OF 1936, THE: Burns & Allen, Jack Oakie—First rate. An audience picture that will draw well in all situations and be enjoyed by all. Played October 20-22.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

LAST OUTPOST, THE: Cary Grant, Gertrude Michael—It is a great show. Excellent on Saturday.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

SHIP CAFE: Carl Brisson, Arline Judge—A pleasing show. Not the biggest in the world but they will not pan it.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

SMART GIRL: Kent Taylor, Ida Lupino—An entertaining picture without any draw to it at all. The Church condemned it, but many in the audience told me they couldn't see why. Joseph Cawthorn walked away with the acting honors. He was very funny.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

SMART GIRL: Kent Taylor, Ida Lupino—Very good wisecrack comedy drama. Will please everybody.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

TWO FOR TONIGHT: Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett—While this is placed by Paramount in the high allocation for rental charged, do not believe it is even a good average picture. Opened on Sunday for two days and fared very badly at the box office. Am afraid folks will not stand for Bing much longer, and I guess from what you hear and what you see in the papers, we feel sorry, not for Bing but us for having to pay top prices for his pictures.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

WITHOUT REGRET: Elissa Landi, Kent Taylor—Good program picture.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

Republic

TUMBLING TUMBLEWEEDS: Gene Autry, Lucile Browne—A picture no exhibitor need have reluctance in booking. A worthy successor to "In Old Arizona," with more emphasis on hard riding and gunplay. Gene Autry sings several songs he has popularized with his recordings and displays a pleasing personality. This well produced film was strong at the box office and received excellent audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

RKO Radio

ALICE ADAMS: Katharine Hepburn, Fred MacMurray, Fred Stone—Boresome; Hepburn again fails to come through. Fred Stone adds to its downfall. To call him a second Will Rogers would be an insult. He hasn't the faintest resemblance in any manner, shape or form which characterized our esteemed Will Rogers. He was Rogers' pal, but so was his Elderly Aunt, and you don't see her trying to break into the movies. Lots of walkouts.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

ARIZONIAN, THE: Richard Dix, Margot Grahame—This broke our midweek bargain night record which covers a period of more than three years. Conditions were ideal for good business and I did considerable advertising, so the fine results were not unlooked for. This easily rates as one of the very best westerns produced in 1935. Far, far, above the average western.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Agricultural patronage.

ARIZONIAN, THE: Richard Dix, Margot Grahame—This picture surprised us with its drawing power. We expected only average business, but found it necessary to put up the SRO sign. An excellent action picture that everyone enjoyed.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

BECKY SHARP: Miriam Hopkins, Frances Dee, Alison Skipworth—The much acclaimed "Becky Sharp," as far as color is concerned, seems to be the last word, but why they should waste all this splash of color on "Becky Sharp," I don't know. The picture was not liked at all; nearly all dialogue and Hopkins getting hysterical in some scenes and then gaga in others. It is a wasted date for any small town and I think that my opinion and that of the audience is the same as the other exhibitors that have reported on it. Some few of the classes will like it, but as for the masses, their thumbs were down. Walkouts hurt and we had many on this picture. One thing noticeable is that color brings out the defects in the faces, and I don't think that some of the actors and actresses are going to like that so well. Especially noticeable in Miriam Hopkins' face.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

BECKY SHARP: Miriam Hopkins, Cedric Hardwicke—Beautiful production, wonderful color effects. Just the picture for big towns; no good for small town or country. Did not draw at the Green Lantern. Played October 26.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

NITWITS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—Played here Sunday and Monday to a little more than average business. Picture will please where Wheeler and Woolsey are popular. Plenty of laughs. Running time, 81 minutes.—Charles C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

NITWITS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—Who said this combination was slipping? We have played every Wheeler and Woolsey ever produced and this outgrossed any and all of them by a long margin. The picture had the crowd in a complete roar many times and is certainly one of the best this great team his put on the screen. No other comedy team, and this includes Laurel and Hardy, ever compared with these boys.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Agricultural patronage.

RAINMAKERS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—A typical Wheeler and Woolsey laugh-getter. The clever story of two professional rainmakers who do little rainmaking but cause plenty of excitement with runaway railroad locomotives loaded with dynamite. Fine audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

RETURN OF PETER GRIMM, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Helen Mack—Audience reaction bad; so was the box office on this engagement. Running time, 82 minutes. Played October 18.—Charles C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

SHE: Helen Gahagan, Randolph Scott—An overlong and tediously imaginative fairy tale which drew the customers in; I don't know why.—Robert Wile, Granade Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

STAR OF MIDNIGHT: William Powell, Ginger Rogers—A murder mystery that was rather difficult to follow. We are getting too many pictures of this type lately. Comments were, however, most favorable, although several remarked they couldn't understand certain parts of it.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Agricultural patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn, Jane Withers—As I did not buy Fox in 1934-35, but did get the 1935-36 group, I thought I would try this old Temple. Outside of the paper I use on every show, we did nothing to bring them in as the picture has played all around us. Did not expect to do more than an average business on this. Result: the biggest two-night gross we have had for five years and, personally, I rate this as one of the best screen entertainments ever made.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Agricultural patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple, John Boles—Drew almost capacity crowd, an excellent picture. Good any place, any time, anywhere. Her best to date. Played November 2.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

DARING YOUNG MAN, THE: James Dunn, Mae Clarke—WELCOME HOME; James Dunn, Arline Judge—SPRING TONIC: Lew Ayres, Claire Trevor—SILK HAT KID; Lew Ayres, Mae Clarke—Fox seems to have forgotten how to make entertaining little pictures. Excepting for Will Rogers and Shirley Temple pictures, the majority can be classed "boiler plate."—Charles Born Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

FARMER TAKES A WIFE, THE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Fonda—Contrary to most reports by fellow exhibitors on this picture, I found this feature to draw above average business and it pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 91 minutes.—Phil Billiet, Coliseum Theatre, Annawan, Ill. Small town patronage.

GINGER: Jane Withers, Jackie Searl—This star drew almost as well as Shirley Temple and some of our patrons thought she was a more attractive star than Shirley Temple. An excellent production full of audience appeal. Played October 19.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

BOTH COASTS ADD B. O. REPORTERS

From New England to the Far Northwest come volunteers this week to add their reports on "What the Picture Did for Me".

Reporting for the first time is LIONEL IRWIN, JR., of the Palace Theatre, Penacook, New Hampshire.

Returning to the corps of contributors is a showman whose comment has not appeared in the columns for some time. He is DONALD J. VISGER, of the Liberty Theatre at Kennewick, Washington.

You'll find their reports in the department this week.

HERE'S TO ROMANCE: Nino Martini, Genevieve Tobin—Strictly class entertainment. Will draw and appeal to musically inclined, but not to ordinary folks. Not for a Sunday audience. A poor bet here and no doubt for all small places. Played October 27-29.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

STEAMBOAT ROUND THE BEND: Will Rogers, Anne Shirley—This one went big with Rogers' fans and brought in some others who generally weren't Rogers' fans. Picture has good story and moves rapidly with some excellent humor from about whole cast. However, some minor roles so amateur that it subtracts from Rogers. Play it, advertise Rogers, also steamboat days on Mississippi and they'll flock in. Played October 18-19.—Donald Visger, Liberty Theatre, Kennewick, Wash. General and rural patronage.

$10 RAISE: Edward Everett Horton, Karen Morley—An average program comedy that meant little as a box office attraction because of cast weakness.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

THIS IS THE LIFE: Jane Withers, John McGuire—This one is Jane Withers' best so far, and is suitable for almost any type house except "westerns." Has appeal to both adults and children, many liking Jane more than Shirley Temple. Has good story, fine setting, wide variety entertainment and sends 'em home happy. This one will stand plenty of advertising along Shirley Temple lines. Played October 26-27.—Donald Visger, Liberty Theatre, Kennewick, Wash. General and rural patronage.

THIS IS THE LIFE: Jane Withers, John McGuire—Great! Here is a star with a personality all her own. Patrons will compare her with Shirley Temple, which is a mistake. With the right stories the little gal will do plenty at the box office; about the time Fox is ready to sell next year.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

THUNDER IN THE NIGHT: Edmund Lowe, Karen Morley—Get the idea across on this one that it's not a horror picture. Is pretty fair detective story, rather clever plot. Some pretty good comedy thrown in. Detective story fans will go for this one if mystery angle is played up. Played October 26-27.—Donald Visger, Liberty Theatre, Kennewick, Wash. General and rural patronage.

WAY DOWN EAST: Rochelle Hudson, Henry Fonda—A complete washout from box office standpoint. Those you can get in will like it but you can't get 'em in. Failed to gross film rental, and that does leave a sour taste in your mouth!—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

United Artists

CALL OF THE WILD: Clark Gable, Loretta Young, Jack Oakie—Managed to get a fairly early date on this and went out and really advertised it. Result: the biggest business I have ever done in the ten years I have been exhibiting pictures. As there was no percentage deal on this, I naturally had a profit that was far above that of any show we ever ran. And best of all, the picture went over like a million. Just 100 per cent for the small town. Played October 11-13.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Agricultural patronage.

We had a two-for-one show to a S. R. O. French community, so they like their Chevalier.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

Universal

BRIDE OF FRANKENSTEIN.: Boris Karloff, Valerie Hobson—A thriller, at least to the young people; but it drew the older people quite well. Just a fair picture. Played October 12.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

BRIDE OF FRANKENSTEIN: Boris Karloff, Valerie Hobson—Drew fairly well, but why anyone should pay money to look at such a film is more than I can see. I advertised it as a picture not suitable for children and explained it to them when they bought tickets. Many parents even sent written permission with the youngsters to see it alone, so I give up. Why do they holler for family pictures? Played October 30-31.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

CHINATOWN SQUAD: Lyle Talbot, Valerie Hobson—Fair.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

DIAMOND JIM: Edward Arnold, Binnie Barnes—A beautiful work of art that failed miserably at the box office. I had expected otherwise from the number of people who told me they knew Brady. It was handsomely mounted and Edward Arnold gave a striking performance. The plaint of the critics that it wasn't historically accurate is so much blather. Perhaps that spoiled its draw. I am in favor of revoking all critic's passes and asking them to discontinue reviewing.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. General patronage.

LADY TUBBS: Alice Brady, Douglass Montgomery, Anita Louise—Was somewhat disappointed in this, both from the standpoint of business and entertainment value. The first half of the picture is very entertaining, but can't say much for the rest of the show. Did not do average business and can say that it is only about an average program picture.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Agricultural patronage.

MANHATTAN MOON: Ricardo Cortez, Dorothy Page—Mediocre program picture. Played November 1.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

MR. DYNAMITE: Edmund Lowe, Jean Dixon, Esther Ralston—A fast-moving comedy mystery. Lowe excels himself. Should be given bigger parts. This is a real picture that can do business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

PRINCESS O'HARA: Jean Parker, Chester Morris—A dandy show that will appeal to almost any class of audience, but did not draw anywhere near average bargain night business. In fact, this gave me the poorest midweek gross for more than seven months.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Agricultural patronage.

SHE GETS HER MAN: Zasu Pitts, Hugh O'Connell, Helen Twelvetrees—They got a lot of good laughs. We did business. Can only recommend it as O. K.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

STRAWBERRY ROAN: Ken Maynard, Ruth Hall—There was never a western like this ever made for us. You can have all the Garbos you want, but give me "Strawberry Roan." Played it twice and going to play it again.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

WEREWOLF OF LONDON: Henry Hull, Valerie Hobson—One of the best horror pictures we have yet played. Beats "Frankenstein." Those who want horror sure get it.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

ALIBI IKE: Joe E. Brown, Olivia de Havilland—Typical Joe E. Brown comedy that pleased all. Fair business. Running time, 72 minutes. Played October 9-10.—Charles C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

DON'T BET ON BLONDES: Warren William, Claire Dodd—Only fair. Will get by.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

LITTLE BIG SHOT: Sybil Jason, Robert Armstrong, Glenda Farrell, Edward Everett Horton—Introduces to the theatre public a new and one of the best child stars of the screen. Sybil Jason in this grand human interest picture is supported by three grand stars who have already proven their talent, Farrell, Armstrong and Horton. Running time, 72 minutes. Played October 22-23.—Paul C. Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

STRANDED: Kay Francis, George Brent—A very timely and pleasing true-to-life picture. Running time, 76 minutes.—Charles C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Educational

BIG BUSINESS: Musical Comedy—Terrible. Worst comedy Educational has ever produced. It came on the end of the show and patrons walked out on it.—Lionel A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

TARS AND STRIPES: Buster Keaton—Buster Keaton joins the Navy to provoke laughs. Just a patriotic musical two-reeler. Running time, 20 minutes.—Charles C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

GOOFY MOVIES: Not for mine. No one seems to say much. There are lots better.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

LITTLE SINNER: Our Gang—Very good "Our Gang." Will get plenty of laughs. Hokum blended with reality. Running time, 20 minutes.—Charles C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullen, W. Va. Small town patronage.

TWIN TRIPLETS: Todd-Kelly—A good comedy, but not worth the price that has been asked for this series. Running time, 19 minutes.—Charles C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

Paramount

YOU GOTTA BE A FOOTBALL HERO: Popeye the Sailor—Another good one from Popeye. He never fails us. Running time, 7 minutes.—Phil Billiet, Coliseum Theatre, Annawan, Ill. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

MAJOR BOWES AMATEUR THEATRE OF THE AIR: No. 1—Not nearly as good as Universal's "Mentones" and cost twice as much. I hope the next one will be a lot better. Had I seen this before buying, I can honestly say that I wouldn't have bought this series. No extra draw with this at all.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Agricultural patronage.

SOUTHERN STYLE: Ruth Etting—Not so hot. Draggy from the start and finishes the same way. Running time, 19 minutes.—Phil Billiet, Coliseum Theatre, Annawan, Ill. Small town patronage.

Universal

DEMI TASSE: Doane Musical No. 1—I tried to set this out in favor of a two-reel comedy, but on short notice had to play this. Positively one of the best two-reelers we ever put on our screen. If you have Universal and haven't had this, get busy and set it in. You will be giving your patrons an unusual treat. —L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Agricultural patronage.

Vitaphone

OH EVALINE: Hal LeRoy, Eleanor Whitney—A good comedy on any program. Running time, 21 minutes.—Charles C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

SHOESTRING FOLLIES: Eddie Peabody—Good old Warners. Just another real peppy musical revue, starring Eddie Peabody.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

THOSE BEAUTIFUL DAMES: Merrie Melodies—A colored cartoon that gave everyone a few laughs. Nothing unusual, but still as good as the average. Beautiful colors helped the cartoon to go over. Running time, 7 minutes.—Phil Billiet, Coliseum Theatre, Annawan, Ill. Small town patronage.

Miscellaneous

BAER-LOUIS FIGHT: We didn't do the business we expected, but showed enough extra business to warrant playing it.—Harland Ranklin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

Serials

Universal

ROARING WEST: Buck Jones—Half way through this serial. Not as good as other Jones serials, so far. —Charles C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

THOSE KID CLUBS

What with their proved box-office advantages there is often cause for puzzlement why the Saturday matinee kid or kiddie clubs are not functioning vigorously in more spots than they are at present. For here is an organizational idea that with the right kind of enthusiasm and effort flourishes as the bay tree but unfortunately is regarded in too many places as an extra unnecessary chore and a matter of lesser importance—if any —over which to become excited.

In the first place, the theatre's logical progress toward a more responsible and higher position in community opinion can be and is being hastened by the functioning of these junior organizations. For the most part, the clubs with their definite rulings, membership regulations, election of officers and other parliamentary procedure dear to the juvenile heart may be said considering their limitations to do not so bad a job of character development. And in the majority of cases the clubs are also helping to solve the always perplexing problem of what shall constitute suitable screen fare for juvenile consumption.

The seriousness with which the smart theatreman takes these responsibilities determines the size of dividends they may be expected to return. Children well entertained and fairly treated will not only willingly but loyally advertise the theatre in the bosoms of their families and without special urging become voluble walking ballyhoos whose value dare not be discounted. Also as Bill Dworski says on a following page parents especially appreciative that children can enjoy wholesome entertainment in safety send the youngsters in while they go shopping.

As concerns actual grosses there is ample evidence that assiduous cultivation of the kid club brings sufficient extra revenues. Regular weekly attendances of 1,000 or more are not at all unusual, much of which in a manner of speaking is found money, as is the attendance of adults at "grown-up" prices.

Newspaper publicity, cooperation of merchants and participation of civic bodies may also be listed among assets not to be weighed lightly in considering the sponsoring and development of junior clubs where they do not now exist.

Their inauguration and maintenance may take a weekly chunk of earnest labor but returns of added prestige and grosses indicate that the exchange of extra perspiration for extra profits is considered more than fair by hundreds of eager and successful club leader-managers.

NOT TOO TIGHT, PLEASE

The sock and zip of early day exploitation are pleasantly recalled in the account set down on a following page of Gaumont British's colorful slice of showmanship on "Transatlantic Tunnel." The thought of screening the picture for the sandhogs excavating the new Hudson River tunnel against a background similar to that of the story is a pungent bit of bally which this industry can stand much more of.

There isn't enough color in current exploitation. The meat's good but the gravy's not too hot.

Perfectly all right to regulate the machinery and for that matter, the machinists. But too exact a job of tightening is not the answer either. Some of the screws should be left just a tiny bit loose, at least.

LEAVE ENOUGH BEHIND

Of course they are established to help the needy but the recent call upon industry relief funds for the interment of a former theatre manager calls attention again to the importance of provision by theatremen for adequate insurance at least against the necessity of having others undertake the expenses of proper burial.

Yes, there are instances such as Famous Players Canadian which make available without charge generous insurance policies in favor of all the circuit managers. But this unfortunately is not general.

If you've got to go, you go—but the departure can be eased considerably by the knowledge that there is enough left behind to pay all checks.

"Melody" Gets Effective New York Opening

United Artists' "Melody Lingers On" was ushered into the New York Rivoli with Saks' Fifth Avenue shop arranging five special fashion windows each displaying one of the original gowns worn by Josephine Hutchinson in the picture. In addition to scene stills, special blowups and cards giving full theatre credit were effectively used. Exclusive Fifth Avenue ladies' shop featured Hutchinson halo coiffure, using photo of star in ads together with playdates.

Airplane with special kite-banner covered all local football games in city, and through tieup with radio station in connection with their Italian Hour seven consecutive 15 minute periods included picture comment and special transcription.

Through cooperation of book company all their local retailers displayed special windows on the book with appropriate cards announcing engagement at Rivoli. Further windows were secured from chain drug stores on cosmetic display and hosiery stores featured windows plugging picture. In addition to numerous feature stories with plenty of art in local dailies, a 50-foot banner was hung on site of old building now in process of demolition.

Mere Father Wins Grady's Diaper Derby

Can't say whether E. C. Grady, Hoosier Theatre, Whiting, Ind., figured out anything significant in the tieup, but nevertheless for "Redheads on Parade" he reports a diaper derby changing contest, which he gave quite a sendoff with a four-column full in the local dailies.

On account of cold weather, Grady says he couldn't use babies, so worked the stunt with a department store which furnished large dolls and diapers. Five judges were used, one a timekeeper, and two stooges in the wings with baby noise makers. In the first round four tied, second round two and in the finals a man won in 25 seconds. Contestants had to remove diapers, drop on floor, powder doll and rediaper.

Advance trailer was used to stimulate interest and get contestants entered and store plugged stunt in ads. Grady says the audience got a million laughs and business was worth the effort and expenditure.

GB Shows "Tunnel" In New York Tunnel

They stopped work on the hole they're digging, those folks excavating the new Midtown Hudson Tunnel in New York, at the invitation of A. P. Waxman, G B advertising head, to see a screening of that company's "Transatlantic Tunnel" with the actual tunnel being converted into a little theatre, so to speak, for the time being.

As illustrated in photo on preceding page, bottom of column one, screen was hung right down in the hole with sandhogs and engineers constituting the audience. Col. Charles S. Gleim, Engineer of Construction of the new tunnel and of the Port of New York Authority, sponsored the showing, also present being the colonel's staff of assistants and group of science editors. Stunt was put on as a tiein on the second week of the showing at the New York Roxy.

Smart bit of co-op advertising was promoted by Ben Greenberg, Stadium, Woodsocket, R. I., on "Bright Lights," wherein local light and power company was sold the idea of taking night picture of marquee and sign to illustrate newspaper ad.

The flash measured two columns on 10 (see photo) and used on opening day of picture, reported by Ben to have stirred up the attention it certainly deserved.

ROSENTHAL, GOLDBERG WIN OCTOBER AWARDS

Bronze Citation Voted to Jules Seltzer; All Newcomers Take Down Firsts and Honorables

by A-MIKE VOGEL

Plenty of excitement in the Harvest Month, folks. For the October Quigley Awards decisions include a 1934 Grand Award winner, and for the first time since January, the additional voting of a Bronze Citation. Interesting also is that the theatremen selected for Bronze, First and Honorable Mention are all newcomers to the 1935 honors lists and with a few exceptions first time winners in the Competitions.

To Morris Rosenthal, manager, Loew's Majestic, Bridgeport, Conn., goes the October Silver for a grand campaign on Universal's "Diamond Jim". And to Harry Goldberg, Warner Philadelphia Zone theatres publicist, the judges have voted the October Bronze for his smartly executed drive on "A Midsummer Night's Dream" at the Chestnut Street Opera House.

The special Award of Bronze Citation is voted for the second time in 1935 with this special certificate handed down to Jules Seltzer, assistant to Goldberg, for his excellent coperation on the "Dream" campaign. Both Harry and Jules crack through for the first time, incidentally.

First Mentions find their way in October only to two entrants, F. L. Frechette, manager, M. & P. Strand, Holyoke, Mass., on Warners' "Page Miss Glory" and Guy Martin, manager, Publix Colfax, South Bend, Ind., on RKO Radio's "Top Hat." It is also to be noted that both these showmen are first-timers in the First group.

Fourteen "Honorables"

To 15 of the entrants go the 14 Honorable Mention sheepskin certificates awarded for October and it's almost a clean sweep again for new names and new faces. They include theatremen in this country, Canada, and the other side, overseas represented by Robert Boris, manager, Scala, Brussels, on Universal's "Bride of Frankenstein." Independents as well as circuit showmen are represented in the list, small towns as well as large cities.

All in all, the Awards for October may be said to be a good cross section of theatre representation.

In the meantime, as showmen are preparing their entries for November, the next but one month to the end of the 1935 competitions, preparations are going ahead in New York and Hollywood for the presentation of the 1935 Grand Awards, as already announced. In addition to the free air trips to the Coast via TWA, winners will be feted for a week by studioites and film celebrities.

Although the entire program of reception and entertainment has not yet at this writing been decided upon, it may be taken for granted that the winners will be honored by the folks on the Coast in a manner that will be long and pleasantly remembered.

Are you acomin'?

First Mention

F. L. Frechette, Manager, M & P Strand, Holyoke, Mass. "Page Miss Glory."

Guy Martin, Manager, Publix Indiana Corp., Colfax, So. Bend, Ind. "Top Hat."

Honorable Mentions

Al Beckrich, Manager Warner's Hipp, Cleveland, Ohio, and Mort Goodman, publicist. "Diamond Jim."

Len Bishop, Manager, Famous Players Capitol, Halifax, N. S. "39 Steps."

Robert Boris, Manager, Scala Theatre, Brussels, Belgium, "Bride of Frankenstein."

John Burhorn, Manager, B & K Gayety, Chicago, Ill. "Pursuit."

Manny Friedman, Manager, Century Fantasy, Rockville Centre, L. I. "Miss Glory."

Bill Hock, Manager, Warner's Plaza, Pittsburgh, Pa. "Special Agent."

Julius Lamm, Manager, Warner's Uptown, Cleveland, Ohio. "Bright Lights."

Floyd Nutting, Manager, Publix Paramount, Grand Forks, N. D. "Fighting Youth."

Thomas Pierce, Manager, Great States Peerless Theatre, Kewanee, Ill. "Top Hat."

Matt Saunders, Manager, Loew's Poli, Bridgeport, Conn. "Top Hat."

E. W. Smith, Manager, M. A. Shea's Lincoln, New Philadelphia, Ohio. "Diamond Jim."

Walter Stuart, Manager, M & P Community, No. Attleboro, Mass. "China Seas."

Dick Warner, Manager, Griffith's Bison, Shawnee, Okla. "Broadway Melody."

L. A. Warren, Manager, Sipe's Criterion, Anderson, S. C. "Harmony Lane."

Booth's Hidden Word Contest

A hidden name contest tieup with merchants, extending over a thirty week period, was a recent newspaper stunt pulled by Billings Booth, Winter Garden Theatre, Jamestown, N. Y., for which ten passes a week were awarded those finding name of movie star hidden in one merchant's ad on page. In submitting replies, contestants had to write short statement including star's name and last picture he or she appeared in, together with the name of the forthcoming picture in which they would appear at the Wintergarden.

Telephone Company Helps Goldman on "Party Wire"

Through tieup arranged by Jack Goldman, Grange Theatre, Philadelphia, with telephone company, oversized instrument and girl supplied by them were stationed in lobby (see photo). Girl telephoned subscribers telling them of opening date of "Party Wire." Jack reports the gag as highly effective and one which made the patrons conscious of calling theatre for future showing.

Black Holds "Curly Top" Recital in Lobby

Music store cooperated with Harry Black, Capitol Theatre, Calgary, Canada, on "Curly Top" by supplying piano and girl pianist to accompany little girl who sang song hits in lobby. Credit card with suggestion that sheet music could be bought at store was planted on piano and Harry reports that there were always "listeners" to the concert.

For street bally a Shetland pony and cart properly bannered covered surrounding areas, beauty parlors tied in featuring a Temple permanent, department store displayed the dolls and five and ten named a sundae for the starlet.

Bingham Uses Novel Stunts to Sell Shows

Ewell Bingham at the Howard Theatre, Taylor, Texas, sold "Top Hat" by standing in his lobby wearing a "topper" and distributing cards on which was cut of Rogers and Astaire in large star. Copy read "You may think I'm crazy wearing this top hat, but you'll go crazy too, when you see" etc., etc.

Another good-will stunt that Ewell uses is a football program listing the highschool schedule for the year with names and positions of current games. Merchant's ad paid for cost and program is dressed up with silhouette figures of players in action.

Cooper Holds Amateur Flower Display on "Orchids"

An amateur flower display contest was staged in his lobby by Max Cooper, Fox Theatre, Hackensack for "Orchids to You." Invitations were issued to all gardeners to participate, a number of local florists and greenhouses entered huge dahlia and orchid displays (see photo) and judges were selected from members of the Bergen County Garden Clubs. Prizes were monthly tickets to theatre.

To celebrate Mickey's recent birthday, Max staged a Mickey Mouse revue put on by local dancing school, distributed Mickey and Minnie masks to the kiddies and a drawing contest for which prizes were given was an added feature.

Henger Stages Boy Scout Parade on "Call of Wild"

The highlight of city manager George Henger's campaign on "Call of the Wild" at the Midwest Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla., was a street parade arranged with local boy scouts headed by chief of police. As an attention-getter, a specially constructed sled was mounted on car and driven through principal streets. Posters on sled and three men dressed as miners plugged the date.

Guest cards reading "the management of this hotel suggests you see" etc., etc., were distributed by leading hotels. Standees were used on front lawns of all public libraries and bookmarks given out.

CURRENT KID CLUB ACTIVITIES

Managers Report What They're Doing and What Can Be Done to Encourage These Organizations

IN detailing operations of theatre kid clubs, the name of Manager Louis Charninsky, of the Capitol, Dallas, comes immediately to mind, for this member has built gratifying grosses upon this form of activity. Louis changes the slant frequently to keep the youngsters interested and at present is up to his ears in a Buck Jones Club tied into the showing of that star's serial "Roaring West" now current at the Capitol. The club is tied into a Saturday morning broadcast sponsored and paid for by local department store which continues the idea until the serial finishes on Dec. 31.

Candy shop in theatre lobby gives membership card for first purchase of certain brand of candy bar and membership card is also given out free in the children's department of the sponsoring store. Card obtained from candy store if retained by holder entitles him to a five-cent admission to the theatre during 15-week period. Same applies to cards at store of sponsor.

Children up to 10 years of age admitted at this price on matinees of Saturday, Sunday,. Monday, Tuesday, throughout run of the serial.

To participate in the weekly Saturday morning broadcast from the stage of the theatre, held from 8:30 to 9:00, youngsters must apply at the children's department of the store. Applicants then present themselves at designated dancing school for tryout, dancing teacher and Charninsky deciding upon routine of the stage show and broadcast. All club members see the broadcast, serial, shots and feature which follow.

Further buildup is as follows: Theatre and store run weekly copy on kid program in newspaper ads with no increase in Capitol space. Local paper owning radio station runs story and cut each week on club activities and talent to be presented.

Radio Station Distributes Blanks

Membership cards, to the number of 15,000 are provided by the theatre, distributed by candy shop and department store. Application blanks and heralds are furnished and distributed by radio station. Station also makes daily announcements on the club's activities at the theatre. Theatre further furnishes small lobby display and has run trailer for the first five weeks of the tieup.

Charninsky writes that the broadcast from the stage is bringing in a lot of adults who pay the regular admission. Stunt is going over well and promises to hit a membership of from 15 to 20 thousand youngsters. Total cost to theatre for the club idea is $27.50.

Bill Dworski's Club Sets 1,000 Member Goal

From the Madison Theatre, Mansfield, Ohio, Manager Bill Dworski reports the profitable functioning of his "Warner Bros. Madison Theatre Kiddie Club" inaugurated with the reopening of school and now going strongly to reach a membership of 1,000, if this figure has not been exceeded at this writing. Dworski says his Club is paying its way and more and gives details of operation.

Town was flooded with circus heralds on the coming event explaining what was in store for the youngsters who joined up. Tom Mix serial started with first Saturday meeting with cartoons, prizes, acts and games provided in addition to full length western features. Adults were invited to attend meetings at regular matinee prices.

Special lobby displays on the Club each week include 40 by 60 to advertise serial, one sheet on the current western and extra cards on cartoons and other added attractions such as games, contests, stage acts, etc.

Newspaper campaign started with five inch on two-column display in "back-to-school" section, added art and story included. Also publicity and photos regularly on club activities including plugging of serial. On Fridays, theatre ads detail current Kiddie Klub attractions.

Trailer against animated background of playing children reads as follows:

"Hey kids—Madison Kiddie Klub Meets Every Saturday at 12:15—Join Now—Special Show for Kiddies at No Advance in Prices—Loads of Fun—Free Prizes—Serials—Westerns—Games and Acts. Fill Out Applications and Leave at Boxoffice—Serials and Westerns Shown at First Show Only 12:15—Come Early."

Screen also announces prizes to be given and special attractions such as the western feature and other items of interest.

House Staff Enrolls Kids

Children are enrolled through house staff distributing application cards and distribution by enrolled members to their friends. From the stage during the meetings, Bill invites further applications and says that he and his side-kick Don Jacobs usually are met by a line of waiting youngsters.

Membership is further stimulated by contests with prizes to members bringing in largest number of applications and each child when enrolled in addition to his card is booked according to birthdate.

Dworski says the club is building weekly for the following reasons. Children have so good a time they rave about Club to parents and friends. Shows are booked with direct appeal to youngsters and the prizes promoted weekly from merchants also keep the juveniles interested.

Everyone leaves with feeling of having received more than money's worth in entertainment and added fun with parents especially appreciative that children can enjoy an afternoon of wholesome entertainment. Thus many youngsters are sent to the show while parents are shopping.

Bill also notes that the added entertainments given during the kiddie programs are attracting an ever increasing number of adults to the first Saturday show.

In previous meetings, Popeye pencil boxes and Popeye balloons, roller skates, books, paint sets and color cut-out books have been the prizes. At one session, girls competed for Mickey Mouse alarm clock and boys for Dizzy Dean wrist watch.

Numbers of 10 members appear weekly on box office allowing them free admissions to current meeting, and all children receive birthday cards extending happy returns of the day. Cards include an invitation for parents to see current show.

Ben Katz Gives Outline For Children's Club

For further information of managers interested in kid clubs, Ben Katz, Warner Theatres Milwaukee zone, publicist adds these:

Club may be named after cartoon character, star or theatre with announcement of start in teaser trailer three weeks ahead. Explanatory trailer runs two weeks ahead, and a week in advance trailer announces distribution of application blanks and first meeting date.

Blanks should contain name, address, phone and birthday with space for parents' signature, applications filed in duplicate, one alphabetically and the other according to birthdays. Katz says membership cards should contain name and birthday of member, signature of manager, membership numbers for prize drawings, etc., and Club pledge on reverse side.

Ben stresses need for strong program of special cartoons, comedies and western feature for opening and advises start of club with opening of serial. Local prominents should be invited to first meeting and special buildup sought in newspapers.

He also favors election of officers to conduct following meetings with each officer given specific duties to perform, such as handling membership, in charge of entertainment and in charge of house, etc. School, P.T.A.'s and merchants' contacts, the last for prizes are also listed.

Stunts suggested include candy giveaways, promoted toys, attendance prizes, kid talent stage shows, pet shows, ice cream matinees, marbles tournament, doll and model airplane contests, costume, coloring and pie-eating competitions, grab bag parties, kiddie revues, minstrel shows and treasure hunts.

In closing, Ben writes: "Never kid your kiddie patrons and make sure that everything you promise them is on the square."

LOEW'S

HOOT MON. On a bra' bricht moonlicht nicht Les Pollock, Loew's Rochester, Rochester, N. Y., promoted local Scotch Pipe band for "Bonnie Scotland" bally.

"Smile", Says Addison, "What Can You Lose?"

"Lead with your right—and smile" is the advice of H. M. Addison, district manager Loew's Northeastern Division, for scoring a knockout in the theatre business, from a box office standpoint. Broadway could take a leaf from Main Street and issue a couple of new bank books, which are sorely needed from all accounts, in Mr. Addison's opinion.

"The patron who comes to the theatre to be entertained wants to find himself in a congenial atmosphere," Mr. Addison asserts, and the success of his ideas may make them well worthwhile elsewhere. "The chic uniform, the ready smile, the maximum of politeness and courtesy are an absolute necessity to an evening's enjoyment—BUT when rendered with an air of snobbishness or complete detachment it nullifies entirely the good will intention.

"It is personal service that counts today. Even the street car conductors and motormen caution passengers, 'Watch your step, please.' The atmosphere must carry out this impression, the manager on the floor—a ready handclasp for his friends and acquaintances—'Who is that fellow?' 'That's the manager.' 'He seems glad to see everyone, doesn't he?'

"Simple. Doesn't cost a nickel. But it pays.

"Talking about the public utilities, just look through your home town paper and pick out a public utility advertisement. Maybe they don't appear very often, but just check up on them. Notice how many are strictly institutional—selling good will only. Telling their aims, their efforts at service, their cooperation in civic advancement. Ever think of doing that?

"Box office results hinge just as much on good will as they do on good shows, for if your audiences are your friends you and your theatre will draw them regularly."

Contests Aid Sharrock On "Call of the Wild"

Prizes were awarded kids by Raleigh Sharrock, Palace Theatre, Morrilton, Ark., in a "Call of the Wild" contest for the best representation of a Klondike miner with dog team and sled. Race started from theatre where kids hitched their pets to an assortment of sleds and wagons and proceeded to finishing point. Through tieup with sporting goods store, surprise "supplies" packages were given winners. Accompanying photo shows some of the contestants lined up with their "huskies."

Another contest Raleigh put on was done through cooperating jeweler whose window displayed gold nuggests. Blanks were available at store and theatre for contestants to fill in their guess as to weight of the nuggets. Winners' names were posted on easel in lobby.

Entire front was converted into a log cabin with snow, traps, skins, furs, pine trees, etc., topped off with blow-up head of Gable.

Weigh Yourself and Win Tickets, Caldwell's Gag

A nine-foot compo board display entirely surrounding weighing machine in front of five and ten (see photo) was one of the highlights of Wally Caldwell's "Melody" campaign at Loew's Stillman, Cleveland, with tickets awarded those receiving weight cards bearing photos of any of the three selected stars appearing in the picture. Stills of the stars were planted on the display.

Loud speaker over box office played records in advance and during engagement, atmospheric compo board display covered entire front and through tie-up with General Foods, heralds were distributed through chain grocers. Eleanor Powell suit and coat windows were secured featuring large oil painting of the star in background, flanked with stills, picture and theatre copy. Exclusive haberdasher also devoted window to display of men's fashions, and hairdresser plugged a Una Merkel coiffure.

Joseph Steinmetz assisted on the campaign.

YOU ARE INVITED TO JOIN UP

GEORGE ROTSKY
managing director of the Palace in Montreal, Canada, is certainly no stranger to the membership. However, he has just signed on the dotted line and he must be welcomed via these pages. George was born in England and entered showbusiness at the age of sixteen with Allen's Circuit, with which he spent approximately fifteen years in and around Montreal and was retained by N. L. Nathanson when the theatres came under the banner of Famous Players Canadian.

holds down the manager's job at the Lyric Theatre, Portsmouth, Ohio, for Warners. Grattan started as doorman at the Harris in Findlay and later was made assistant, from there he went to the Kenton, in Kenton, Ohio, State in Lima, and was then transferred to the Strand in Akron, as assistant to Harry Cocks, managing director of that house. In August of this year Johnston left that post to assume his present managerial post.

manages the Clay Theatre in West Clayville, Penna., one of the Liberty Amusement Co. chain of Wellsville, Ohio. Charlie started as an usher five years ago when he was a soph in high school. He is the youngest manager on the circuit and in addition is a licensed projectionist in Penna.

EDWARD J. DE COSMO
is up in Gloversville, N. Y., managing Schine's Hippodrome Theatre. Seems as though most of the Schine boys are already members of the Club, Ed, so we're mighty glad to have you swell the list. Remember us to our friends in your city, Ed, and send along a recent acconut of your doings.

manages the Capitol Theatre in New Orleans, La., where, he doubtless knows, we have plenty of active round tablers. With all activity going your way, seems to us we ought to have had a contribution from you long before this. This is a gentle reminder that you've a moral obligation to uphold and we shall expect to hear from you shortly.

joins the Club from down in Whitesburg, Ky., where he manages the Kentucky Theatre. Some responsibility rests on your shoulders, Isaac, since you are the first to join the club from Whitesburg, so we shall have to depend on you to keep us posted on what's what down there.

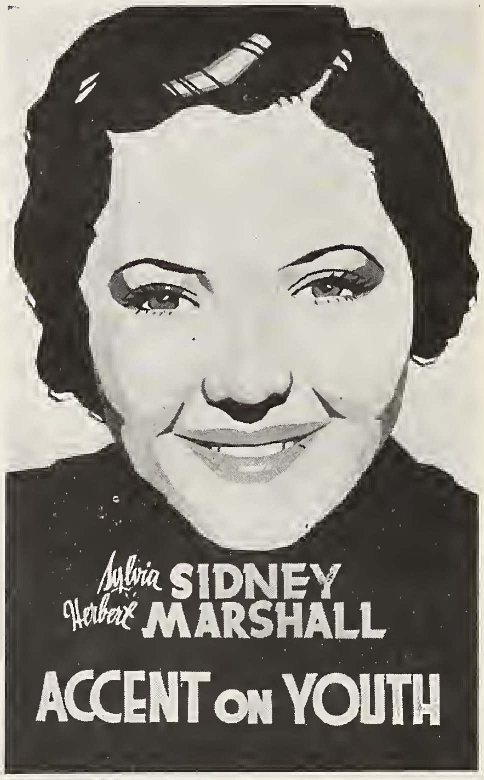
managing the Loring Theatre in Crockett, Cal., joined the club in the proper spirit, having forwarded an account of a recent trailer activity at his house. You've got to keep us informed, Frank, so we shall await further word from you with anticipation.



This poster is the creation of C. M. Griepenburg, Elks Theatre, Rapid City, S. D., for "Accent on Youth." Entire display was done in shades of blue.

is another member whose material has appeared in these pages. Rankin is the proprietor of the Plaza Theatre in Tilbury, Ontario, Canada, and has had a varied career, having sold shoes, owned a tea and coffee business and then bought his own house about a year ago.

manages the Texas Theatre in Ingleside, Texas, and is the first member to join the Club from that city. You know your responsibility doesn't end with joining up, Harville, you have to keep us posted on your theatre activities, particularly since we have no other member situated in Ingleside.

is the manager of the Belmont Theatre, Montreal, Canada, starting at the Princess as chief usher, later to other theatres and then to work for United Amusements as operator. Just left projection to assume assistant's job at the Belmont, from which post he was promoted to his present job.

has been at the Broadway Theatre, Danville, Va., for the past three years, where he acts as assistant manager. His boss recommends him highly and we hope Gene will be added to our list of active contributors among assistant managers.

acts as the assistant manager at the Rio Theatre, Billings, Mont. Glynn started ushering with Publix at the Denver in 1929, later changed to Bennetts as Chief of Service, and was with J. B. Melton about two years before coming to Billings, where he is very happy in his job and promises to keep us posted.

ABRAHAM A. GOLDSTEIN
assistant manager at the Rialto Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., comes well recommended by his superior. Abe was promoted from Chief of Ushers to his present position and lost no time joining the Club, where he doubtless felt he could take advantage of his brother members' stunts and in turn contribute some himself.

is the house manager of the Durfee Theatre, Fall River, Mass. Joe started as usher at that house when it first opened, a year later was promoted to head usher and so on until he attained his present position under W. S. Canning, general manager of the Nathan Yamins circuit.

is closer to home, managing the Lido Theatre in the Bronx. You have no excuse for not dropping in to get personally acquainted, Mordecai, being so close by, so remember, next day off we shall expect a personal call from you. We always like to meet the members whenever possible and the welcome mat is outside the door.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1935-36 season.

● The new Ambassador, Baltimore, Md. is the latest addition to the F. H. Durkee Enterprises. It is a splendid example of modern architecture and decoration . . . perfectly suited to the use of Heywood streamline theatre chairs as shown. The architect is Mr. John J. Zink.

Streamline Seating ADDS SPARKLE
TO BALTIMORE'S NEWEST HOUSE!

● In the new Ambassador at Baltimore, Md., Heywood Streamline Theatre Chairs complete the beautiful decorative scheme of this smart, modern house. The F. H. Durkee Enterprises (which operates the Ambassador) was one of the first organizations to discover and use the many possibilities of Heywood-Wakefield Streamline Seating. They realized that these modern, metal edged chairs would quicken traffic all over the house . . . furnish a ready eye guide to patrons . . . eliminate delays in the aisles.

● They also appreciated that these beautiful chairs were built to take plenty of abuse . . . to wear gracefully without showing it because of the protective metal edges. They knew, of course, that the smart, trim lines and pleasantly contrasting edges would do much to add beauty to any house, old or new. Heywood Streamline Theatre Chairs have many other advantages too, which we should be pleased to demonstrate in detail to you. A note to any H-W Sales Office will bring courteous, detailed information.

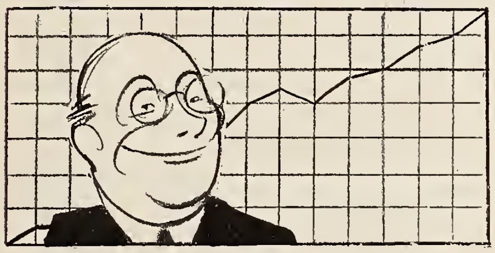
Better Theatres

. . . devoted to the physical operation, equipment, maintenance and construction of the motion picture theatre

Business Volume and Price Level Upward

ECONOMIC RECOVERY of an extent and rate warranting hopes of a greater increase than has been expected in 1935-36 grosses over those of last season, is indicated, however uncertainly, by current disclosures of business trends. At the beginning of this season it was estimated that theatre receipts were likely to maintain the 20% increase attained in 1934-35 over those of the previous year, but that any further ascent this season would not represent more than a 5% improvement over last. Business reports of this month, however, point not only to an acceleration of buying, but a higher price level generally.



In the report of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics it is stated that both industrial production and wages in 1936 would probably expand about 10% over those obtaining over the greater part of 1935, these prospective gains being attributed to rising activities in the durable goods industries.

"Country banks," the report also declares, "have an ample supply of loanable funds, and prospects indicate an increase in the volume of their agricultural loans," which statement extends the brighter outlook to the small towns in the rural trading areas.

At the same time the automotive industry reports increased schedules, which have been ushered in by an advanced selling season. Toledo manufacturers of automotive parts are doing their greatest volume of business in years, while in the same city power consumption of all industries jumped 24.8% in October over the same month of 1934.

A general and gradual elevation of the price level is expected by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics to continue during the next three years.

Although theatre admission prices have increased but slightly since the beginning of the season—and these have been rather generally accompanied by a policy of double features—purchases of equipment, largely for replacement, are steadily increasing, the principal theatre supply organizations reporting a raise in volume from 30% to 40%.

New Construction Changing Theatre Map

INCREASE in the number of new theatres being constructed and projected is promising substantial changes in the theatre map, according to a compilation of reports from all sections of the country. The more immediate effect is of course to add to the number of operating properties, but in many instances the locations and operating interests indicate that older theatres will be replaced by the new. With remodeling continuing at the high rate set last spring, the physical plant of motion picture exhibition is undergoing far-reaching revision.

The reports show that three conditions have brought about the new construction. Probably the most important, at least in the larger centers, is an increase in real estate activity resulting in the erection of commercial buildings in which theatres have been included, either with or without prior lease arrangements. Where the competitive situation is particularly severe, there has even been a scramble for such leases, despite over-seating.

This activity bears more or less upon another condition—population shift, which has been accelerated by the depression and is therefore to be noted especially in industrial areas. A third factor is created by the antiquated character of many theatres, which either cannot be satisfactorily remodeled for competition with modern houses that have since been erected, or cannot be remodeled at a cost bearing favorable comparison with that of a new house designed in the newer style and materials and constructed at today's lower price scale.

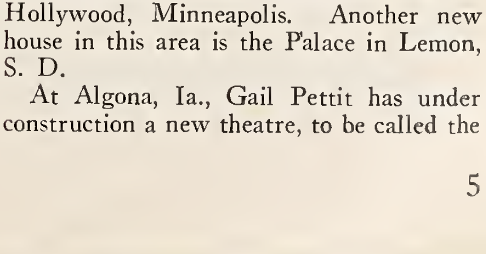
For the most part, current reports show continuance of the trend toward the neighborhood theatre, and particularly that of small capacity, which supports the contention of some operators that new construction will increase the number of exhibition units rather than the total number of seats. In the Dyckman Street district of New York City, the Alpine, which has but 600 seats, has been opened by Springer & Cocalis, large operators of neighborhood houses, and a house of similar size has been projected for the Greenwich Village district, the lease to which has been taken by the Grenvil Theatre Corporation, headed by Benjamin Knobel, who operates several houses in New York and around the metropolitan area.

At least nine theatres are being planned for Philadelphia, with Stanley-Warner interested in four of these. Regal Enterprises expect to build a new neighborhood house seating 750, while another is contemplated for South Philadelphia. These do not include the 500-seat Hollywood in Philadelphia, recently opened by Jake Fox.

A theatre of only 400 seats has just been placed under construction at East Hampton, Conn., by Nathan Lampert. In Mt. Union, Pa., J. C. Shapiro has just opened a 500-seat house. Plans for a new Warner house in Paterson, N. J., call for 1,800 seats.

THE WEST

In Chicago work has begun on the Normal theatre, to cost $100,000 and to seat 788. Four new theatres have been opened in Minnesota—the Strand, Cloquet; Lakes, Detroit Lakes; State, Owatonna; and the Hollywood, Minneapolis. Another new house in this area is the Palace in Lemon, S. D.



At Algona, Ia., Gail Pettit has under construction a new theatre, to be called the State, representing an investment of $30,000. Hillsboro, Kan., populated largely by Mennonites, whose religious beliefs have not previously permitted a theatre, will have a 500-seat house in December. It is being constructed by C. A. Bull, who operates the Novelty in Wichita.

In Cleveland the Shaker Heights Theatre Company headed by Myer Fine and Sam Stecker, has begun construction of a theatre in the Shaker Heights exclusive residential suburb. Still another planned for the same district is one to seat 1,700, to be erected by Paul Gusdanovic, P. E. Essick, Howard Reif and unnamed associates

Michigan reports add two others to the number of houses under construction in that State. Fred Moore, owner of the Crystal in Coldwater, is erecting a 700-seat house in Bronson, while Mrs. C. C. Alguire, who operates the Coloma in Coloma, is building one to seat 450. This will replace her present house.

Activity in new theatre construction in Texas is indicated by the program of Interstate Theatres for Houston alone, calling for one downtown theatre to cost $150,000, and five suburban houses to total $800,000 in cost. Other Texas locations of new theatres are Laredo, Sweetwater, Denton, Austin, El Paso, Dallas, Fort Worth, Monahans, Barber Hill and Anahuac. The latter two are recently developed oil towns, and each of the theatres, which belong to the Jefferson Amusement Company group, seats 300.

A house of Chinese architectural treatment in Oklahoma City is scheduled for opening the fore part of the year by Standard Theatres. In Durant, Okla., an 800-seat house will replace the State.

THE SOUTH

Construction in the South reflects the greatly improved economic conditions in that region. Work has begun on a $50,000 theatre, to be called the Ritz, in Natchez, Miss. The project is headed by Las Abraham. A new house is planned for the Brookdale section of Ginter Park, Richmond, Va. Other additions to Southern theatre properties, projected or recently opened, are:

One in Conway, S. C., H. G. Cushman, owner; Wilmer & Vincent's Lee in Richmond; the Crescent Amusement Company's project in Rockwood, Tenn.; the RCA theatre in Paris, Tenn.; the Dixie, Camden, and the Princess, Cookeville, Tenn. A new theatre in Pickens, Ga., has been leased to Hill City, Ga., interests. by Mrs. Myrtie Stevenson, the owner.

Film Theatres Teach Stage Sound Tricks

THE SUBJECT of stage sound re-enforcement is becoming increasingly more important, not only to vaudeville houses and legitimate theatres, but to the legion of smaller motion picture theatres which run occasional vaudeville or amateur shows and other stage features. Warner Brothers Earle theatre, one of the leading houses in Philadelphia, has been equipped with an elaborate RCA Photophone stage sound re-enforcement system, including four velocity microphones in the footlights, and two for the stage, with suitable amplifiers and speakers.

SOCIETY OF MOTION PICTURE ENGINEERS
AWARDED TO EDWARD CHRISTOPHER WENTE FOR OUTSTANDING ACHIEVEMENT IN MOTION PICTURE TECHNOLOGY
1935

Medal awarded to Dr. Edward C. Wente, of Bell Laboratories, at the fall convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. The award, which will be made annually for outstanding work in motion picture engineering, was made to Dr. Wente for his splendid achievements in acoustics.

A striking example of the remarkable realizm which modern sound amplification can provide is at hand in Norman Bel Geddes' new New York stage production, "Dead End." The locale of the play is an East River dock, and throughout the action of the play the audience hears the lapping of the waters, occasional steamboat whistles, nearby street and other noises, with an illusion of reality that inspired much praise from the New York dramatic critics. All the sound effects thus used were first recorded by RCA Photophone engineers on film, dubbed on phonograph disks, and reproduced from a triple turntable arrangement backstage, which faded the sound in and out.

Projection Heads SMPE Exhibit

IN ADDITION to an unusually large attendance, the fall convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at the Wardman Park Hotel in Washington, D. C., had a particularly significant exhibit of theaotre equipment. There were a number of developments to create this significance,, particularly with reference to the projection arc and new trends in projector design.

The International Projector Corporation exhibited projectors that included the Simplex-Acme unified sound-projector, which incorporates many simplifications in projector engineering.

The Hertner Electric Company of Cleveland exhibited its new motor-generator, which has been designed especially for supplying the Suprex arc.

Herman Devry, head of Herman A. DeVry, Inc., of Chicago, was in charge of the display of his company, which showed the latest model of the sound-projector brought out a couple of years ago. He reported that about 150 of these simplified projectors have been installed in theatres.

Copper-oxide rectifiers were exhibited by the Forrest Electric Company of Belleville, N. J., and the General Electric Company of Bridgeport, Conn. This type of rectifier is now being constructed in capacities up to 50-50 amperes—that is to say, two 50-ampere rectifiers in one case, forming a compact unit. In another exhibit the new Dworsky film cleaner was shown.

A new sound-projector was exhibited by RCA Photophone, while the Victor Animatograph Company displayed two compact 16-mm. projectors in suitcase models. Another 16-mm. model was exhibited by Andrie Debrie.

Adoption of Larger Reel Expected April 1

FURTHER STEPS toward the ultimate adoption by the industry of the 2,000-foot roll were taken when the Academy Research Council approved the recommendations of the New York committee representing the distributing companies. It is now believed that general adoption is assured April 1.

The recommendations approved propose that the theatre be supplied reels between 1,750 and 2,000 feet; that changeover continue to be indicated at the end of each 1,000 feet, and that the standard reel be 15 instead of 15½ inches.

Buying Electric Power for the Theatre

2.—DEMAND SCHEDULES AND LOAD FACTORS IN BILLING

By EDWARD B. SILVERMAN

HAVING DEFINED in the first part of this discussion (October 19th issue) the factors determining electric power costs we now come to the rate forms themselves. The five main rate forms listed in order of their origin are:

1. Flate rates.
2. Straight line meter rates.
3. Step meter rates.
4. Block meter rates.
5. Demand and block meter rates.

Of these rates the first four are gradually disappearing due to the fact that they caused a considerable amount of unfairness and dissatisfaction. The last one—demand and block meter—is gradually spreading and is now most frequently encountered.

More specifically defining the various types and origin of the various rate types, we find:

FLAT RATES

A flat rate is a fixed charge, usually per month per unit of equipment; for example $1 per month per 16-candle-power lamp. This was the first type of rate developed at a time when there were no kilowatt-hour meters, and there was no background on which to base costs.

STRAIGHT LINE METER RATES

The straight line rate (sometimes erroneously called a flat rate) is a single rate per kilowatt-hour (kwh), regardless of quantity. This was the next milestone in rate application and came into existence with the invention of the consumption meter. The principal reason for its short existence is explained by the fact that it did not allow any reward for increased use. An example of the straight line rate would be: 5c per kilowatt-hour.

STEP METER RATES

To reward quantity consumption of electric energy and endeavor to adjust properly the cost of service among different consumers, the step meter rate was developed. It was found, however, that this type rate had most of the faults of the straight line rate, and it was given up in favor of the block rate. An example of the step rate would be:

10.0¢ per kwh for	1 to 399 kwh
9.5¢ per kwh for	400 to 799 kwh
8.5¢ per kwh for	800 to 1,599 kwh
7.5¢ per kwh for	1,600 to 2,399 kwh
6.5¢ per kwh for	2,400 to 2,999 kwh
5.5¢ per kwh for	3,000 to 3,599 kwh
4.5¢ per kwh for	3,600 to 4,999 kwh
3.5¢ per kwh for	5,000 plus excess

Under this rate a customer using 399 kilowatt-hours per month would pay $39.90, whereas a customer using 400 kilowatt-hours would pay $38. Hence by wasting 1 kilowatt-hour, a saving of $1.90 would be made. While this type of rate still exists in certain areas, it has been largely eliminated.

BLOCK METER RATES

The name "block" as applied comes from the fact that each rate per kilowatt-hour applies to given number, or block, of kilowatt-hours, an example of the block rate being:

6¢ per kwh	first 2,800 kwh per mo.
4¢ per kwh	first 3,000 kwh per mo.
3¢ per kwh	first 18,000 kwh per mo.
2.5¢ per kwh	first 25,000 kwh per mo.
2¢ per kwh	for excess.

DEMAND AND BLOCK RATES

Now practically in universal use, the demand and block rate is the one that will be usually encountered by theatrical owners, particularly where motors form a substantial portion of the connected load.

Such rates appear in two forms, the first having a two-part charge, demand without any kilowatt-hours allowed, plus energy charges for all kilowatt-hours used; and the second, a charge for demand which allows a certain number of kilowatt-hours, and then an energy charge for all kilowatt-hours in excess of those allowed with the demand charge.

DEMAND LOAD AS APPLIED FOR BILLING

IN ACTUAL RATE procedure, demands used for billing purposes are usually determined either by measurement in terms of kilowatts or horsepower, using demand meters. The demand meters fall into two general classifications; namely, indicating and recording meters.

The indicating meter shows the maximum demand established, but it does not show the time such demnad was established. The recording demand meter not only shows the maximum demand, but it also shows the exact time such demand was established; moreover, it shows the demand at all other times of day or night, throughout the interval of time covered by the demand chart.

DEMAND CHART STUDY

Careful study of the demand chart is essential because it not only shows the actual demands established at all hours of the day as to time and maximum demand, but it can be identified with actual theatre operations with possible consequent alterations if practical. As a result of careful study of this chart and investigation for the causes of the "demands," various methods of load molding might be worked out by staggering operation of equipment with consequent reduction in power cost at no sacrifice of efficiency in operation.

Other factors that should be given regular and thoughtful attention are:

Prompt payment discount or forfeited discount—needs no explanation but must be watched.

Load factor discount—might have an important bearing on the decision as to addition of electric energy using devices.

Term discount—many utilities offer term discounts for contracts, dependent on number of years of service signed for.

Fuel clause—the fuel clause insertion in many rates has been usually explained as a protective measure for the utility against major price increases in the cost of fuel, as might occur in time of war. Although such fuel adjustment rate is seemingly a remote possibility for increase or decrease in the cost of theatre service, it possibly would amount to a considerable item to the utility.

Guarantee—all rate forms with the possible exception of the flat rate and the demand and block rate require some form of minimum, or guarantee, set up by the utility as a measure of investment protection. Under the demand and block rate the guarantee is usually based on the demand charge.

ITEMS TO NOTE IN RATE SCHEDULE

IN ANALYZING the actual rate applied to the theatre, as well as others that might possibly be applied, the following items should be checked:

1. Availability of the schedule (applicability to theatre service, minimum and maximum load limitation, etc.).
2. Rate.
3. Prompt payment discount (if any).
4. Other discounts, such as load factor, etc.
5. Minimum monthly bill.
6. Demand to be used for billing purposes (connected load, socket count, measured demand, etc.).
7. Fuel clause.
8. Power factor clause.
9. Contract period.

While it is not necessary that every thea-

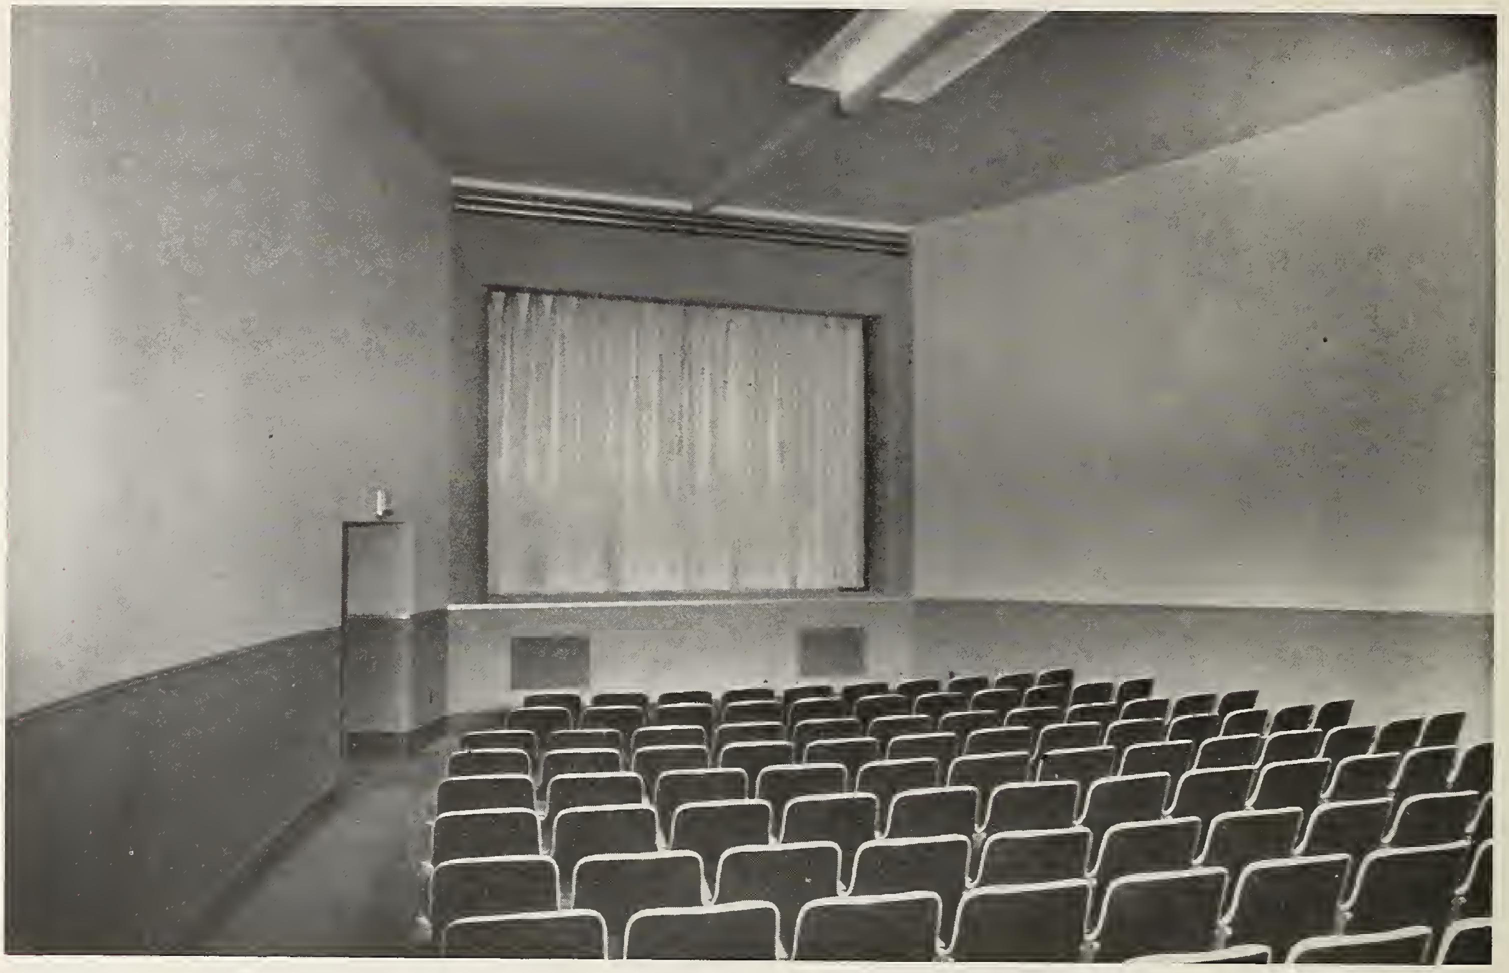
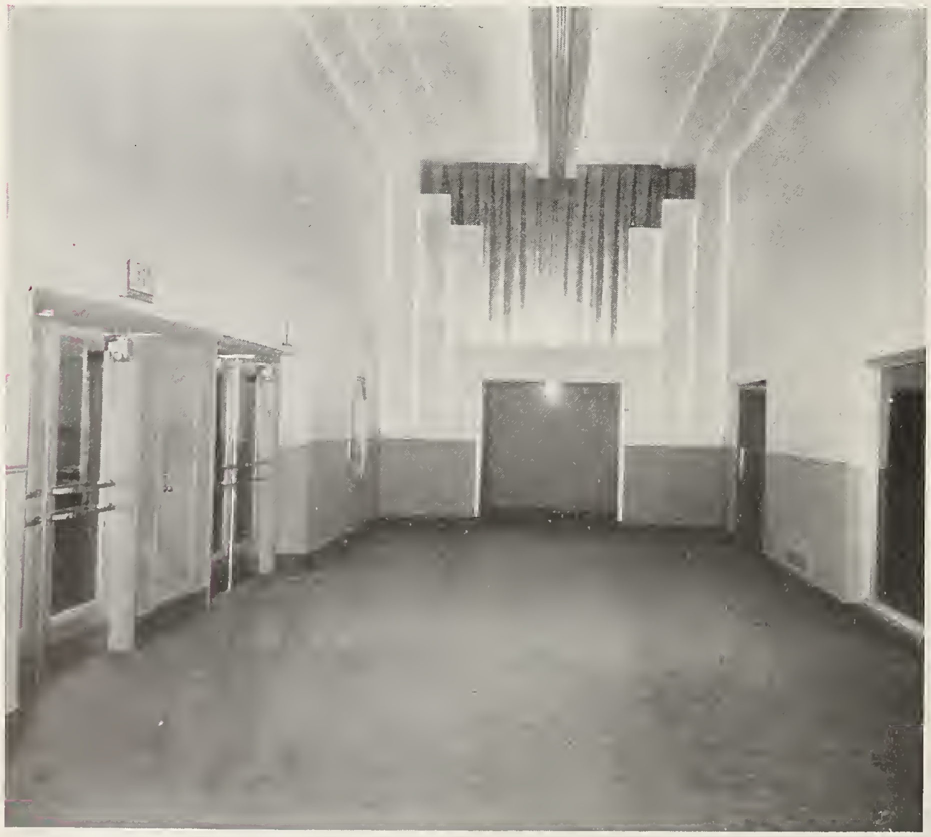
THE BEXLEY: TWO THEATRES IN ONE



View of one of the twin auditoriums, the plain surfaces of which are painted with light.



Looking toward one end of the single lobby.

THE NEW BEXLEY theatre in Columbus, Ohio, is two theatres. With a single projection room, it can and does present two performances at the same time. Soon after its opening a few weeks ago, the program featured a Western. In one auditorium were seated the children; in the other, adults. The kids could yell as loudly as they pleased without annoying their elders. The management reports the results of this experiment as entirely satisfactory.

There are some other aspects of this small theatre that are out of the ordinary, including projection and sound systems developed by the owners, Theodore Lindenberg, Sr., and his son Theodore.

ARCHITECTURE

The building represents a classic interpretation of modern simplicity and use of materials. The walls are constructed of Haytite block on a concrete foundation, with stucco facing outside, and plastered interior surfaces. The front is designed simply in a pattern of receding planes. Instead of the usual sign and marquee treatment, there are merely two strong lamps of light-diffusing glass, while from two columns spotlights illuminate the white surfaces in such a way as to trace the partern of planes in shadows. A novelty here is a carbon-arc spotlight, placed under a flagpole and directed up it. Its light has been seen five miles distant.

The two auditoriums are served by a single lobby, which is 44 feet wide (extending across the rear of the auditoriums) and 16 feet wide. The interior treatment throughout the public portions of the theatre, which was conceived by Mr. Lindenberg, Sr., consisted in painting the plaster walls and ceiling a neutral color, and installing a system of indirect illumination employing neon tube lighting in harmonized colors.

The auditoriums are divided by a solid wall reaching to the ceiling, and each seats 280. The projection room is located immediately behind the dividing wall on the same level with the auditoriums (see accompanying floor plan). The auditorium dimensions are 62 feet in length and 32 feet in width. The projection room measures 20 x 11 feet. Despite the comparative length of the auditorium, the seating (chairs are of 20-inch widths, supplied by American Seating Company) is on a quasi-radial plan with two aisles, one along each wall. Traffic from the lobby into either of the auditoriums is controlled by a directing usher.

PROJECTION

Two projectors (Simplex) are used, with the projection light beam reaching the screen by reflection. The beam is directed at a right angle, travels 15 feet to a port, where it is again reflected at a right angle, continuing 54 feet to the screen. This is accomplished by an optical and mirror system, the precise principles of which are not divulged by Mr. Lindenberg. The beam of each projector is bent in this manner, two beams reaching the two screens simultaneously. The screens, which are also of Lindenberg design, measure 8 x 10 feet.

SOUND SYSTEM

Mr. Lindenberg asserts that the sound system is the result of fourteen years of research and experiment, which he conducted for the most part at the Grandview theatre in Columbus. Details of the method employed he had not divulged, but states that the mechanism is largely confined to a reproducing mechanism located behind the screen. There are no horns.

The reproducer is contained in a cabinet about the size of an upright piano. Operating energy is received directly from the main power line. The inventor declares that this sound reproducing method represents the discovery by him of a way to control the relative energies of the sound components. The reproducer, which Mr. Lindenberg declares is capable of transforming reproducing from 15 to 15,000 cycles of constant intensity over the full range, can extend its range to 20,000 cycles with only a slight drop in volume in the extreme highs. He further states that the reproducer acoustically controls the harmonic responses so well that a trained musical ear indicates a sound spectrum of from 95% to 98% when transmitted to the reproducer through an unusually sensitive transmission system.

The sound system, as operated in the Bexley, is controlled by a special operator, or monitor, from the projection room. He sits in full view of the screen, hearing the sound just as it is heard by the audience and effecting control through a set of dials.

The auditoriums have not been treated acoustically with sound-absorbing materials. The reverberation period with the house empty, according to the owners, is 1.75 seconds; with a capacity audience, 1.25 seconds.

Heating provisions also entail novel arrangements, an insulated room being located directly above the furnace room in the rear of the building and centered beneath the wall dividing the auditoriums, and heated air being introduced and "stored" therein. The heated air is carried to this chamber by means of hundreds of tiny pipes leading from the boiler, and is drawn from here into the theatre by fans and forced draft. The ventilating ports are located above and below the screens, in the rear of the auditoriums, and at both sides of the lobby. With Carrier refrigeration equipment incorporated in the system, cooling is achieved through the same ventilating facilities.

About People of the Theatre

NEWS OF THEIR ACTIVITIES REPORTED FROM ALL SECTIONS AND BRIEFLY TOLD

B. F. Churchill, former owner of the Zephyr theatre in Osawatomie, Kan., has been retained as manager following transfer of the house to the Commonwealth Amusement Company.

N. E. Manwaring has succeeded Harold B. Kitmiller as manager of the National, a Wilmer & Vincent house in Richmond, Va.

Al Pickus has reopened the Stratford theatre in Stratford, Conn., following alterations.

Leo Fenton has taken over the Metro in Los Angeles from P. G. Cameron.

Charles Anderson, general manager of the Alpine circuit, has announced that this company is engaged in formulating plans for a new 500-seat theatre in Wellsburg, W. Va.

Glen Silver, owner of the Silver theatre in Mackinac City, Mich., is building a 250-seat house here, to bear the same name.

Another new theatre in Mackinac City, to seat 200, is being erected by J. E. Brown.

Homer Strowig has opened his new Plaza theatre in Abilene, Kan.

Glen Dickinson, head of the Dickinson circuit, has begun Sunday shows at the Gem theatre in Olathe, Kan., which has been closed to performances on the Sabbath.

Christopher A. Joyce, formerly assistant manager of the Allyn theatre in Hartford, Conn., has been appointed manager of the Regent in South Norwalk, Conn. John Gamble has been transferred to the Empress as assistant manager.

William C. Chesbrough is operating the Northern theatre in Columbus, which he took over from Mrs. Ione Wright. Chesbrough also operates five other theatres in Columbus, and three in Dayton.

The Gordon Theatre Company has reopened the Sorg Opera House in Middletown, Ohio, following remodeling. The theatre was damaged by fire several months ago. Robert Gibbs, Jr., is the manager.

Southio Theatres Company, operators of the Paramount in Middletown, has reopened the Strand theatre after alterations. The house is managed by Milton H. Kress.

Managers of three theatres in Michigan which have been opened by the Butterfield circuit, are Harry Small, the Garden in Jackson; Kent Talmadge of the Garden in Flint; and M. Van Buren, the Majestic, Grand Rapids.

The New Rodgers theatre has been opened in Cairo, Ill. The house, which belongs to the Rodgers circuit of Southern Illinois and Eastern Missouri, seats 800.

J. L. Anderson has purchased theatres in Cheraw and Chesterfield, S. C., from the H. H. Anderson circuit. Anderson has also taken over the Kingstree in Kingstree, S. C., which has been operated by R. S. Rogers, Jr.

Jack Purves has been named manager of the Orpheum in Winnipeg, Manitoba, and district representative there for RKO Theatres.

A new company, with the name of Dominion Sound Equipments, Ltd., has been formed at Montreal by former members of Northern Electric and Canadian RCA. The executives of the new organization are O. R. Harvey, general manager; H. S. Walker, chief engineer; B. C. Lewis, sales manager; and F. E. Peters, assistant secretary-treasurer. The new company will service theatres equipped with RCA Photophone and Western Electric sound systems.

The Kneisley Electric Company, Toledo, Ohio, has just been organized to manufacture theatre products. The active members of this firm are two engineers, Richard F. Kneisley and G. L. Larick. Their first product, trade-named Kri-tron Rectifier, is just being announced.

The Golde Manufacturing Company, Chicago, has moved from 1432 North Damen Avenue to much larger and more commodious quarters at 1728 North Damen Avenue. M. H. Goldberg says that the addition of a few new products and increased demand has made both larger office space and manufacturing facilities a necessity.

Ed Rowland, who operates a theatre at Texhoma, Okla., has taken over the Doric at Elkhart, Kan., formerly operated by W. D. Coop.

A. L. Hainline, owner of the Illinois theatre in Macomb, is spending $30,000 in remodeling this house. A new front, new balcony and new seats are being installed.

In Decatur, Gus Conston is spending $35,000 to remodel and completely renovote his A1 theatre. This house had been dark for ten years.

Suit for $25,000 filed by Alice Joy Brown, radio singer, against Balaban & Katz for damages, has been settled out of court. Mrs. Brown in her suit alleged that inadequate lighting in the Maryland theatre caused her to fall and injure herself while performing there. It was reported the case was settled for $2,000.

With a special advertising campaign and many tieups with merchants, the Essaness circuit in Chicago opened Town and Avon theatres with elaborate ceremonies. Both houses have been thoroughly remodeled.

The New Fox in Chicago, formerly called the Elston theatre, has been reopened after extensive remodelling by the G. C. S. circuit. More than $50,000 was spent in the refinishing process.

Vance Swartz has been transferred to Milwaukee as manager of Warners Egyptian theatre there. He was formerly assistant manager at the Capitol, Chicago.

Cliff Work, manager of the Golden Gate theatre in San Francisco, and in charge of the RKO exhibitor interests there, has reopened the Embassy theatre as a continuation house for Golden Gate theatre pictures. The deal was completed with Herman Cohn, operator of the United Artists theatre who also has a lease on the Embassy.

Peter Latchis, veteran exhibitor of New England, has purchased an interest in the theatres of Andrew Tegu in St. Johnsbury, Vt.; Woodsville, N. H.; and Lindonville, Vt.; as well as in Keene, N. H. Latchis is also reported to be engaged in a deal with Charles Ross on a Windsor, Vt., location.

The Schine circuit has taken over the Majestic in Ashland, Ohio, and also the State in Bucyrus. Milton Bryer will continue as manager of the 450-seat State. This gives Schines domination of Bucyrus, as they purchased an uncompleted theatre building sold at court sale for $12,500 a few weeks ago. The construction of the building originally was started by the Moose Lodge in 1929, and subsequently taken over by John Hoover, a Cincinnati contractor, who, however, was financially unable to complete it. The house, upon which work is rapidly progressing, is expected to be ready for opening Jan. 1.

The Palmetto and City theatres at Chester, S. C., have been leased to the L. C. Sipe interests. Fred J. Powell is in charge of the two houses for the new lessees.

The Morse and Rothenberg circuit of Boston, has extended into Pennsylvania, where the Pitt theatre, a former stage house in Pittsburgh, has been taken over for films.

Lucas & Jenkins, who recently leased the Fox theatre in Atlanta, have reopened it. E. E. Whittaker, Atlanta manager for the operators, is in charge.

Morgan Walsh and George Mann of San Francisco have added to their circuit of some 33 theatres by purchasing, in association with H. W. Poole, the Pine Tree theatre in Klamath Falls, Ore.

BEGINNING A SERIES OF CHATS WITH INTERESTING CITIZENS OF THE MOTION PICTURE THEATRE WORLD

He Manages Chicago's Ace House

INTERVIEWING ROY C. BRUDER OF B. & K.'S CHICAGO THEATRE

HE'S ONLY 34. But for 15 years Roy C. Bruder has been with the Balaban & Katz theatre circuit in Chicago, and today he's manager of their ace house, the Chicago.

It was at the Chicago theatre, in the Loop, that Sally Rand made her bid for headline fame with her famous fan dance. It was Bruder who four times in one day accompanied Sally to jail after they had been arrested for her dance. It was at this same Chicago theatre that 525,000 people, during August, 1934—the year of the Century of Progress—attended performances which were given seven times daily. Bruder was manager of the house at that time and it takes a real manager to run a theatre that grosses over a quarter of a million dollars in four weeks time. Sure enough, attractions like Amos 'N Andy, Cab Calloway and Sally Rand help bring in the money, but to take care of the crowds is a job that takes brains and perfect co-operation from the service staff.

HE USHERED HIMSELF IN

And when we speak of the service part of theatre management, that is where Roy Bruder shines. His produest achievement in his fifteen years of theatre work is the development of B. & K. service staffs that operate with courtesy and efficiency.

When Bruder started to work for Balaban & Katz in March, 1920, it was at the Tivoli theatre on the Southside, one of the deluxe neighborhood houses. Bruder started at the bottom of the ladder, as an usher at $18 per week.

After nine months at this job, he was transferred to the Chicago theatre, when it opened, in the capacity of assistant chief of service. He stayed at the Chicago until Balaban & Katz took over the Roosevelt, another Loop house, and it was here he got the job of assistant manager. After three years at the Roosevelt he went to the McVickers, another Loop first-run house, which was where Paul Ash, as a master of ceremonies, made his bid for fame. When the Oriental opened on May 9, 1926 in all its exotic splendor, Bruder was promoted to manager of this famous theatre, and there he reigned for two years. Following this he went back as manager to the place where he started as an usher some years before, the Tivoli, and after a short term there he was assigned as manager of the Chicago, in February, 1930, and he has been there in that capacity ever since.

VIEWS ON PERSONNEL

In looking over Bruder's crowded career one finds that playing an important part thereof is his great interest in athletics. Bruder from the very first of his career has been a staunch supporter of all types of athletic contests to promote good will and fellowship among the theatre circuits' employes. He is himself an athlete and won no little fame here for his ability as an amateur wrestler.

In picking men for the usher jobs in the theatres Bruder almost always selects lads who have had good home training and a pleasant background. The drifter and the transient type of chap who applies for a job is almost always rejected. The youngster who comes from a good family and has been properly raised is the type of youth Bruder usually selects.

Experience has taught him that this pays. Out of 100 boys interviewed, about ten are selected for the training classes, Bruder states. Out of this ten who undergo the advance training about, four or five are given jobs. The first three days are spent in a rigorous study of the manual prepared for B. & K. employes. After this instruction the lads are put "on the floor." From then on it is up to them whether or not they succeed.

In Bruder's opinion if a chap stays on the usher's job for at least six months he will usually stay in the theatre business forever, or at least in some similar line of work.

"We do not hire fellows who make a business of ushering," he added. "We pick high school or college students mostly. These chaps have a desire and ambition to get ahead and we want that type of fellow."

As proof that Bruder picks men of this type, one has but to scan the list of men who manage the B. & K. theatres. The greater portion of them have started in as ushers and worked up to positions of responsibility.

One of the outstanding orchestra leaders in the country today, Wayne King, was once an usher for B. & K. Bob Elson, famous in the Midwest as a radio sports announcer, is another seat guide who made good. Today in the B. & K. organization the following chaps can look back upon the time when they made their theatrical debuts as ushers: Bill Methe, Bruder's assistant at the Chicago; William Holden, manager of the Southtown; Ben Feldman, manager of the United Artists; E. C. Cobb, assistant manager at the Tivoli; Duncan Kennedy, assistant at the Southtown; Jules Landfield, assistant at the Gateway; and A. P. Conroy, manager of the Uptown. They all started at the bottom of the ladder.

Bruder keeps a record of the men he has trained—a record of their progress. Doing this is his favorite hobby and a most interesting one. It should be, and is, something of which he can be very proud. For it is a record of the development of men. The sign of an achievement which transcends many other forms of personal accomplishment.

Others developed in theatre service duties are the doormen, cashiers, porters, maids and cleaning staffs, all of whom have to receive a special training before they can qualify to take care of the important tasks which are entrusted to them —important because theatres depend so much on service, more than most any other type of business.

JUST B. & K. ROUTINE

A manager's day at the Chicago is a busy one. At eleven in the morning Bruder attends a screening. Then from one until four he is on duty attending to the multitudinous details which come up. From six in the evening until eleven at night he is also at his desk or about the theatre seeing that all is going smoothly. On Fridays at the Chicago the day starts at 8:30 a.m., with rehearsal of the stage show. Bruder has to be there from start to finish. The stage-shows at the Chicago are famous throughout the country and much of this is due to the attention given them by the theatre manager. In fact it was Bruder's special lighting of the Tivoli theatre during the old days when the "overture" was in important part of the stage-show, that made such an impression upon John Balaban and caused him to mark Bruder as one worthy of promotion.

A NOVEL PLAN FOR A THEATRE OF 800 SEATS

[In addition to an interesting disposition of available space, the new Ambassador theatre in Baltimore, Md., represents an original adaptation of modern materials for a theatre of this size and location, as the pictures, plan and description here, and a picture of the front on page 6, disclose. The architect, John J. Zink of Baltimore, has himself prepared the following descriptive article.—The Editor.]

BALTIMORE HAS long been considered one of the more conservative cities of the country, somewhat slow in adopting new ideas. This popular conception of the metropolis of the Maryland Free State and of the South, is not consistent, however, with the immediate popular approval of the new Ambasador theatre. Although located in the extreme northwestern part of the city, at 4604 and 4606 Liberty Heights Avenue, near Gwynn Oak Avenue, the patronage comes from all over the city. The Ambassador is an addition to the Durkee circuit.

The lot upon which the new theatre stands is 105 feet wide and 150 feet deep. The building itself is 84 feet wide and 135 feet deep. The front wall is set back from the lot line 15 feet, and the side walls are set off the lines approximately 10½ feet, thus forming the side exit courts which lead directly to the main street in the front.

ENTRANCE AREA

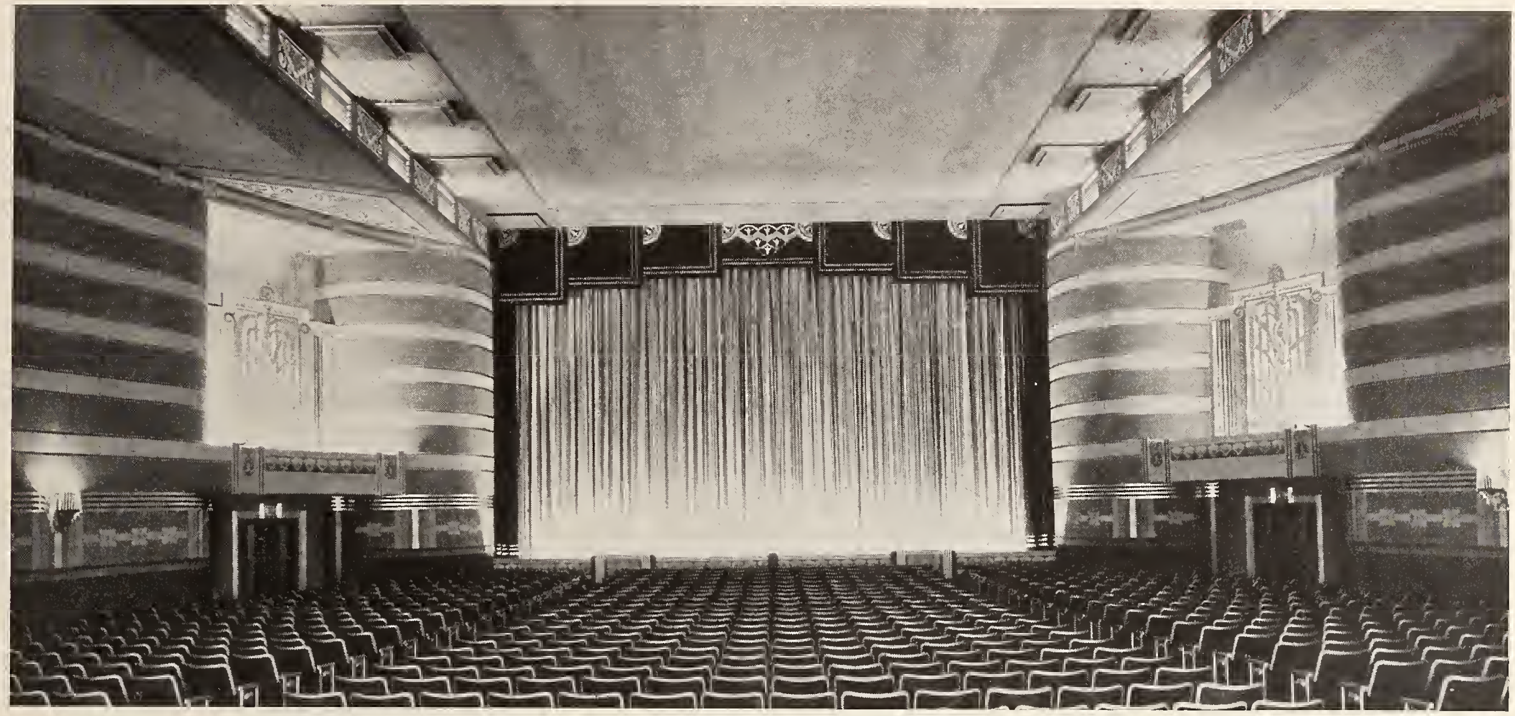
The ticket office is of the attached type and its facing is of black Vitrolite on which designs have been sand-blasted. This black Vitrolite is set in highly polished aluminum sash bars. In the center is an octagonal panel of clear plate glass through which the speaking and dispensing holes have been cut. The cornice of the office is made up of three lines of neon tubes of blue set in metal channels. The base is of verde antique marble.

On either side of the ticket office are two sets of double entrance doors with plate glass panels ornamented with sand-blasted designs. The transoms over these doors are similar.

On each of the one-story wings adjoining the entrance section the poster frames have been installed. These have permanent plate glass fronts on the street side, and the display is set into the frames from the rooms behind, thus making it unnecessary to do so from the street. The frames are illuminated by concealed reflectors. The openings have been so arranged that several sets of cut-outs can be installed if desired.

Under and in front of these display frames have been placed provisions for plants, with a rail around in such a position as to afford easy reading and yet protecting the walls. In front of these evergreen beds are circles likewise arranged for plants.

The round-ended protrusions over the one story wings conceal the stairs to a nursery and, on the other side, to the projection department. The various units of the building have been planned for comfort and convenience, all public sections such as rest and toilet rooms, nursery, etc.,



The auditorium, looking toward the stage, with wall banding in alternate tones incorporating acoustical treatment.

being on one side, the manager's office and projection department on the other.

The attraction board section of the marquee is made of removable raised glass letters illuminated from behind in the usual manner. Over the center of the front attraction board is the name of the theatre, made of reversed channel letters with neon tubes of red behind them illuminating a recessed background. Other parts of the marquee signs are of blue neon tubes, and the monogram is of green tubes.

The vertical sign consists of three line red neon tube letters on a black background, the letters being set in channels. The cap and marginal lines are of blue neon tubes, as are also the tubes running up the front on the right. At the top of the tower supporting the vertical sign are light beacons in amber color.

Behind the four recesses over the center portion of the front are colored lights, throwing blue, red, green and amber reflections against the walls. All display lighting on the front is continuous, no flashers having been used.

FOYER AREA

Approximately 5 feet behind the front doors is another set of doors forming a small vestibule. The foyer runs through full two stories in height. The floor is laid with a perforated rubber mat in sections, thus forming a protection to the carpeted floors of the auditorium. The base, to the top of the doors, is of Marsh Marble, the joints of which are of polished aluminum. The marble is of black and gold. Above the doors the walls are of plaster, and the relief ornamentation is of plain Celotex boards, cut and grooved. At either end of the foyer is a large sand-blasted plated glass panel, protected on the outside with wire glass. The standee posts are finished with cast aluminum trmmings.

At the right of the foyer, on entering, is a reception room with a fireplace equipped with electric logs. Over the fireplace is a circular mirror at the bottom of which is an ornamental lighting fixture. The floor of this room is of marble tile. Easy chairs, tables and lamps compose the furniture and are in the modernistic style.

The projection room proper is 40 feet long and 12 feet deep. It is lined with mineral Acousti-Celotex for sound deadening, and the machines are set on Korfund sound insulation material.

The nursery is 24 feet long and 14 feet deep. In this room children can enjoy themselves without annoyance to the main audience, while at the same time the parents are witnessing the performance from the same room.

AUDITORIUM

The auditorium floor gives the appearance of being level, since both the floor of the rear area and that in front of the proscenium are on the same elevation. However, the floor slopes to the center from both, providing safe access to the seats. For greater comfort and accessibility the rows have been set 34 inches from back-to-back. The seats are air-cushioned, as are also the backs. Distortion caused by wide angles is hardly perceptible. This is partly due to the fact that the center

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, 1790 Broadway, New York.

The Question:

WE ARE PLANNING a 350-seat theatre in a town of about 1,000 population. Could you tell us the best layout for a theatre of this size?

We expect to use a cement block or cinder block. We also expect to have a basement only large enough for the furnace, which will be located under the stage, using forced air for heat.

Can you tell us what the approximate cost would be for such a theatre building? There will be no balcony and booth would be directly over the lobby. Please give us appropriate dimensions.—R. J. S.

The Answer:

THE MOST economical plan for a 350-seat theatre is a center section of 13 or 14 seats across the width of the auditorium with a wall aisle on each side. This will require a width of 32 feet, and with 14 seats in a row, it will require 25 rows of seats or 62 feet, 6 inches. Add to this 48 feet, 6 inches for screen platforms, space between screen and first row of seats, foyer, lobby, and wall thickness. Thus a lot 32 feet wide and 120 feet deep will be large enough to accommodate a theatre of such seating capacity.

To estimate the cost of a theatre constructed of materials mentioned in your inquiry, a minimum cost of 18c per cubic foot should be used. This building will have a cubical contents of 76,800 cubic feet; therefore the cost of constructing such a theatre will be around $14,000.

The Question:

I CONTEMPLATE promoting a theatre site which I am going to try and sell. May I ask at this time several questions regarding the above.

The site in question is 40 x 175 and the ground grade runs up from the main street. I would like some suggestions on how to build a reverse theatre in the rear owing to the grade which exists. Should you know of any reverse houses, I would greatly appreciate a plan on same if possible. The site is located on a corner and has the best location in town.—J. R.

The Answer:

PERSONALLY, I AM not very familiar with the reversed floor slope for theatres and have never designed such a theatre. However, I can state that there are several theatres in New York City where this method has been employed, and to assure yourself if such an incline would be satisfactory, it would be well to make a personal investigation, as I hesitate to recommend it.

It may have its advantages, especially for a site such as the one on which you intend to erect your theatre, and since you are contemplating to lease the house, you had better have a conference with your prospective lessee and find out if they would also be satisfied with that type of floor incline. Do not misunderstand me, I do not condemn it; but, each of us has his own individual opinions.

If the grade slope of your lot is not too steep, you may be able to regain a certain percentage of it by sloping the lobby floor and place the heating plant under the front part of the building and only excavate for the incline of the auditorium floor. Since your lot is 175 feet deep, if there are dressing rooms required, you will be able to place them on the stage floor level back of the rear stage wall.

The Question:

WE ARE FIGURING on putting up a theatre in this town and want only about 250 seats. There is a population of only 1,500. We cannot build, of course, unless we can build reasonably. We must get all we can for our money.

If you have any ideas that would help us, we would appreciate having them. We want to know about the size of the auditorium we would need, ventilation, seating, and all the rest that a theatre needs.

—M. T. W.

The Answer:

I AM AFRAID you have not have not given me much information to work on, but I will submit such suggestions as I can. Since you want a seating capacity of 250, the best dimension for your theatre is a width of about 34 feet, and a length of something like 85 feet. This would let you have a seating arrangement with a center bank of 13 or 14 seats, an aisle along each wall, and 20 rows.

You will have to have a screen platform of something like 14 feet in depth; then there should be a distance of not less than 10 feet between the platform and the first row of seats. You will also need a lobby—say, one with a depth of about 8 feet. To these arrangements you can add whatever you can for the provision of toilet rooms and entrance space. The projection room can be located over the lobby. The average height of the auditorium should be about 25 feet.

I have not gone into the matter of decoration because this is, after all, a matter of taste; moreover you have given me little or no information to guide me. I suggest that when you have got your theatre pretty well along, you call in a local decorator, or one from a nearby city, to give you some schemes.

The Question:

I AM THINKING of building a small theatre, probably not over 300 seats. However, I want a stage because this town goes for home talent plays and entertainments. I don't know what such a building would require, hence am appealing to you for some advice. Any help you can give me will be much appreciated. I would like to know especially about the size, the size of lot I will need for 300 seats, etc.—R. D.

The Answer:

YOUR CONDITIONS seem to be special ones, otherwise I would not advise putting a stage in a 300-seat theatre. The proscenium arch should not be less than 34 feet in width, and the stage itself should be at least 25 feet in depth. With a stage of these dimensions you would need an auditorium 50 feet wide, which would give you twenty-eight seats across. I advise you to place your aisles on each side, rather than in the middle, giving you a center bank of fourteen seats, and two walls banks of seven seats each. You can seet that this would make a very shallow auditorium for you need only 15 rows.

The slope of the floor would be 24 inches. The proscenium opening should be at least 20 feet high, which would make the height of the auditorium ceiling at its highest point at least 22 feet. You could put the projection room over the lobby.

TO YOUR POTENTIAL CUSTOMERS . . .

A Good Theatre Front Means a GOOD THEATRE!

A handsome, modern Pittco Theatre Front creates a valuable, if unconscious, impression in the minds of all who see it. It says to them: "Here is a progressive, up-to-date theatre, offering good, entertaining pictures." And since these qualities are exactly those which draw and keep patronage, a theatre front which expresses them is bound to bring you bigger business, better profits. On the other hand, an old-fashioned, uninviting theatre front creates just the opposite impression, and if that theatre succeeds, it does so more in spite of, than because of, its front.

It's an easy matter to have a front on your theatre which creates the right impression. Pittco Store Front Products, famous the country over for their success in the store field, are also ideal for theatre remodeling. Get a local architect to use them in designing a new Pittco Theatre Front for you . . . and our staff of experts will gladly cooperate with him on design and installation. KEEPING THEATRES CLEAN OF VERMIN

Rats are destructive, lesser pests are dirty. Their complete eradication is possible with these simple, easy methods

VERMIN IS always associated with dirt and filth. Consequently when theatre patrons encounter mice, rats or roaches, they get the definite impression that the theatre is not clean, regardless of how bright the brass is polished or how well the floor is swept.

The familiar house-mouse is probably the species of rodent most frequently encountered in theatres. There are, however, several species of mice in this country, both native and foreign breeds.

The presence of mice in a theatre is considered by many managers to be of little importance. However, their elimination or destruction is a matter of good, clean housekeeping.

The rat, brown rat, frequently referred to as the house rat, wharf rat, sewer rat or black rat, is perhaps even more repulsive and obnoxious. The black rat and the roof rat are the European progenitors of practically all the species of rat found in this country. Rats vary in size from 6 to 8 inches in length and a fraction of a pound in weight, up to 20 inches in length and 2 pounds in weight. Rats are more or less carnivorous, and when several are confined in a cage the stronger will soon kill and eat the weaker ones. In times of food scarcity rats become extremely bold and aggressive. There have been instances where they have bitten patrons of a theatre.

KINDS OF POISON AND THEIR USE

POISONING IS the accepted method of destroying rats, where poison can be used without harm to human beings; otherwise traps or cats are used.

The U. S. Biological Survey recommends powdered barium carbonate. This has advantages over phosphorus, arsenic and strychnine in that it is odorless and tasteless. Barium carbonate is readily eaten and it is slow in action, giving the rat or mouse time to search for water. Barium carbonate is a heavy white mineral salt, mildly poisonous, tasteless, odorless, slow-acting, and inexpensive. It is fatal to domestic animals.

RED SQUILL

The U. S. Bureau of Agriculture recommends red squill. This is not essentially a poison as it is harmless to human beings and domestic animals. Red squill is the product of a marine vegetable growth from the Mediterranean sea. It resembles a red onion and, when dried, is ground into a very fine powder.

BAITING

In poisoning rats, both government bureaus recommend a variety of baits (which, of course, should be used separately): (1) meats—hamburger, fish sausage, liver, bacon; (2) vegetables of fruits—canteloupe, apple, tomatoes, banana, corn, squash, boiled carrots, baked sweet potato; (3) cereals—oatmeal, cornmeal, bread, flour, cake; and (4) cheese.

When using traps, use plenty of bait. If they don't seem to relish one kind of bait, try some other kind; never use the same kind of bait two nights in succession, and never leave the old bait in the traps. Experience has proved that traps are often effective against mice, but they seldom are of much use against rats. Rats seem to be very much more wary of traps than mice.

In planning a poisoning campaign against rats, the object is to destroy every rat in one application. This means a very ample supply of poisoned bait in all possible locations. The selection of the bait and its location is perhaps more important than the kind of poison used. Great care is required in selecting, mixing and distributing the poisoned bait. It is sometimes worth while to distribute unpoisoned bait for two or three nights in order to determine just what items of food the rats really eat, and just what locations attract them.

Red squill is administered to the rats in chopped meat, either cooked or uncooked, or in cornmeal; or it may be mixed with butter and spread on bread, which is then cut into half-inch cubes and distributed.

The powdered barium carbonate should be thoroughly mixed with and worked into the soft variety of baits in proportions of one part of the drug to four parts of bait. Again, the location of the bait is very important. Uneaten barium carbonate bait should always be removed the following morning, as it becomes bitter after about 12 hours, and rats will not touch it. Remember, barium carbonate is poisonous to human beings, therefore care should be used in handling it and in caring for the utensils or implements used to mix it. It should not be placed in any portion of the theatre accessible to the public where some child might touch it or fall into it.

MEAT AND FISH

An excellent bait is fresh fish ground in a meat chopper; canned salmon, canned mackerel and sardines have been used successfully. Red squill seems to work very well with fish baits. Mix one ounce of powdered red squill with enough water to form a thin paste free of lumps, then add one pound of fish and mix all thoroughly.

Another bait which works very well with either red squill or barium carbonate is fresh ground meat, in proportions of one ounce of red squill to one pound of meat, or one part of barium carbonate to four parts of meat. Be sure to mix the compound very thoroughly so that a rat taking just one bite will get his proportion of poison.

MIXING BAIT

All bait should be freshly mixed just before it is distributed to the selected locations. It should be distributed after the theatre is closed at night, when the rats come out to hunt for food. A large number of small portions of bait, about the size of marbles, is much more effective than a few large portions, as you can cover more area in that way.

Barium carbonate bait should be removed and destroyed after one night and fresh bait distributed. Red squill bait is generally good for about three days; after that it should be replaced with fresh bait.

When applying bait, great care must be exercised to remove all other sources of food supply. Sweep the auditorium floor and the plenum chamber under the floor, if there is one, immediately after the break of the show, so as to remove all remnants of candy or cookies. Empty all trash containers or remove them to the outside immediately after the show. Rats and mice can and will eat all the candy and crumbs on the floor within one hour. As a matter of fact, the sweeping of the floor usually is the last thing done by the cleaning force, and it should be the first.

PRE-BAITING

Pre-baiting is very much worth while as it gives one a definite idea of how much bait will be needed and where to place the bait so that it will be most effective. Pre-baiting consists of exposing fresh, unpoisoned bait prepared and distributed exactly as the poisoned bait would be.

HOW TO STAY RID OF RATS

AFTER RATS have been eliminated, the job is not complete until the theatre has been to some extent made rat-proof. Rat infestation results from conditions favorable to them—namely, food and shelter. I have already covered the food angle.

PLUGGING OPENINGS

Rats won't live where they cannot get food. In order to keep them out of a theatre, all holes leading into the theatre must be stopped up. Many times pipes pierce walls, and generally there is room enough around the pipes for a rat to gain entrance. Such openings can be sealed with cement (a whole sack of which costs only a dollar) and the use of a trowel (which can be bought in the five-and-ten-cent store). Grilles or openings for ventilation purposes should be covered with wire mesh, just sufficiently fine so that a rat cannot get through it. A commercial grade of steel wool (it can be purchased in bulk from any hardware store) stuffed into holes in walls form an effective seal against entrance. Rats will not go through steel wool.

Steel wool can only be used to best advantage where it is dry. All drains or sewers should be covered with a cast iron strainer or a wire mesh cover secured so that it cannot be pushed aside. After rat extermination, a new lot will be right back in a month's time unless rat-proofing is done and unless housekeeping conditions are improved.

RAT ODORS

Very often a poisoned rat will crawl away and die in some hollow space between walls, where the body will decay and cause an obnoxious odor. The location of the body must be determined and removed if possible. When it can be located but not reached, the odor usually can be controlled or destroyed by using a deodorant, such as Lysol or zinc chloride, either of which can be obtained at any drug store. Through a small hole in the floor or wall at the point of the odor, pour half a teacup of Lysol and seal up the hole with an ordinary cork. Repeat this treatment daily if necessary until the odor disappears.

CHEMICAL TREATMENT

There are certain odors which rats dislike; for example, naphthalene, creosote, carbolic acid and other coal or wood tar derivatives, kerosene, oils of peppermint and wintergreen, and certain powders, as sulphur, lime, lye and copperas. These might be called detergents, and it is advisable to use one of them regularly in treating around old or new rat burrows, open coal chutes, around holes that presumably have been rat-proofed, in organ chambers, in spaces under auditorium floors, and in basements, janitor closets, attic spaces, back stage, etc. Flake naphthalene of the usual household kind, sprinkled regularly in organ chambers or even in organ consoles where leather bellowes or zebra gut skins and sheep skin is used, will frequently save many dollars in organ repair bills.

About three years ago I made a very careful study of the rat conditions in a large group of theatres in one general section of the country. I found that sums of money up into the thousands were spent by this group of theatres every year for exterminating rats. A detailed study of the methods used by a large number of exterminating companies disclosed that not one of them did what might be called a 100% job. The best job done could only be rated at about 60%.

Rat extermination is more than an annual affair, it means continuous vigilance and treatment whenever positive evidence of the existence of even one rat is uncovered. A theatre manager should delegate a porter or janitor to take charge of the rat situation and should train that individual in the methods of rat extermination. The cost of ridding the largest theatre in the country of rats should not average more than $50 per year.

General cleanliness in and around the theatre is of course the most consistent protection against rats and other vermin. The sooner the theatre is thoroughly cleaned after the final performance of the day, the less inviting it is to these pests. Rats migrate to locations where they can find food. Therefore if rats are present in a theatre, they are either nesting there or have found food—scraps of candy or cookies or remnants of the lunches of employes. Therefore the manager should caution members of the staff about the disposal of any bits of food left over from lunches that many be brought in.

The destruction and complete riddance of rats is a part of good housekeeping and sanitation.—J. T. K.

TUBE RECTIFIER OF NEW DESIGN

A NEW low-intensity tube type rectifier, developed by the Kneisley Electric Company of Toledo, Ohio, is so designed that the entire weight of the unit is carried on the transformer mountings, the case merely acting as a chimney to provide adequate ventilation. It will furnish an output of from 12 to 35 amperes at 50 volts direct current, with the incoming line voltage varying from 200 to 260 volts.

The customary terminal board has been eliminated, all adjustments being made instantaneously from a special switching device incorporated inside the rectifier housing. Special transformer core construction has been provided for the purpose of rendering the unit noiseless.

An ammeter with a range from zero to 50 amperes, of the external shunt type, is furnished as standard equipment. The unit operates in connection with two standard 15-ampere Tungar tubes and is available in either 110 or 220-volt capacities.

Let's get down to Brass Tacks about F.H.A. Modernization Credit

You have read in the newspapers about F.H.A. Modernization Credit. It is time now to do something about it.

You may now modernize your theatre equipment and spread the payments over a period of years.

Under the terms of the National Housing Act, as amended recently, any sum up to $50,000 may be financed at a rate of 5% discount on 12 equal monthly instalments, with a maximum of 5 years to pay.

This constitutes the lowest rate and most attractive conditions ever made generally available for this type of financing.

This is your opportunity to bring your theatre and your equipment up-to-date. It is your opportunity to step up operating efficiency and attract larger audiences without impairing your cash reserves. The improvements should pay for themselves from the start.

So let's get down to brass tacks. If you are interested in discussing a modernization plan on F.H.A. credit, act now while it is available. Write us fully—or send this memo today.

Here are a few things for which Modernization Credit may be had:

IMPROVEMENTS AND EQUIPMENT incl. seating
- theatre fronts
- signs
- sound equipment
- air conditioning
- heating plants
- projectors
- cleaning equipment

and many others

PS Bear in mind that all types of business concerns, as well as hospitals, schools, etc. are also eligible for F. H. A. Credit. Please pass this information on to someone else who might also profitably use Modernization Credit to increase earnings or save maintenance costs.

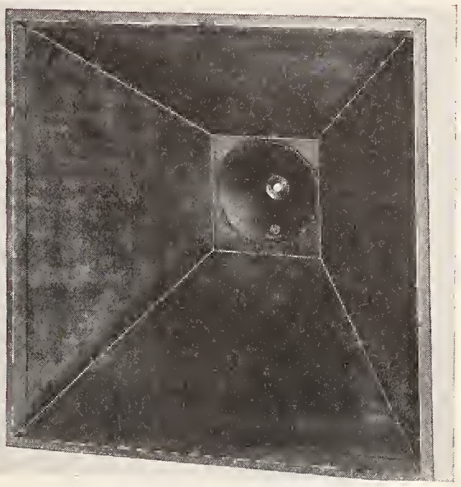
A SINGLE-SPEAKER ASSEMBLY FOR FULL RANGE IN SMALL THEATRES

The speaker (above) is of cone bracket type, 12 1/8 inches, with a depth of 7 3/16 inches, and weight of 15 pounds. At right is the field supply unit used with this system.

LOUDSPEAKER equipment consisting in a complete assembly of speaker baffle and field supply, brought out by Wright-DeCoster, Inc., of St. Paul, Minn., has been designed especially for entire coverage of the small theatre auditorium with response over the full frequency range of present recordings. The speaker field is adapted to a resistance of either 1,600 or 2,500 ohms, or any special field can be furnished on specification. When the field current is supplied from the amplifier there should be a minimum of 12 watts, and a maximum of 18 watts. For a 1,600-ohm resistance, the field supply illustrated here is employed.

This speaker system has two different input impedances, 10 ohms and 500 ohms.



Speaker installed in the directional baffle.

The 10-ohm tap is connected directly to the voice coil. The directional baffle designed for this speaker unit is 27½ inches square at the rim, and has a depth of 20½ inches.

For installation in connection with this equipment, a projection room monitor is available to be used in combination with a field supply of the same general type as that illustrated.

This reproducer system has been designed especially to meet the requirements of the smaller theatre, while retaining, according to the manufacturer, essential engineering features of a more powerful type of reproducer system, which also has been designed for full range coverage.

GAS ELECTRIC PLANTS FOR EMERGENCY POWER SUPPLY

FOR AUTOMATIC continuance of electric power supply upon failure of the regular local supply, or in isolated locations, plants operating on gasoline, natural gas or artificial gas have been developed by the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company. They have cost ratings per kilowatt about the same, according to the manufacturer, as the rating of a battery unit.

The control mechanism is so set that upon failure of the normal supply, the engine is started and carries its load within a period of approximately ten seconds after the power failure. The cranking energy is supplied by a small starting battery, which is kept fully charged by drawing a small amount of energy from the normal supply when the emergency plant is not operating. These sets, available in various capacities, are designed to carry the full theatre load, and full load rating is of course not limited to any fixed current supply since the gas engine supplies power to the generator.

These sets are available for the generation of either direct or alternating current. Thus they are indicated where certain types of equipment can be more efficiently operated on current other than that locally available.

Equipment and Materials

Reports on developments in products used by theatres

VENTILATED LATEX SEATING MATERIAL

- A superior material for seating, called Nukraft, is announced by the B. F. Goodrich Company of Akron, Ohio. The new material is a combination of hair-cloth and Latex, the latter being fabricated in figure-of-eight loops. The resilient strength of the Latex is suited to "bridging" the open spaces between seat springs, reducing the quantity of upholstery necessary, while presenting a smooth, comfortable surface through which it is impossible for the springs to protrude.

A double layer of Nukraft is applied above the burlap-covered spring unit, a very thin layer of cotton goes above that, and the seat cover above the cotton. The figure-of-eight construction of Nukraft permits ventilation, which would be impossible if sheet Latex were used, thus adding to seating comfort.

CENTRIFUGAL FILM PROTECTIVE DEVICE

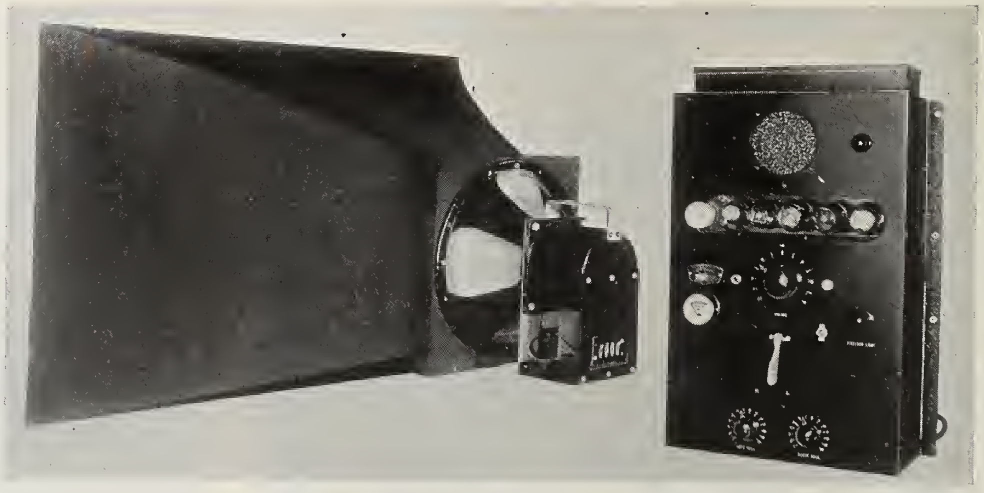
- The Edmison Film Protective Device utilizes a centrifugal switch, and a film sprocket that can be added to standard projectors. The sprocket is not driven by the projector motor or gears, but by the moving film, and its speed of rotation is therefore controlled by the film speed only. The sprocket drives a small centrifugal switch which operates whenever the sprocket speed, for any reason, declines. The switch is wired to relays mounted on the front wall of the projection room, by which the projection light is switched off, and the projector motor stopped, whenever the speed of the centrifugal safety sprocket declines.

The Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences releases the following statement concerning this device: "Tests indicate that the arc light is shut off in approximately one-third of the time necessary to ignite acetate film (the so-called non-inflammable film), thus precluding the possibility of a fire. Negotiations have been under way during the past few months between the Pacific Coast Branch of the National Board of Fire Underwriters in San Francisco and the Research Council representing the producing companies, and as a result 20% reduction in insurance rates was granted for buildings housing projection machines equipped with the device.

"The Board of Fire Underwriters' ruling covering the insurance rate reduction applies to theatres as well as studio projection rooms."

"DE-ION" FLIPON CIRCUIT BREAKERS

- Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company announce circuit breakers for fuseless protection of 15 to 50-ampere circuits, using thermally actuated bi-metals,



Equipment in a full range amplification and reproducer system brought out by the Mellaphone Corporation of Rochester, N. Y. The outfit consists of a new model amplifier, a speaker and a directional horn baffle. The amplifier features a built-in monitor speaker with a separate volume control. It is of four-stage type with an undistorted output rated by the manufacturer at 15 watts. The system is designed for theatres up to 2,000 capacity as well as smaller houses. The amplification system comes complete with tubes and instructions for installation with present soundheads.

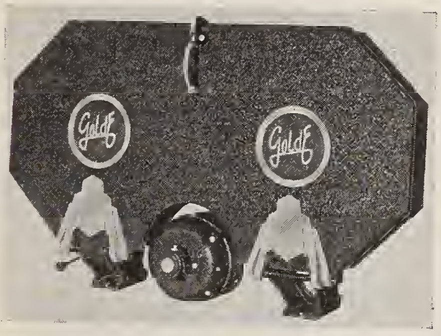
or assemblies of two different metals, one of which expands more rapidly than the other when heated. Current passing through the metals heats them, and the unequal expansion bends or warps the assemblage, with resultant circuit-breaker action. Unlike fuses, these breakers never have to be replaced, only reset, for which purpose a suitable operating handle is provided. The handle has three positions, namely, "On"—"Off"—"Tripped." Multiple circuit-breakers with common handle and common trip are available. The mechanism is totally enclosed in moulded composition material.

SINGLE-UNIT SOUND PROJECTOR

- Characteristics of the DeVry unit sound-projector as now designed are given in a bulletin which the manufacturer, Herman A. DeVry, Inc., of Chicago, is now preparing. A summary of these characteristics follows:

Multiple-link silent chain drive for "warble-free" operation. Doubled V-belt between motor and mechanism, replaceable without stopping the machine. Incandescent lamps from 1,000 to 2,400 watts, either bi-plane filament or prefocussed bi-post type, or arc lamps of any size or make, are optional. Rear barrel shutter, giving longer illumination period per frame, and facilitating the use of any light source or any size lens. Geneva Cross intermittent, webbed to avoid bending of points, and built to a tolerance of less than 1/2,000th of an inch. Sprockets engaging not less than six perforations, while some engage as many as ten perforations; simplified framing mechanism, full-floating tension shoes, non-freezing bronze and ball bearings, and rigid projector center plate mounting film-handling mechanism, are other features.

Motors may be either of constant-speed type or governor controlled, and operate through the patented Robertson filter wheel for absorption of vibration. Film take-up is motivated by silent chain, and the upper magazine spindle is equipped with an adjustable drag brake. Automatic fire shutter and manually operated dowser are standard equipment. Upper and lower magazines accommodate 2,000-foot reels.



Automatic rewind developed by the GoldE Manufacturing Company of Chicago. It embodies the double-mounting feature contained in other GoldE models. It is operated by a General Electric motor mounted on a flexible rubber base for quiet operation. Distribution is through all dealers.

New "Everbrite" Silhouette Aluminum Letters Now Available in 3 Sizes

Merely by changing from old-fashioned changeable letters to the modern Silhouette type you can bring an up-to-date atmosphere to your entire show front.

The new "Everbrite" Silhouette aluminum letters are easily installed, quickly and simply changed and spaced. They lie flat on the glass, making a black and white contrast that assures sharp, clear letters, day and night, with long range visibility.

These modern letters are now supplied in 3 sizes by the makers of the phenomenally successful "LUMINUS solid back" letters, used by thousands of theatres.

PROJECTION FROM BEHIND THE SCREEN

Outlining the technical provisions for the latest method used in Trans-Lux type rear projection

USE OF REAR projection has recently been extended to theatres other than those owned by the Trans-Lux Corporation, which introduced it several years ago in its newsreel and short subjects theatres, and there appears some possibility that it may be extended to other houses peculiarly suited to it. By rear projection, of course, is meant that system in which the projection room is located behind the screen, rather than above and behind the audience, and the picture is thrown upon the rear of the screen, which must of course be translucent.

A number of advantages are claimed for rear projection, of which the chief, perhaps, is that low ceilings are practical, and any ordinary store can be used for a theatre; provided, of course, that the ceiling is high enough to permit proper air conditions. A ceiling high enough to accommodate a projection booth, and a beam of light passing over the heads of the audience, is not necessary.

Other points suggested in favor of this system are, that the beam of projection light is invisible, that greater auditorium illumination is permissible, and that the picture, filtering through a translucent screen instead of being reflected, is more pleasing.

Rear projection requires special apparatus only in the matter of the projection lens, and of the screen itself. Aside from these two items standard theatre equipment can be, and is, used throughout.

Speakers may be placed around the screen, but of course not directly and immediately behind it.

The arrangement of the Trans-Lux projection equipment presents problems that are not encountered in ordinary projection work, and requires special equipment. In the normal projection room the projectors are from 4 to 6 feet apart, and this distance between them is in every way allowable, since they are also from 40 to 200 feet distant from the screen. In rear projection, however, the projectors may be within 10 feet of the screen, and a projector spacing of from 4 to 6 feet would be blaringly evident at changeovers. Since the projectors, in view of their size, cannot be brought much closer together, a special projection lens tube is used, embodying an angle of 45°, and a built-in prism, one of the functions of which is to deflect the light beam through that angle.

The projectors themselves do not face the screen. Each projector is placed at an angle of 45°, with reference to the screen, the two projectors forming a 90° angle with each other. The arrangement of the projectors resembles a V, the screen being a line drawn across the bottom of the V, and some distance from it. The small ends of the lens assemblies are arranged to face the screen squarely, and within 6 inches of each other.

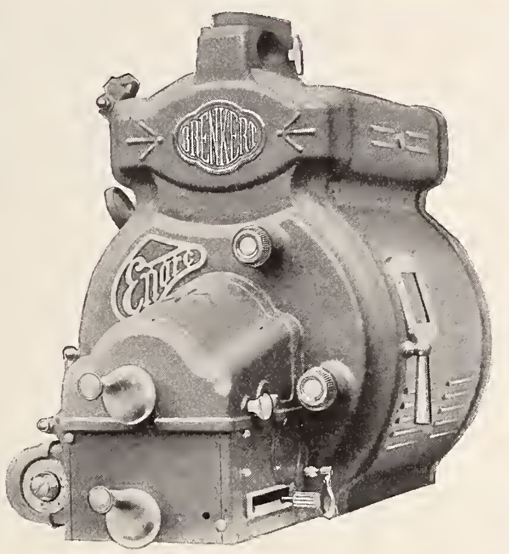
The optical arrangements of the lens tubes are such that the length of throw is exactly equal to the width of the picture. In other words, if the picture is to be 12 feet wide, the small ends of the lens assemblies must be 12 feet behind the screen. Similarly, if the picture is to be 20 feet wide, the small ends of the lens assemblies must be 20 feet behind the screen. There is no way of increasing the width of the picture except by moving the projectors farther back, since the ratio of one foot of screen width to one foot of projection distance cannot at present be improved upon. As it stands, that ratio is a sufficiently remarkable accomplishment, when compared with the conventional, front projection proportion of picture width to length of throw.

In practical terms, a small theatre, requiring a picture of 12 feet wide, would need approximately 18 feet behind the screen, of which 12 feet would represent the distance from screen to lens, and 6 feet or less the space taken by the projectors. The fact that the projectors do not extend backward directly, but at an angle of 45°, further diminishes the depth of space they require, and the 6 feet mentioned above will leave ample room for the projectionist to walk and work behind them.

All normal projection, of course, reverses the picture vertically, the film, as threaded, appearing upside down. Normal projection does not, however, reverse the image laterally. If one peers at the film threaded in a standard projector, titles, for example, although upside down, will read from left to right. But if the same film were used for rear projection, with no correction in the rear projection lens, titles would read from right to left. Consequently, an appropriate correction is introduced into the Trans-Lux optical system, being provided by the prism already mentioned, with the result that the film image is reversed both vertically and laterally. As seen by the projectionists behind the screen, titles read from right to left, but as seen by the audience in front of the screen, from left to right as they should.

The screen used for rear projection is a moulded, flexible composition, tautly stretched, which neither sags nor contracts with changes in temperature and humidity. Its base is gelatin, the same material used for projecting colored spots or effects, to which a sufficient percentage of opaque, white material has been added to render it translucent, rather than transparent. Neither the audience in front of it nor the projectionists behind it can see through it, but the entire effect is rather similar to that of projecting a picture upon oiled paper.

Glaring lights in the projection ports, of course, must be avoided, but a subdued flood-lighting is invisible to the audience. The projection room is provided with a standard, fireproof front wall, equipped with standard projection and observation ports.



SCREEN PERFORMANCE COUNTS

Consistently excellent screen illumination is obtained with the low voltage copper coated carbons only when using a projection lamp best engineered to suit the requirements of this type arc.

Be certain the lamp you purchase has—

1. Micrometer action screw feeds to both carbons.
2. Automatic positive carbon alignment.
3. Wide range feed regulation.
4. Universal full vision arc viewing device.

Brenkert Enarc is the only projection lamp with these important advantages.

GOOD RETAIL DISPLAY: A NOTE ON PROJECTION

OFTEN AND LONG have I dwelled on the fact that excellence in projection is imperative. I shall continue so to do until the high importance of that truth is fully realized and put into practice. Recent visits to theatres suggest that further remarks on this subject are in order now.

My course in this matter is much more than justified by the fact that the theatre that permits either its pictorial or sound values to fall below the level of the very best that can be produced, must and inevitably will suffer proportionate loss at the box office.

Operating a motion picture theatre has many points in common with operating a retail store. Stores have goods for sale. For goods of similar kind the prices in all stores are much the same. Except for price cutting (which means loss to business as a whole), the store that consistently offers its goods in the most attractive way will have the largest sales. Hence the expense to which manufacturers go to provide attractive wrappers for their goods.

Yet in very many motion picture theatres where we would expect such values to be well understood, we find a dull, lifeless screen image; a screen image that is unsteady; a screen that is improperly illuminated; a screen of such dimensions that all beauty is ruined for those occupying the front half of the theatre; a screen surrounded by unattractive objects; a screen with more or less objectionable glare spots of light near it; sound that at times is too loud, at other times too low, or speech at all times distorted, "mushy" and hard to understand.

In a motion picture theatre the "goods" are what is on the film. The display lies in the manner of presentation. Of course, in the store, the merchant who displays goods poorly may lose an immediate sale. The customer has not yet made the purchase, hence the condition of the goods has immediate effect. In a theatre the customer has already bought the goods, hence its condition can have no immediate effect. But the effect is nevertheless there, for if the production is a good one and is attractively displayed, the customer sees a beautiful show and is well pleased. He leaves the theatre imbued with the idea that he has been well entertained. Naturally he is inclined to come again and soon! On the other hand if the goods be poorly displayed, he leaves the theatre without any desire to return.

The theatre that presents its pictures in the best possible manner will make a passably good show out of a basically poor production, sending its patrons home with at least some degree of satisfaction. The theatre that displays its goods poorly will diminish the effectiveness of the best production ever made. With a poor production it sends its patrons home in a more or less disgusted frame of mind, with the idea of going to some other theatre next time, or at least not visiting that one again soon. Indeed, they may even lose interest in motion pictures.

Broadly and briefly, the reasons for poor display may be one of several things, or a combination of them all. First, a projectionist, who does not understand his business any too well, or who, though having the knowledge, is too shiftless or lazy to apply it; (b) a projectionist who is willing, anxious and able to deliver the goods, but is prevented by a management which refuses to supply the needed technical facilities and repairs to equipments, permitting it to slowly fall into a state of deterioration that is inexcusable. We have altogether too many theatre managers who fail to realize that as a general proposition every dollar "saved" by refusing repairs to projection equipment will eventually cost the box office many dollars. Recognition of that fact is one of the marks of a successful man.

HANDLING FILMS WITH SOFT EMULSION

SANDER COHAN, Philadelphia, Pa., projectionist, has been having trouble, as follows:

"Last week I received a brand new print of 'Our Little Girl,' of which Shirley Temple is the lead. Inspection showed the emulsion to be rather soft. It was too late to effect an exchange of prints, so I used the films for the first show. I then discovered that the emulsion was scraped in several places; also the print was getting very dusty. May I ask what you would put on a print received in such condition?

"Yesterday I received an eight-reel feature from RKO. The print was terrible. I must have removed fifty bum splices. The leader broke on me twice. The exchange inspectors must be getting pretty lazy, because on many of the splices removed the emulsion was not scraped. On parts three and seven the manager signaled me and complained of a crackling noise from the loudspeakers. I only heard this when I raised the volume on my monitor horn. My exciter lamps are okay and there are no loose wires. What could be done about this while the projector is running?

"I recently attended a preview. The projectionist colored his titles yellow, with a red and blue background. He did this with the effect projector, fading out all color as the title went off. I asked him whether or not it was proper to color the subject matter of a film. He replied that it depended upon the print. Please explain this color business to me."

THEATRE patrons desire enough supplementary lighting for comfortable vision from the moment of entrance. They are annoyed when a dark theatre compels them to stumble and grope blindly for their seats.

High Intensity Projection permits ample side lighting for a comfortable level of general illumination. It improves the quality of black and white projection and brings out the full beauty and realism of color productions.

studying. It is to your credit that when you don't know a thing you ask questions and thus secure information, but you have asked about some things you should know. You say the emulsion was scratched after you ran it, but from your statement I am led to believe it was not done in your projectors, as you say nothing about deposits of emulsion anywhere on the film track.

Were such films delivered to me I would immediately call up the manager and warn him of possible damage to them if projected. I would ask him or someone representing him to come to the projection room and examine the entire length of the films, noting any damage already found. Then I would rub my tension shoes or aperture plate tracks (according to which bear on the emulsion) with a cloth moistened (not wet) with a heavy oil or with grease, if available, say my prayers and go to it. In the foregoing I am assuming the prints could not be exchanged for others.

It is no part of the projectionist's duty to dope up films with anything at all. He is supposed to receive prints in usable condition. If they are not, that is not his fault, nor can he be justly held responsible for damage caused by films not in proper condition for projection.

As to the poor splices, they should be handed to the manager with a request that they be forwarded to the exchange manager with a demand for an explanation.

The fact that your exciter lamp was all right, and your wires, too, is no proof that your equipment was blameless. Very many things—for example, dirty battery tops, if you use batteries—may set up such noises. The fact that apparently the objectionable sounds were produced only by two of the eight reels seems to indicate the fault to have been in those reels of film—dust, dirt or scratches on the sound track, perhaps.

As to coloring films by using an effect projector, color wheels or slides—well, that's something I would not care to go into. It can be done, of course, but whether it will add to the effect depends upon the artistic taste of the man doing it—also, as the projectionist advised you, upon the nature of the scene being projected. Coloring titles may frequently add to the effect, but it must be artistically done.

DEMONSTRATING WEAR OF SPROCKET TEETH

MANY TIMES have I reminded both projectionists and managers to examine intermittent sprocket teeth with a magnifying glass at frequent intervals. Recently I was shown an intermittent sprocket that had ben replaced. To the eye it's teeth looked perfect. Using the finger nail one could detect just a suspicion of out-of-conture on the working side of the teeth. A projectionist friend, Earl Gordon of Akron, Ohio, has made an enlarged photograph of the teeth of this sprocket. He also obtained an RCA Photophone take-up sprocket that had been reversed so that the teeth were worn on both sides in approximately the same amount. Here is what he has to say:

"With regard to the attached enlargements, the magnification is so great that it was impossible to secure perfect sharpness of but one tooth, however I trust this will serve your purpose. While I do not know that this holds good with them all (as I am unable to find other discarded sprockets here of the same type as the one you sent), the new type Simplex intermittent sprocket you sent does not undercut into a notch or wear off in hook form, but instead just about in a perfectly flat plane.

"On the other hand, as may be seen in the other photo (Figure 2), the take-up sprockets on soundheads wear differently and more in the form of a hook, due possibly to the slip and jerk action of the friction take-up that is built up by reason of the looseness of, or lost motion in, the key and keyway that locks the lower reel to the shaft. This constant weaving and jerking of the lower reel induces a series of constant slips and siezes of the friction, which wears the sprocket teeth down unevenly.

"According to my own recollection, the lower or take-up sprockets are always worn down more on one side than on the other, whereas the upper sprockets show no such variation. This I believe is due to the more even pull exerted by the film on the upper sprocket.

"In the case of the intermittent sprocket, the film is held under heavy tension, hence the wiping action of the sprocket hole edges in leaving the teeth would tend to more even flat-plane wear, in spite of the jerking action of the sprocket.

"It might be of interest and value to secure several samples of discarded Simplex intermittent sprockets, some of the older type and some of the later kind, and by enlarged photos be able to make a comparison. Or it might be well to ask the International Projector Corporation for such dope as they may have regarding this matter. All this may or may not have value. I leave that to your own good judgment."

Yes, Brother Gordon, it has very real value, particularly because of the fact that our readers are now able, for the first time, I believe, actually to examine critically an intermittent and a take-up sprocket tooth in sufficiently enlarged form to enable them to see exactly what takes place. I believe a series of enlargements of this kind, covering the old and new Simplex, the Motiograph and sprockets used in other makes of professional projectors would have considerable value, hence our readers are invited to send such samples.

CLEANING TUBE PRONGS; KEEPING CARBONS DRY

JOHN R. SNOW, projectionist at the Saunders theatre in Harvard, Ill., writes: "Dear Sir, or rather dear friend, it has been quite some while since I've written. You most certainly have been a very real help to me in solving projection problems and I wish to express my thanks. The manager of the theatre and myself renewed our subscriptions to the MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and have included the MOTION PICTURE ALMANAC and other Quigley papers. We enter the subscription as partners, I getting BETTER THEATRES and the Almanac; he the HERALD and the DAILY.

"Now with regard to the question propounded by Mr. T. L. Daniels, Ashland, Wisconsin, who asked, 'Is it advisable to remove the amplifier tubes and exciter lamps and scrub the prong ends with fine sandpaper every day?' You invited readers to answer this question, so here am I.

"I find the prongs of either exciter lamps or amplifier tubes seldom to require cleaning. If they do, rubbing them with the eraser of an ordinary lead pencil does the trick perfectly. If by any chance they be found in really bad condition, rub them with any good metal polish, which will remove any deposit without wearing them down and out of shape, as either sandpaper or crocus cloth will do. I will be glad if anyone can advance a better method.

"And now, Mr. Richardson, I have an idea of my own for keeping carbons dry. As you know, the more thoroughly dry carbons are, the whiter will be the light, and the more steady as well. I have had my idea in use for two years and find it perfect.

"I have Peerless low-intensity lamps, and in the top of the lamphouse I have installed shelves made of galvanized iron, so attached that they may be kept level regardless of projection angle tilt. These shelves will hold about seventy-five sets of carbons per lamp. I find this form of storage dries them out perfectly. My manager buys carbons in 500-set lots. By my plan they get about ten days of heat application and certainly are dryer than the Sahara desert when ready for use. I pass the idea along to others, if you think it worth while."

The suggestion to use an eraser rubber is, in my judgment, excellent. Many projectionists and sound engineers use them for the purpose named. As for keeping carbons dry, those who have the fourth edition of my Bluebook will find an adaptation of the same idea described and illustrated on page 388. I thoroughly approve of the idea and commend it to projectionists. Makers of lamphouses would do well to incorporate it into their product, but to be effective in the best way it must hold sufficient carbons to last several days; also, there should be two compartments, one to hold the carbons being used, the other to contain a fresh supply.

that the "machine operators" of these circuits would probably strike. Now, gentlemen, how do you like being publicly graded as "machine operators?" Just that and nothing more! Naturally when your profession is placed before the public in that light, the public can see no reason why you should be paid anything more than ordinary wages. It does not know that while you do operate certain machines and equipments, the term "machine operator" is after all far from descriptive of your duties and training. It is, in fact, a misrepresentation that works against you.

Yet the papers are not to blame, as the local union still clings to the title "Moving Picture Machine Operators."

May I respectfully suggest that Local 306, which should have led, follow the example of very many union groups in this and other countries and change its official title to Motion Picture Projectionists IATSE & MPMO; also, that it recommend to New York City authorities a similar change in the nomenclature of license cards. And the IATSE and MPMO itself should adopt the change as soon as possible.

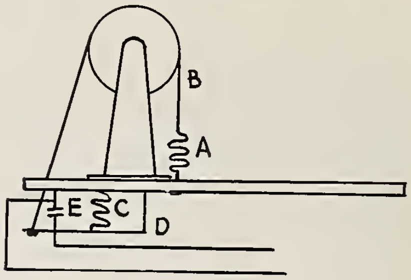
SUGGESTING SOME HANDY DEVICES

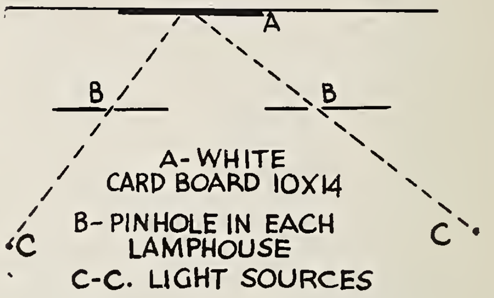
FROM JOE D. KLINE, projectionist at the Rayol theatre in Unionville, Mo., a town where a considerable number of my boyhood days were spent, comes some very practical suggestions. Friend Kline writes, "I have read your Comment and the 'Bluebook School' for several years. I have noticed a lot of comment about wiring diagrams for sound systems. May I suggest that Rider's Radio Service Manual contains almost every diagram the projectionist could possibly need? Have myself serviced amplifiers and radios for several years in conjunction with my projection work. These manuals and a good testing kit are indispensable. I have found the Weston test set, No. 566, to meet all the requirements of the projection room. May I now offer rough drawings of three gadgets that are very handy. They may or may not be original with me, but should be useful to projectionists."

Thanks, Friend Kline. I am not personally acquainted with the manual you name. Until I know more about it, naturally I can only pass the suggestion along for consideration by our readers. I am, however, skeptical about the value of wiring diagrams except when in the hands of very well posted men, for the reason that changes are so often made in sound outfits that such charts may lead to trouble, rather than help men cure it. This is especially true of "trouble shooting" charts.

Certainly a good test kit is a most valuable set of instruments provided the user understands how to apply it properly and to analyze its readings. It seems to me the manufacturer of really good testing outfits might find it profitable to interest theatres in such apparatus.

As to the diagrams, they are rather self-explanatory. The upper one shows a method by means of which a rewinder can be automatically stopped the instant rewinding is finished. The contact points may be had from any Ford automobile shop. The device connects into but one leg of the circuit. Probably the authorities would insist upon its being enclosed. Anyhow, that is a good precautionary measure.





The lower diagram presents no novelty, except that the arc images are projected to a white cardboard affixed to the ceiling through pin holes so small that no lens is required. The location of the holes will of course depend upon the location of the card and light sources. The card is supposed to hold both images without any overlap, but I personally would favor a separate card for each projector.

Friend Kline sends a third idea, but it is returned to him for added information. It may be presented to our readers later. He also asks whether or not it would be of value to him to join the IA, and asks how he may do so. Unionville is a small place—about 1,800 people, I believe. The nearest local to him probably is at Ottumwa, Iowa, in which case he would work under the jurisdiction of that local. It is not to be supposed that a union so far away could in any way affect either his wages or working conditions. However, I hold it is well that every projectionist join the union, and thus at least do his share in aiding that which does indirectly aid him, though he may not realize the fact. Some time, Friend Kline, when you are on a motor ride, drop in and talk with Business Representative Edward Randall, 226 South Adellia Street, Ottumwa.

SOMETHING FOR THE SMPE TO THINK OVER

THE SMPE has performed a great and eminently useful work since its formation away back in the spring of 1916. It has built and built well. Its membership has grown until it now includes many prominent engineers and a great number of what may be termed lay members. Personally I have always doubted and do still doubt the advisability of admitting any but engineers and others of technical training in some field of the industry, into membership. Possibly I am wrong in this, but when the membership was small and the meetings were attended only by such men, I feel safe in saying we accomplished better work and relatively more of it.

However, of late there is a decided tendency in the preparation of papers toward a practice in which specialists talk only to specialists in some restricted line of work, and in language only they can understand. Take for example the article (page 314) in the SMPE Journal of October, 1935, entitled "Non-Theatrical Projection." Now I believe you will all admit that I do know projection at least fairly well, but just the same I find myself utterly unable to follow some of the arguments in that article. Its writer talks about an intermediate "flick." Now whatinell may that happen to be? On page 323, same article, is an elaborate chart, the meaning of which is, I admit, too many for me, and I have tried hard to decipher it.

The point I am trying to make is that the SMPE papers should not be prepared with a view of providing information and perhaps glorification for the few who possibly need it least, but of providing information, so far as possible, to all interested in motion picture engineering.

In the Journal, excellent publication though it is, I find about one paper in five of such nature that the information it is presumed to convey can be absorbed (save in a most fragmentary fashion) by any except those specially trained in the matters being discussed. I hold this to be distinctly bad practice, admitting only the necessity for some few specialized technicalities that cannot be stated in language less narrowly understood.

It should be remembered that the Society solicits membership, for example, from theatre people on the argument that they will receive the Journal. Is it good practice to do that and then send out a publication composed almost wholly of papers which can be instructive to and appreciated by only a small minority of the membership?

REGULATING SOUND LEVEL BY METER

CARROLL CHAPIN of Bird Island, Minnesota, says, "In September 21st issue of BETTER THEATRES is an article on maintaining proper sound values. You said you had a plan whereby the projectionist could have the auditorium sound level constantly on view.

"May I suggest that a decibel meter hooked across the speaker output leads might serve to advise projectionists of the sound level. Of course, the meter would give a variable reading as the sound changed from music to speech, but could not an average be secured by experience that would serve?

"I am a young man 19 years of age, acting as projectionist in a 125-seat theatre. The salary is too small to have enabled me as yet to secure one of your Bluebooks, but I have hopes."

Kni-tron Rectifier for Low Intensity Projection

Kri-tron is a product of outstanding quality, unexcelled performance and durable beauty. Simple design and economical construction keep the cost amazingly low.

Kri-tron is a silent, dependable, servant of the projection room, delivering 12 to 35 amperes direct current from an A. C. Line. No terminal blocks to encumber regulation; no flicker—no noise. Ammeter installed as standard equipment. No additional charge.

Operates from two 15-Ampere Tungar Tubes. Permits perfect changeover. Available in 110 to 220 volt capacities. Highly efficient. Ask us for further details.

As to that last, may I suggest to your manager that it would be a good business to "install" a Bluebook as a part of the regular theatre "equipment," not only using it himself upon occasion, but also loaning it to you for the purpose of study. A large number of theatre managers have the fifth edition of the Bluebook on their desk, and many will have the new sixth edition.

As to the decibel meter, I do not believe it could be used in that way with very satisfying results. If any of you have such a meter, try the matter out and report. Anyhow, the fact that Mr. Chapin has made the suggestion shows he uses his head for something besides a hat rack.

PRE-DETERMINING CHANGEOVER ACTION

BARNEY DEVIETTI of Helper, Utah, who has been a regular "student" of the "Bluebook School" in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, writes that his employers have selected him to check up on the work of projection in their various theatres. He adds:

"At my first stop I certainly found things in a mess. It required three weeks of work before I felt satisfied to leave. While there I worked out a check chart designed to enable the manager to know whether or not the equipment was receiving proper attention.

"I enjoy my new job, if only for the reason that it enables me to increase my knowledge and thus be able to do better work. And now here is an idea I would like to pass along. It amounts to checking the incoming reel to ascertain exactly what the changeover action will be. For example: In threading the reel to follow one then being projected, the projectionist checks back to the action. In this way he is able to tell just what the requirement is—a straight cut or a fade-out. True it is nothing very startling, but nevertheless I have found it to be a distinct aid to smooth work, hence am glad to pass it along to others.

"By the way, the introduction by Adolph Zukor to the new Bluebook, printed in the Martin Quigley Anniversary Number, is very fine. I cut it out and framed it and it now hangs on the wall of my projection room in Helper."

The changeover idea is passed along with my commendation. As its sponsor says, it is nothing startling, but just one of those little things that go to make smooth work.

LET PROJECTIONISTS SIT BY PROJECTORS

F. E. SHERRY, projectionist of Marshfield, Mass., writes, "Many thanks for information regarding sound-on-disc. Am enclosing sketch of a projector. It was made from a photograph. I would like to identify it. Sent order for the new Bluebook July 15. Hope to get an autographed copy, as I would certainly treasure it. Could you advise me whether or not the Pacent soundhead still is made? Also, have you ever heard of a soundhead called the 'De Wolf?'"

MANY THANKS

I take this means of expressing to those who remembered me on my birthday, October 25, my sincere appreciation of their thoughtfulness. There were many cards and a few telegrams. Charles A. Dentlebeck of Toronto, Ont., who was for years, and I believe still is, in general charge of all projection affairs for Famous Players, wound up his wire thus: "May you enjoy at least as many more years as I have known you and may I continue to be counted as among your friends and admirers."

Now, that's real nice, Charlie, but inasmuch as I have known you for more than twenty years, if I lived that long I'm afraid I might possibly begin to look a bit shop worn, frayed, frazzled and lose some of my attractiveness to the poultry and—well, you know how it is!

But, anyhow, I certainly do deeply appreciate the kindly thoughs that prompted all these cards and wires and shall try hard to continue to merit your confidence and your friendship—until. . . .

Yes, the Pacent is being made—an entirely new model. I have no record of, nor am I able to recall, sound equipment called the "De Wolf," though there may have been one—there have been a very great many different makes of soundheads.

The projector is, I think, a Motiograph. I note your penciled comment that the projectionist's seat attached thereto seems a good feature, with which view I heartily agree. Most managers insist that the projectionist remain standing all the time; or at least that there be no seat beside the projector.

Now, I hold this to be poor practice. The theory is that the man will be more on the alert standing than sitting, but this works out very poorly in practice in more ways than one. First, many men tire quickly if obliged to stand for any considerable length of time, and the man who is tired is never very alert.

The logical place for the projectionist is beside the working projector. If there is a seat there it is pretty nearly a cinch he will be there most of the time when duty does not compel him to be elsewhere. Then, too, if the man must stand, it may logically be supposed he will move around more or less—usually more—and will not remain at his post of duty beside the projector.

If I took charge of a theare as manager, one of the first things I would do would be to obtain two stools of proper height and cushioned comfortably, and place one beside each projector. And I'd be willing to wager ten smackers against one busted suspender button that I would get as good or better service and a greater percentage of safety than would the manager who compels his men to stand, thus inducing them to roam all over the room while the motor runs the show.

THE CAUSE OF FILM MUTILATION

EDWARD F. JONES, projectionist of Fort Kamehameha, Honolulu, writes, "Enclosed herewith find clip from an MGM feature production. You will note that one of its frames has five sprocket holes per side, which of course means the picture, were the fault left in, would jump out of frame at each projection. The fault was clipped out 250 feet from thestart.

"I have been projecting motion pictures for several years and have endeavored to keep my equipments, both visual and sound, in first-class condition to the end that the public may receive everything contained in the films at full value. As I see things, this is what every real projectionist must and does do. I cannot understand how a great and excellent company would permit such a rank fault to get past its inspection department and thus cause us to project it before a theatre audience. A picture jumping out of frame nowadays is, as you know, highly unfashionable. I believe, sir, that if a man of as high standing as yourself would report this to the proper authorities, such a defect would not again appear.

"I have noted your various articles about home-made changeover signals, punched and otherwise, and only wish you might examine a few reel ends after they have made the rounds of local theatres over here. Although fully equipped with standard release print changeover dots when the arrive, soon the reel ends look like some one had fired a shotgun at them, and in addition sprayed them with film splice lacquer.

"There are close to fifty theatres in the islands, and I believe every projectionist contributes his own variety of changeover mark. Oh, well, the exchange here owns most of them, so I suppose that is the answer. Keep up the good work in the 'Bluebook School' of MOTION PICTURE HERALD."

No, Friend Jones, that surely is not the answer. Quite the opposite! If the exchanges owned both the films and the theatres, it would be a very simple matter to put a stop to butchering up film with unnecessary changeover signals. Just have films free from all but standard release print changeover signals sent out to theatres, and if they are returned with added signals, punched or otherwise, cut them out and return them to the "projectionist." (film butcher would be a more appropriate title) with a bill for damages. The offender thereafter would somehow manage to struggle along with the S.R.P. signals.

As to the film fault, it was due to some slip of the printer. It looks as though the printer had been stopped, unthreaded and rethreaded one hole out. However, inasmuch as Mr. Jones has not supplied even the name of the production, of course MGM cannot very well trace the fault to its source.

LAW AND THE THEATRE

A DEPARTMENT DEVOTED TO LEGAL PHASES OF THEATRE OPERATION

COUNSEL FROM LATE HIGH COURT CASES

By LEO. T. PARKER

Analyzing for the theatre operator selected litigations and the rules of law that are involved in their decision

NUMEROUS STATE and city laws intended to regulate theatres and other places of amusements, specify that such businesses are "affected with a public interest." Therefore, it is important to know that the courts consistently hold that legally a theatre has no public interest.

CASE

For illustration, in People ex rel. Industrial Commission of Colorado v. Aladdin Theatre Corporation (Denver, 44 Pac. [2d] 1022), it was disclosed that a State law confers upon a State commission jurisdiction in disputes between employers and employes concerning wages, hours, and conditions of employment. The law also specifies that before union employes are discharged due notice must be given to the commission, and further, that it is unlawful for any owner of a business "affected with a public interest" to "lock out" union employes before giving notice to the commission.

The owner of several theatres discharged and locked out certain employes prior to an investigation, hearing or award by the commission, and without notice to it. Legal proceedings were filed against the theatre owner who defended the suit on the contention that his business is not "affected with a public interest." In upholding this contention, the court said:

DECISION

"This presents the very simple question of the meaning of the phrase 'affected with a public interest.' . . . While we doubt not that the commission's position is erroneous and the theatre business not included in the phrase 'affected with a public interest,' it is not so easy, nor is it here necessary, to say what is included. . . . Such being the correct interpretation of the phrase in the question, the entire controversy is disposed of by Tyson & Brother United Theatre v. Banton, 273 U. S. 418 . . . holding the theatre business not affected with a public interest."

WHEN STATE AND CITY LAWS CONFLICT

IT IS WELL settled law that the provisions of a city ordinance which contravene a State law are void. In other words, what the Legislature permits, the city cannot suppress without express authority therefor. Sometimes it is difficult to determine whether a city ordinance conflicts with a State law. However, each particular case must be determined as it arises. Broadly speaking, the question whether a conflict exists depends upon whether the state has occupied the whole field of prohibitory legislation with respect to the subject. If such is the case, it is held that a conflict exists.

On the other hand, in order that there be a conflict between a State law and a municipal regulation, both must contain either express or implied conditions which are inconsistent and irreconcilable with each other. Mere differences in detail do not render them conflicting. If either is silent where the other speaks, there can be no conflict between them. Where no conflict exists, both laws stand valid. Also, as a general rule, additional regulation to that of a State law does not constitute a valid city ordinance.

CASE

For example, in National Amusement Company v. Johnson (Grand Rapids, Mich., 259 N. W. 342), it was disclosed that a State law was enacted which makes it unlawful to conduct certain kinds of places of amusement, unless such businesses are operated in a manner clearly outlined by the State law. A city enacted an ordinance which prohibits operation of these places of business. The city officials contended that the ordinance was valid because by State laws every city is granted the right to pass ordinances and regulations of every character to secure the public peace, health, safety, welfare and benefit and to regulate and license trades, occupations, businesses and amusements.

However, since the State law provides that amusement places may be operated if they are conducted in the manner prescribed by the law, and the city officials attempted to prohibit under all conditions the operation of these places of business, the higher court held the ordinance void, and said:

DECISION

"Where an amusement, which has been lawful and unregulated, is not evil per se, but may be conducted in a good or bad manner, is the subject of legislation, regulatory, not prohibitory, it would seem clear that the Legislature intended to permit continuance of the amusement, subject to statutory conditions. The statute makes it unlawful to conduct only in violation of certain conditions. This is merely a common legislative manner of saying that it is lawful to conduct it if the regulations are observed. . . . Assuming the city may add to the conditions, nevertheless the ordinance attempts to prohibit what the statute and ordinance cannot stand. Therefore, the ordinance is void."

REGULATION OF SANITATION

THE COURTS have consistently held that any reasonable city ordinance or regulation intended to preserve the health of citizens is valid and enforceable. Moreover, failure on the part of a theatre owner to exercise ordinary care in disposing of overflow water, sewage and the like, may make such property owner liable in damages. And a city whose officials fail to take precautions to prevent injury to private property or to the health of its inhabitants, by failure to compel property owners to connect their drainage pipes to the city sewer system, may be liable in damages.

CASE

For instance, in City v. Hoevel Company (59 S. W. [2d] 617), it was shown that a city passed an ordinance which required all of the owners of property to connect their drainage pipes with the municipal sewerage system. A property owner refused to comply with provisions of the ordinance, contending that it was invalid. However, the higher court held the property owner bound to comply with the ordinance.

EFFECT OF DELAY IN FILING MORTGAGE

DELAY IN filing a chattel mortgage may render it void. So held a higher court in New Brunswick, Inc. v. Scott (Newark, N. J., 176 Atl. 375).

CASE

The facts of this case are that a State law provides that a chattel mortgage shall be recorded "immediately." On May 9, a chattel mortgage had been executed and acknowledged, and the affidavit was sworn to in a building located five blocks from the county courthouse, where chattel mortgages were recorded, but it was not recorded until 3:29 p. m. of May 10.

Controversy arose over the question whether the mortgage was rendered void on account of the delay in recording it. It is interesting to know that the court held the mortgage void.

WHAT IS MEANT BY "LEGAL FIXTURE"

THE TERM fixture is generally used in reference to some personal chattel, which has been actually affixed either to the soil itself or to some structure legally a part of such soil. It has been defined as denoting an article which was once a chattel, but which, by being physically annexed or affixed to the realty, has become accessory to it and part and parcel of it; or as signifying something so attached to the realty as to become, for the time being, a part of the freehold, as contradistinguished from a mere chattel; or something annexed to a freehold that cannot be removed without injury to the freehold.

Considerable controversy has existed from time to time whether a person or company installing various kinds of equipment, may remove it against the will of a person who held a mortgage on the property when the equipment was installed. This point of the law was decided in the recent case, 258 N. W. 791.

CASE

In this case it was shown that a man named Wooley loaned the owner of a lot and building thereon $20,000 and took a mortgage on the property to secure payment of the money. Later a company installed equipment on the property. When the company attempted to remove the equipment Wooley refused to permit it to do so on the contention that the same was a legal fixture. However, the court held the company entitled to remove it, since it was proved that the equipment could be removed without any injury to the property.

A Novel Plan for a Theatre of 800 Seats

of the lens of the projectors is approximately on the same horizontal level as the center of the screen, which in turn is made possible by the arrangement of the auditorium floor: it is unnecessary to tilt the screen either way (see acompanying floor plan).

Each of the four emergency exits are provided with a separate vestibule by which the afternoon light, seeping through cracks between the double doors, is entirely eliminated, and which at the same time have a material bearing on the heating and air-conditioning of the house. They likewise eliminate street noises. Over the two exits near the stage there has been arranged a balcony effect. Between the back wall of each recess and the front is a perforated ornamental plaster grille. Behind these and through the openings a variable lighting effect has been installed, while on the front a contrasting effect is provided.

The stage itself is formed in steps. Footlights are provided between the pedestals, and the pedestals conceal colored flood lights. Additional outlets have been provided in the risers of the steps for any special effect which may be desired. The curtains, valences, legs, etc., are of high-nap plush and are lined.

The side walls of the auditorium have been lined with Acousti-Celotex in decorative combination with plain and ornamental Celotex. Acousti-Celotex has also been used in the ceiling as a border (see accompanying photographs).

Lighting effects on the side walls have been produced by chromium brackets, each of which contains three colors in addition to the emergency light. The ceiling effects are obtained from concealed sources, through louvres set at certain angles for diffusing the various colors. The arrangement of the lighting permits a rather bright auditorium while the picture is being shown without affecting the brightness of the picture.

AIR-CONDITIONING

The air-conditioning system, including heating, cooling and humidity control, is completely automatic. It is operated from a panel board in the projection room. This board includes a push-button for starting the fan, compressors, oil burner and dials for fresh air and recirculation dampers. The conditioned air is introduced into the auditorium at the ceiling, the grilles, forming plaques, being incorporated in the decorative treatment of the ceiling.

The equipment includes two equal-sized Frick refrigerating compressors, employing Freon, each having a rating of 40 tons and driven by 40 h.p. motors; and an Ames boiler having an oil-burning capacity of 4,600 square feet of radiation; copper-finned heating coils.

The refrigerating compressors, by Frick, use Freon. There are two of these, each having a rating of 40 tons and driven by 40 h.p. motors. The boiler, by Ames, has an oil-burning capacity of 4,600 square feet of radiation. Compressors and boiler are located in a machinery room in the basement.

Cooling and heating coils are located in a loft space. Coils are of copper-finned type. The fan connected to the heating and cooling coils, drawing the recirculated and fresh air through them and propelling it through the duct system, has a capacity of 22,000 cubic feet of air per minute at 1¼-inch static pressure. No radiators are used anywhere in the building, all air treatment being by means of the conditioning system described, which was installed by the Paul J. Vincent Company of Baltimore. The building was constructed by the Baltimore firm of E. Eyring & Sons Company.

tre owner and manager become a "rate expert," nevertheless a knowledge of the fundamentals entering into the cost of electric service is of considerable value both as an assurance that full dollar value is being received from a rate application viewpoint; and secondly and often most importantly, that electric service is being utilized in such a manner that rate application will result in equitable costs.

Owing to the great number of possible variables, both in rate application and methods of electric service usage in theatres, it is essential that individual study and analysis of each specific instance be made and results adjusted to local conditions.

To the Projectionist

by ADOLPH ZUKOR

There comes in the career of every motion picture that final occasion when all the artistry, all the earnest constructive endeavor of all the man-power and genius of the industry, and all the capital investment, too, must pour through the narrow gate of the projector on its way to the fulfillment of its purpose, the final delivery to the public.

That delivery is a constant miracle of men and mechanism in the projection rooms of the world's fifty thousand theatres. That narrow ribbon, thirty-five millimeters, flowing at twenty-four frames a second through the scintillating blaze of the spot at the picture aperture and coursing at an exactingly precise 90 feet a minute past the light slit of the sound system, demands a quality of skill and faithful, unfailing attention upon which the whole great industry depends.

The projector lens is the neck of the bottle through which all must pass. The projectionist presiding over that mechanism is responsible for the ultimate performance upon which we must all depend.

The projector must not fail and, more importantly still, the man must not fail or permit it to waver in its performance. It is to the tremendous credit of the skill of the modern projectionist that perfect presentation of the motion picture upon the screen is today a commonplace, a perfection that is taken as a matter of course.

PURSUED BY BRISBANE

SYNDICATION has laid a blight of monotony over the daily press of the land. It seems that newspaper production in the lesser communities has been reduced to the operation of a printing plant and a circulation department, while the preponderance of the content arrives from the feature factories of New York. Even the local advertising is dominated by mat service cuts to the point where it is too artful to be plausible.

Perhaps the local customers do not mind it so much, but the traveler across the land, whose movements may chance to synchronize with the syndicate distribution, is in peril of facing the same copy printed afresh every morning for days on end.

The editor, being at the time in transit, has acquired the dread feeling that Mr. Arthur Brisbane is following him across the country with his "Today."

Great editors came from little places in the days before the syndicates. Ed Howe, Colonel Watterson, William Allen White and their like made fame without a can opener for the New York mail.

The local newspaper would do well to get local.

OLD CLAY — NEW POTS

THE reviewers of the lay press across the land seem to have devoted more concern to comparisons between the old silent version of "Way Down East" and the current sound version than to consideration of the picture itself as today's entertainment. If they really wanted to show their erudition and experience it would have been better to have gone back to the datum of the original stage production, rather than to Mr. D. W. Griffith's exciting translation of it. Meanwhile the interest of their readers is in how much entertainment it may be now. Reviewers who write especially for readers are missing their audience.

It is annoying to discover that a number of reviewers have been led by some undisclosed influence to the assertion that the first screen version of "Way Down East" gave rise to the first screen censorship.

For the record it may be stated here that the world's first exercise of a censorship of the films came that day in 1894 when the authorities of Atlantic City—of all places—caused the removal of Edison Kinetoscope peep-show films depicting the gyrations of "The Passion Dancer," a can-can performer of contemporary fame.

Real censorship issues began in New York, first erupting in an agitation by the Children's Society over storeshow exhibitions of a picture entitled "The Thaw Case," somewhere about 1907. The censorship affairs of Mr. Griffith's silent "Way Down East" were passing matters, making no history.

Meanwhile the commentators for lay consumption in the case of this new version again raise their oft-carping voices because the producers have seen fit to affect a certain modernization of the story. The merit of the piece, in any proper sense of today's amusement world, does not repose in its relation to the play or picture of yesterday. That goes, too, for all other modernizations. The production job of the motion picture industry is not that of the archeologist engaged in facsimile reproduction of the past. A veracious sound-screen presentation of any of the old classics, or just old hits, would carry interest only to a tiny intellectual audience, interested more in exploring yesterday than in the search of emotional reactions that constitute amusement.

The obfuscation of the critics over the verisimilitude of "Way Down East" is of the same pattern of loose thinking which holds that the screen has some special and peculiar obligation of uplift and education beyond other forms of expression to the masses.

The whole of civilization consists of old clay modelled into new pots, and the potters have no obligation to a tedious following of the old patterns.

Judgment of pictures by today's consumers gives no concern to antecedents. The critics who serve them might well discover that.

FREE TIME

WITH pressures that probably start with the makers of industrial and other commercial propaganda pictures, there is just now a flood of pleas for free screen time at the theatres. The exhibitor is being besought to give space on his program for messages on everything from cereals to motor cars and tires. Many and ingenious leverages of approach and argument are employed.

One of the most aggressive drives for free screen attention is from an insurance company, which enlists support of highway departments and various officials in local authority to get screen attention to safety-first preachments to drivers. The local pressure often succeeds, but due to the dexterity of the projectionists, no doubt, the insurance message and company name do not so often reach the audience.

Years ago when advertising on the screen was new, some of the best shorts offered were made by advertisers. The famous Eastman Kodak two-reeler and the Ford Weekly were successful exemplifications. Today the exhibitor has plenty of shorts of merit, and more than a plenty of mediocre shorts.

This Week

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

Million Backing

Hollywood has come to Broadway, and in playing "angel" to the managers in outright or partial backing of stage productions, motion picture companies are splurging on an unprecedented scale. Story material is the chief object.

Whereas only seven productions last season were supported by the films, 14 of the 44 productions put on in New York so far this season have "movie money" behind them, estimated at $700,000, and the expectation is that before the season is over the film industry will be investing a million dollar bankroll.

It's a risky business, as evidenced by some heavy losses, but it has its rewards, too. The situation is described in the story starting on page 13.

RCA Disposes

Disposition by RCA of its second large holding in the amusement business, following its sale of interests in RKO to Odlum and Lehman Brothers, was made this week when the corporation accepted $10,220,000 for its 29 per cent interest in Electrical and Musical Industries, Ltd., London, from a British banking syndicate.

At the same time RKO's directors formally elected Leo Spitz, Odlum-Lehman candidate, as president of Radio-Keith-Orpheum, and accepted the resignations from the board of Paul M. Mazur and Herbert Bayard Swope.

The significance of RCA's sale of EMI in England and the potential effects on its financial procedure are reported on page 28, along with the latest RKO corporate developments.

'Air-Tight'

Irked no little by its crushing failure to obtain a conviction from a jury at St. Louis on its criminal-indictment charges against Warner Brothers, RKO and Paramount, the Department of Justice at Washington was understood to have decided this week to make future cases against distributors absolutely "air-tight" before bringing them into the federal courts.

Nor will the Department abandon any plans that it might have for enforcement of the anti-trust laws in this or any other industry. No new suits will be brought, however, until the basic information and the evidence have been sifted thoroughly.

Meanwhile the Justice Department was preparing to proceed with its case in equity to obtain an injunction against the three distributors to restrain them from withholding motion pictures from the three independent theatres of the Harry Arthur-Fanchon and Marco interests, these theatres including the Ambassador, New Grand Central and Missouri, which were the subject of the criminal-indictment controversy in Judge George Moore's federal court at St. Louis.

The distributors have asked that Judge Moore be disqualified from presiding at the equity trial, on grounds of prejudice evidenced during the criminal-indictment trial.

Echoes of the St. Louis case are reported on page 23.

Settled

Joseph Schenck has obtained an additional 50 per cent interest in Metropolitan Playhouses, New York circuit of some 80 to 90 theatres, thereby obtaining 90 per cent control.

Keith-Albee-Orpheum holds 10 per cent and an option to buy an additional 10 per cent from Mr. Schenck's 90. Consummation of the arrangement, which is explained on page 27, thereby definitely and finally establishes the status of the former bankrupt Fox Theatres subsidiary, the circuit's status having been the subject of considerable court battles over a long period.

Royalty Squabble

A threat of three years' standing seems about to materialize with the announcement that the Music Publishers' Protective Association would soon file suit against Electrical Research Products, Inc., and 11 film companies to recover $97,000 claimed as royalties in the recording of foreign music.

E. P. Kilroe, chairman of the motion picture producers' copyright committee, contends the music was in public domain abroad and arrangements made here therefore are not subject to the usual license collections. John G. Paine, MPPA chairman, claims copyrights have nothing to do with the matter. What the difference is about is related in the story on page 34.

Teaching Field

"Audio visual" instruction, or teaching by means of sound motion pictures, gives promise of creating revolutionary changes in teaching methods in the schools of America, which rapidly are being equipped with sound projectors and specially made instructional films.

Tests have proved the effectiveness of sound films over other teaching methods, say leading educators, who are unanimous that the idea has limitless possibilities, depending on the material and the manner in which it is employed.

The potential market for equipment manufacturers and film producers is indicated in the 264,000 public schools in the United States, not more than 1,000 of which are now equipped for sound. Practically all the strictly pedagogical films acceptable to educators are being turned out by Erpi Picture Consultants. Europe appears to be far ahead of America in the development.

A survey of the instructional film field, both here and abroad, and a history of the development, will be found in the story starting on page 43.

WPA Dangers

"An ax to cut actors' salaries?"

The query is posed by the Screen Actors' Guild of Hollywood, which sees many dangers inherent in the Government's WPA federal theatre project as constituted. The Guild fears the low subsistence wage will be used as a lever to force down the salaries of professionals in the studios as well as on the stage.

Equity and the American Federation of Actors, too, have waxed critical of the program in the New York district, while some WPA activity is noted from the field. See page 53.

• • • from a private letter from Terry Ramsaye, who is making a close-up inspection of the theatre field at large: I am genuinely impressed with how closely the trade press is read out in the provinces. I have been surprised, flattered and also embarrassed by the amount of quotations from our pages that I have encountered. Our responsibility to the audience is very great and emphatic. Everything that bears on product is read and remembered.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Burns Print

The master print of Paramount's "The Devil Is a Woman" was burned recently in New York in the presence of the Spanish consul-general as a first step in the company's move to accede to Spain's demand that the film be removed from world circulation. Other prints are being withdrawn from distribution and exhibition.

Spain objected to the print on the grounds that it was derogatory to the nation's Civil Guard.

Television Control

Government control of the young television industry—which may some day rival motion pictures—is meeting stiff resistance in the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, which charges that the attempt of the Federal Communications Commission to dictate the terms under which it can construct a television cable for experimental purposes is a usurpation of authority.

On demand of the company, the Commission has decided to reopen the case and has scheduled hearings for November 25. Regardless, the Government aims to maintain close regulation of television development.

Meanwhile, television progress proceeds apace, and it is anticipated that, other factors being favorable, receiving sets will be on the market by the fall of 1936, but at a price too high for poupular use.

What is happening in television is told in the stories on pages 58 and 59.

Asks Boycott

Few court disputes or interruptions by authorities interfered this week with the continuance of chance games and such as regular exhibition practice.

In Kansas City Judge Henry F. McElroy, city manager, has ordered all independent theatres which advertise Bank Night to remove all signs advertising the game from the front of their theatres. The action follows the removal of the signs by Fox Midwest's twelve theatres in the city last week at the direction of the police. Judge McElroy claims that signs are misleading, that they advertise a large amount of money to be given away "tonight," when actually the money may not be given away for several days or weeks.

The action of the city manager accentuates a problem in connection with chance games—that of advertising the promotion. Postal authorities prohibit the direct advertising of the games in newspapers and theatres have had to resort to indefinite allusions.

The craze for chance games is spreading through the Kansas City territory. In St. Joseph, Mo., the games are now almost as prevalent as in Kansas City.

In New York City Loew's will add Screeno to a number of its theatres. RKO, however, is maintaining its attitude of shying away from all forms of giveaways.

A suit charging Bank Night copyright infringement has been filed in the New York federal court by Affiliated Enterprises, Inc., against the New Theatre, Inc., and Harry Schiffman. The defendants control the Ritz and Strand Theatres in Port Jervis, N. Y. Affiliated asks $10,000 damages and an injunction to restrain the defendant from making further use of the system.

The suit against the Rivoli theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., has been dismissed by Magistrate Rudich and the charges of operating a lottery by conducting the game of "Lucky" have been dropped by the authorities.

In Boston, on the other hand, Massachusetts authorities have finally clamped down on Beano after repeated warnings. Police raided the Brookline General Hospital and Thomas A. O'Connell, vice-president of the hospital, was arraigned in municipal court on charges of setting up and operating a lottery.

Says 'H.G.'

H. G. Wells, British writer and at 69 still one of the world's most prolific authors, came to America this week for his first visit to Hollywood, where he will "quietly observe," now that he is ready to be a steady writer for the screen.

Mr. Wells brought with him some observations about the cinema: "In this art, I can see the very greatest form of expression;" "The film will develop a literary collateral of the stage or novel;" "It is more entertaining to deal with something that is possible than just to have fantasy;" "Censorship is an impertinence of the officials to interfere with the artists, who are much more important than politicians;" "The life of a writer is always a struggle;" "The film organizations should agree not to make full-length colored films for ten years more;" "I don't like propaganda anywhere." See page 52.

Need Theatre

The City Council of Warrenton, Ga., has passed a resolution asking D. O. McBrayer to erect a theatre in the town. The council feels that trade would be stimulated by such a move.

Nationalism

The pressure to "keep the home fires burning" and maintain a favorable balance of trade, expressing itself in drastic restrictions and regulations, is making it increasingly difficult for American film companies to do business abroad.

Nationalism in Europe makes itself felt in other directions, too, and Paramount has been forced to agree to withdraw "The Devil Is a Woman" from world circulation on the threat of the Spanish Government to confiscate the company's prints and bar it from Spain.

The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America has sent Major Frederick L. Herron, head of its foreign department, to investigate the European situation, with a view to ease the burden. What the American companies are up against is described in the story starting on page 61.

Deal Extended

Paramount has extended Karl Hoblitzelle's operating agreement for the Interstate Circuit for 60 days, which takes it up to December 31, it was revealed this week. The Hoblitzelle group includes about 100 theatres and is one of Paramount's largest and most important theatre units, centering in Texas and the Southwest.

The extension was agreed upon after weeks of negotiation in New York and Hollywood between Mr. Hoblitzelle and John E. Otterson, Paramount president. The Hoblitzelle interests have operated the circuit under an agreement which expired September 28, and negotiations for a long-term pact will probably be resumed next month.

No agreement has been reached on an extension of the A. H. Blank operating agreement for Iowa and western Illinois theatres, and negotiations are continuing. Also still in the discussion stage is the proposed agreement under which George J. Schaefer, Paramount vice-president, would operate Minnesota Amusements for the company.

Louis Dent, former operator of Paramount theatres in the Salt Lake City area, will not be reassigned.

Fighting Ban

Samuel Cummins returned to the United States after a three months tour of the European Continent, especially to contest the litigation now pending regarding the motion picture "Ecstasy" before the United States Court of Appeals.

This Week in Pictures

DEDICATE WILL ROGERS MEMORIAL. Principals among those who participated in the unveiling of a plaque marking a new stage at the 20th Century-Fox studio named after the late screen star and commentator. Shown are Rupert Hughes, writer; Darryl Zanuck, production chief; Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of 20th Century-Fox; Shirley Temple, Governor Merriam of California, and Irvin S. Cobb, writer.

CABBY. Cabby Maple, as Bette Davis portrays her in Warner's translation of Robert Sherwood's "Petrified Forest," New York stage success of last season. Sidney Howard plays opposite.

CURLEY-CUE. The kinda-quaint name for the not-bad hairdress here re-enforcing the charms of charming-enough-without-it Anne Darling, featured player under contract to MGM.

HEADS THEATRE BODY. Samuel Pinanski, of the Mullin and Pinanski circuit, who was elected president of the Allied Theatres of Massachusetts at its annual meeting in Boston.

BRITAIN-BOUND. William K. Howard, director, as he arrived in New York to sail for England on a vacation trip, which follows completion of the Paramount picture, "Mary Burns, Fugitive."

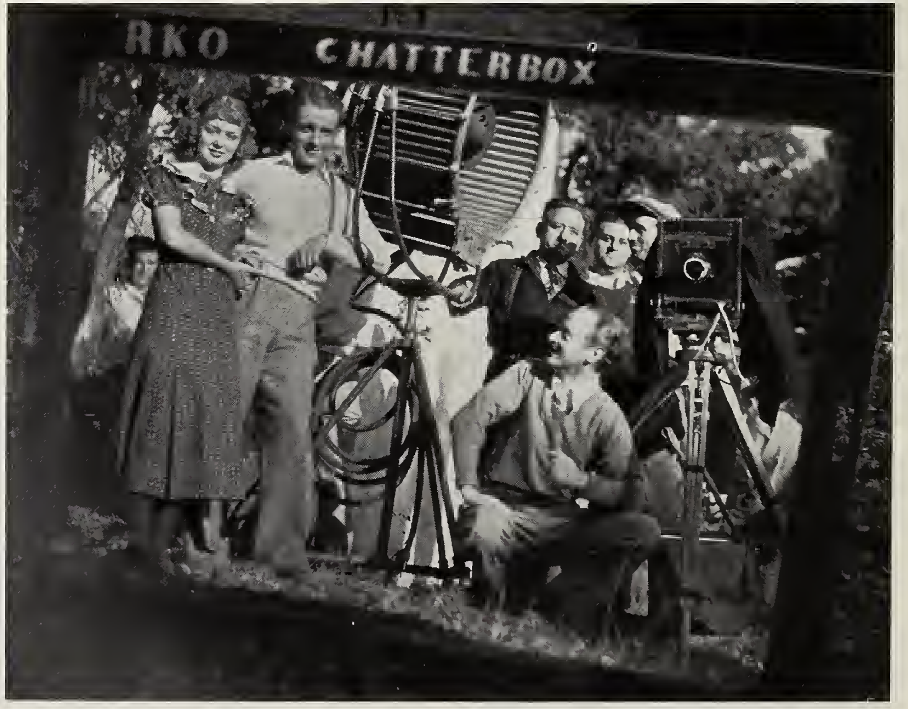
CHIPS OFF THE OL' BLOCK. Are several of these young fellows in Universal's "Adventures of Frank Merriwell," a cinemazation of literature that once was classic enough for the American boy. Shown are John King, formerly a member of Ben Bernie's orchestra; House Peters, Jr., son of H. P., Sr.; Allan Hersholt, son of Jean; Herschel Mayall, Jr., Wallace Reid, Jr., and Donald Briggs, who has the title role.

TELLING TALES ON BROADWAY. A corner of Jack Dempsey's restaurant in New York during a gay party prompted by the opening of Warner's "Stars Over Broadway," and tendered to James Melton, who makes his screen debut therein. And here's Mr. Melton, in person, flanked by Rudy Vallee and S. L. Rothafel. The picture opened at the Strand, where Roxy began his Broadway career.

THE SALES ANGLE. Got direct representation at 20th Century-Fox when John D. Clark, general manager of distribution, visited the studio while on a tour of the company's exchanges. He is shown (below) with Darryl F. Zanuck, head of production.

AIDS SICK. Joseph Bernhard, head of Warner Theatres, as he presented a Warner gift of equipment and films to the Philadelphia General Hospital through Harry Rodgers, official, and Mrs. Robert C. Loving.

AWARDED NEW CONTRACTS. Which were three more reasons why Virginia Dabney, Victoria Vinton and Ruth Eddings, Warner players, couldn't help looking pleasant for this picture. The documents are said to be the result of their work in "Freshman Love."



INCLUDING THE PHOTOGRAPHER. A rather comprehensive picture by Gaston Longet, RKO-Radio still-shooter, of Anne Shirley and Phillips Holmes, taken by M. Longet while they were on location for "Chatterbox," and with M. Longet inescapably among those present. It is difficult to explain M. Longet's presence in non-technical language. However, those familiar with mirrors may catch on.

$1,000,000 HOLLYWOOD BACKING FOR BROADWAY

Fourteen of 44 Productions Opened on New York Legitimate This Season Have Had Screen Bankrolls Behind Them

Heralding an unprecedented underwriting of legitimate show business by motion picture interests, 14 of the 44 productions which have opened on Broadway this season were launched by Hollywood bankrolls. With the season not half under way, this is twice the number financed in whole or in part by film companies during 1934-35, and the backing since September already has reached a figure estimated at $700,000.

With a number of film-financed productions in preparation and with negotiations in progress for still others, the total investment this season is expected to pass the million dollar mark.

Looking to Broadway more than ever for screen material, and in the scramble for stage profit as well, the motion picture sponsors have suffered considerable losses this year in stage production, but will reap rewards from some of the hits.

One Out of Three Ratio Seen

Legitimate managers expect that about one out of three productions will be underwritten by the film industry as the ratio for the remainder of the season ending next spring, indicating to exhibitors that their product for 1936-37 will include a greater representation of stage dramas and musicals than in the past.

The backing does not always mean that a production is bought by the backer for films, but Broadway impresarios maintain that Hollywood seldom goes in on the ground floor of a legitimate production that does not eventually find its way to the screen.

The groundwork for such a financing program had been laid in the last three years, with Warner, MGM and Twentieth Century contributing financial aid in at least a dozen plays and musical shows. Last season saw seven stage productions backed in whole or in part by film companies. Of four sponsored by Warner, three, "Calling All Stars," "Three Men on a Horse" and "Ceiling Zero," were successes; "Fly Away Home" was in the non-hit class.

This season, to date, Warner interests again lead in "angeling" six productions, of which only one has shown staying qualities. The company and Mervyn and Doris (Warner) Leroy reputedly have dropped more than $100,000 in Broadway ventures in the last few weeks.

One company which has seen unqualified returns from playing Santa Claus to the stage in MGM, which chanced a sum reported from $125,000 to $150,000 in "Jubilee," Moss Hart-Cole Porter musical comedy in which Mary Boland is featured. Business on this gay fantasy is proving the big risk was worth the price, not to speak of its screen possibilities. It is the only musical film-financed to date.

How Hollywood Is Batting In Financing of Stage Plays

Following is the standing of motion producing companies and individuals to date in their participation in the financing of the so-called "living drama" this season. The productions mentioned are stage productions and the so-called failures are those stage plays which according to managers in the legitimate field have not been successful at the box-office.

Warner Brothers—Four Productions. Three Failures.
Mervyn LeRoy—Two Productions. Two Failures.
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer—Three Productions. Three Hits.
Irving G. Thalberg—One Production. One Failure.
Paramount—Three Productions. Two Failures.
John Hay Whitney—One Production. "Very Promising."

The foregoing is by no means all-inclusive of motion picture activity on Broadway for 1935-36, but serves as a fair indication for the remainder of the season.

Other hits in which MGM is interested are Maxwell Anderson's "Winterset" and the Max Gordon production of "Pride and Prejudice." MGM is restricting its backing to a few producers, chiefly Max Gordon and Sam H. Harris, although the Group Theatre, whence came "Men in White," also is enjoying the support of MGM's checkbook to a limited extent. Clifford Odets' "Paradise Lost," a Group Theatre offering, has MGM backing and the play probably will be made into a screen version. "Room Service," formerly titled "Sing Before Breakfast," and "First Lady," opening November 26 after a road tryout, are Harris productions with MGM financing.

MGM, besides, is completely backing "Seen But Not Heard," play by Marie Baumer and Martin Berkeley to be produced by Theron Bamberger, and has a six per cent interest in "Jumbo." It is also behind Max Gordon's "Ethan Frome," which goes into rehearsal December 2. The company this week was continuing negotiations for several others.

Irving Thalberg of MGM financed Philip Barry's "Bright Star," Arthur Hopkins production, which withdrew after four days.

Other Warner Offerings Ahead

Less fortunate in its selections this year, Warner reportedly lost $14,000 in "Good Men and True," which lasted 11 performances, and $3,750, representing 37½ per cent interest, in J. B. Priestley's "Eden End," produced by Milton Shubert, which went 19 days, while Herman Shumlin's production of "Sweet Mystery of Life," in which Warner placed high hopes, was presented only eight performances and cost the company $40,000. Doris and Mervyn LeRoy backed "Play, Genius, Play" and "The Body Beautiful" to the extent of $55,000, according to report, and both were extremely short-lived. Warner has purchased the screen rights to "Sweet Mystery of Life" at a price reported as $50,000.

Warner has several others in the offing, among them being "Swing Your Lady," to be produced jointly with the Shuberts and Charles Harris and scheduled to open on Broadway December 29. "For Valor," George Tyler offering, which opened Monday night, staged by Frank Craven, who plays a leading rôle, was made possible partly at least by the Warner treasury.

Warner still is in the black on its stage ventures, however, through the phenomenal success of "Three Men on a Horse," in which it has a 25 per cent interest. The farce has been an unqualified smash since its premiere last January 30. There are three companies now on the road, and two are being assembled to open in London and Australia. When eventually it reaches the motion picture theatres, the piece will have had the way paved for huge receipts.

Paramount financed the Red Barn at Locust Valley, L. I., summer tryout theatre, and out of that association came the Broadway presentation of "There's Wisdom in Women" as its initial production under this arrangement. It premiered in Boston October 21, and opening at the Cort, New York, nine days later. While not in the hit class, the play is building.

Paramount Hopeful

A disappointment to Paramount was the quick failure of "Paths of Glory," Sidney Howard's dramatization of the Humphrey Cobb war novel produced by Arthur Hopkins, which was seen in 24 performances. Paramount's investment was reputedly $50,-

SCREEN MONEY IN THIRD OF PLAYS

000. "Most of the Game," staged by Dwight Deere Wiman and Auriol Lee, lasted one performance less. Schwab & Mandel's "Venus in Silk," another Paramount venture, was tried out on the road, but failed to open on Broadway.

Paramount is very sanguine, however, for "May Wine," a Schwab & Mandel operetta now on tour and scheduled to premiere in New York December 2. The company is "angeling" this $50,000 production to the extent of $30,000, it is reported.

The largest single investment on Broadway this season is that of the film industry's John Hay (Jock) Whitney, who backed his faith in "Jumbo" to the reported extent of nearly $300,000. Billy Rose, producer of the ambitious show at the Hippodrome, had sought Hollywood dollars, but film companies turned it down before Mr. Whitney was offered participation. Mr. Rose said the show cost $340,000 to put on. While Mr. Whitney is reported to have an eye on its production for the screen in color, whatever the results in that direction may be, it was agreed in Broadway production circles that the title will be marketable merchandise, and any picture utilizing that exploitation element is bound to attract attraction.

Sister Reported Co-investor

Mr. Whitney is said to be sharing the investment with his sister, Mrs. Charles Shipman Payson, on the basis of $150,000 each. It is little known, incidentally, that Mrs. Payson is also interested with John Hay Whitney in some of his film investments, which include Pioneer Pictures, Inc., Selznick International Pictures and Technicolor.

"Jumbo" is expected to prove a profitable investment for Mr. Whitney and several others participating, including MGM, Paul Whiteman, who is in the cast, Hecht and MacArthur, who wrote the script, and Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart, who are responsible for the music and lyrics. While the premiere gross of more than $17,000 at a special $8.80 top last Saturday night will hardly be matched at another single performance, at a scale calling for $4.40 top at night and $2.75 in the afternoon, the 4,300-seat capacity at 12 performances a week promises a potential weekly gross of $95,000. An extra source of revenue is the several thousand dollars from weekly Tuesday night radio broadcasts for Texaco, presented before a non-paying invited audience.

Extension of the idea of using the stage as an experimental laboratory for screen plays is provided in this season's plans of Twentieth Century-Fox and MGM and is being seriously considered by Paramount. Hollywood has been talking for several years about trying out stories in this manner, but it remained for an experiment conceived by Irving Thalberg to prove its value.

Marx Brothers' Test Tour

In preparation for shooting "A Night at the Opera" with the Marx Brothers, Mr. Thalberg sent the comedians on a five-weeks tour of West Coast motion picture theatres. In a 50-minute stage show, the lines and situations were thoroughly tested on the audiences, and while there was much rewriting of material, the result was a successful film and the method was found highly satisfactory, particularly in timing and development of ideas.

ATKINSON FEARS SURRENDER TO FILMS

Brooks Atkinson, dramatic critic of the New York Times, last week was gravely concerned about the standards of the stage, fearing that with large scale financing by "movie money" the theatre will "inevitably surrender to the screen".

Mr. Atkinson was answered last weekend by John J. Wildberg, former Paramount attorney, who now as a lawyer for authors and stage producers is active in financing deals with motion picture companies. Writing to the Times, he said:

*"After all, what does the public care about whose money is behind any given production, so long as the desired result is obtained? * * * All backing, unless altruistically obtained, is mainly concerned with profits. The black side of the ledger must always be relatively sparsely tenanted, but instead of administering a bucket of cold water to a legitimately interested source of financing, I feel that as long as it remains on the terms and upon the conditons that now interest motion picture companies, it should be encouraged."*

The kinks in the Marx Brothers' second picture for MGM will be ironed out on Broadway, as Mr. Thalberg in association with the Gordon and Harris team has commissioned George S. Kaufman to do a script that will serve as a stage vehicle for the brothers, later to be filmed. Studio writers will collaborate on the story. If the venture is successful, other studios have indicated they will adopt this method.

20th Century-Fox Play Company

One company already has done so, and Twentieth Century-Fox Play Company recently was formed by Joseph M. Schenck, Darryl F. Zanuck and William Goetz, with Henry Duffy of the West Coast legitimate stage as the producer. Rehearsals are to start soon on their initial presentation, "Autumn," by Margaret Kennedy, author of "The Constant Nymph" and "Escape Me Never." The production will be staged first in Hollywood, with the talent scheduled for the screen version, and later will be sent to New York. Ann Harding, Otto Kruger and Anita Louise have been mentioned for the cast.

Plans call for five plays a year under sponsorship of the producing subsidiary. There will be no clause in Twentieth Century-Fox contracts requiring players to appear in the Duffy stage productions, but talent signed for the plays will be required to give the film company an option on their services for the screen, thus assuring that many of the original stage cast will be seen in the film versions. The shows also probably will be sent on tour, westward from New York to Hollywood. Mr. Duffy has been given leave of absence as associate producer with Mr. Zanuck to organize the new company.

Samuel Goldwyn's plans revealed earlier this season for production with H. C. Potter and George Haight so far have not materialized, although it is known that he has offered a sizable sum for a half interest in at least one of the better Broadway plays. Universal and RKO Radio are not known to have any stage arrangements.

Erik Charell, film director, has been conferring with MGM and Warner about monetary support for "White Horse Inn," which he staged in London's Coliseum in 1931. The play may be done in New York this winter.

Also of Hollywood, B. P. Schulberg and Marion Gering, who recently formed a stage producing firm, have scheduled December 26 for the Broadway premiere of their "Tapestry in Gray," by Martin Flavin. An elaborate production, it is to have a cast of 51, featuring Elissa Landi.

Plans to produce plays in New York destined for the screen have been announced by Al Rosen, formerly of the West Coast, who says he is backed by an independent film company, which he declines to name. The first, "One Good Year," is being prepared for opening November 26; others in prospect are "Two on a Latchkey" and "Green Carnations." Film production is planned in the East.

Paramount Interest Long Standing

Paramount's participation in the legitimate theatre goes back many years. The company was among the first to consider the stage a worthwhile financial investment as a talent and story source. As far back as 1919, Famous Players-Lasky negotiated a deal for the Charles Frohman properties and also became interested in several Gilbert Miller productions.

While MGM financed no productions last season, it is already rivaling Warner this year and may lead in the extent of its backing before the season is much more advanced. Twentieth Century and Darryl Zanuck were responsible for three of the seven productions financed by the films last season. Twentieth Century's interest, in fact, became apparent almost from its beginnings two seasons ago.

Far the most part, Broadway welcomed this participation as bringing its greatest financial rewards. Some managers, however, like Brooks Atkinson, dramatic seer of the New York Times, bewailed the "loss of integrity" of the stage through such alliance, and maintained that as a result a greater proportion of bad plays is produced, with the sole intent of pleasing the ultimate film audience.

The less biased managers frankly agreed with Gilbert W. Gabriel, play critic of the New York American, that "we are getting neither better nor worse plays thereby—nor more nor fewer." Mr. Gabriel recalled that "when, only a few seasons ago, it was first discovered that Hollywood wherewithal was behind some few 42d street productions, all the affrighted purists predicted that this would be the end of the independent theatre, the legitimate theatre, the theatre-that-was, the good and beautiful and noble theatre of all times."

Mr. Gabriel added that while that prediction went "swiftly kerplock," the worry, in some circles, still remains.

Expanded Legion Plans Discussed

Plans for an expanded and increasingly effective Legion of Decency were laid last week by prelates of the Roman Catholic Church at their annual conference in Washington.

Although the conference made no announcement of its activities, it was learned that the motion picture came in for considerable discussion. Pre-meeting plans called for the submission of a report on the activities of the Legion of Decency and suggestions for its future. Determination to expand the operations of the organization indicates that high church officials are not yet fully satisfied that the "clean-up" of the screen—for which the Legion was formed—has been completed.

As evidence of its intention to continue the effort to improve the cultural level of motion pictures, the Administrative Committee of the National Catholic Welfare Council, which carries out the mandates of the annual bishops' conference, announced the expansion of the Episcopal Committee on Motion Pictures by the addition as a member of Bishop Stephen J. Donahue, of New York.

The committee is headed by Archbishop John T. McNicholas, of Cincinnati, who will continue as chairman during the coming year, the other members being Bishop Hugh C. Boyle, of Pittsburgh; Bishop John J. Cantrell, of Los Angeles and San Diego, and Bishop John F. Noll, Fort Wayne, Ind.

Sunday Shows Get An Excellent Start

Theatre men in Philadelphia are jubilant over the successful start of Sunday shows last week. In the face of a northeast storm that whipped rain at gale force and flooded streets in some places it is estimated that more than 200,000 attended shows in some 300 houses.

Matinees were poor, but evening shows picked up. The Stanley was the outstanding house with "Mutiny on the Bounty" on the screen. The theatre had to stop selling tickets for three hours in the evening.

Neighborhood business in congested districts was good. Unofficial estimates from Warners are that 175,000 attended in spite of the weather. That figure is above that of an average day.

Clergymen, on the other hand, and particularly those who fought Sunday motion pictures before the recent election, protested the showings. Reverend William B. Forney of the Lord's Day Alliance, who has talked legal action to halt Sunday shows, said Sunday School attendance was suffering.

Dr. Charles H. Long, rector of Zion Episcopal Church, took an opposing view, and said, "People who want to come to church will come. I do not expect Sunday shows will have any effect upon my congregation."

Wall St. and Films

FROM out in the theatre field where exhibitors are strenuously engaged in the serious business of obtaining product capable of satisfying a discriminating public, meanwhile exerting every effort to present the product obtained in a manner to enable it to produce the best results at the box office, there comes word of a spreading apprehension relative to what has commenced to appear as a new march by Wall Street on motion pictures.

To the theatreman anything and everything that takes in and about motion picture companies is viewed in the light of possible effect upon, first, the quality and, secondly, the cost of motion pictures. It is not surprising that they should recall with some alarum the experiences of a few years ago when during the momentary ascendency of the banker, broker and securities operator the industry was ushered very close to the brink of disaster. They recall the internal confusion which was created and they remember with bitter regret the studio disorganization which followed, bringing inevitably in its wake a lot of motion pictures which caused the public to wonder whether, after all, the motion picture was not really a very much over-rated form of amusement.

It is true that the motion picture industry like every other great industry has developed beyond the limits of private finance; hence, the services of the banker are needed. But his services are needed as a banker and not as a manager or operator. In the motion picture industry the services of bankers as managers and operators may have been some worse but not a great deal worse than in other industries because the record generally is shocking in its destructive proclivities.

The return or even near approach of banker domination of the management and operation of motion picture companies is indeed a prospect that theatremen may well worry about, at least if what has happened in the past is any indication of what would happen in such circumstances in the future.

Although the record is uncompromisingly plain, it would seem that there are still some who remain unconvinced that these many theories, close to the heart of the banker, relative to factory-like operation of studios, the merger resort to reduce over-head, clerks instead of managers and similar schemes are nothing but a short-cut to the destruction of the business of motion pictures.

Whether these theorists or the men and the methods which have made motion pictures and the industry are to prevail is a question which the coming year may determine.

Stage Shows

IT seems almost fantastic that this industry after experiencing the assaults of an outraged public opinion induced by the content of certain motion pictures and after observing the satisfactory results which followed the clean-up of picture material should at any point resort to the cheap and indefensible bid for patronage involved in putting on suggestive stage shows together with wholesome motion pictures.

Strange as it may seem, the Oriental Theatre in Chicago, a Paramount house operated by Balaban and Katz, has been featuring such stage attractions as a well-known strip dancer from burlesque and tabloid versions of burlesque shows identified with the name of a burlesque producer whose reputation with the decent public chiefly is based on newspaper accounts of efforts of the police to have his theatres padlocked on account of the presentation of the vilest performances that go under the name of theatrical entertainment.

Critic's Prayer

CRITICS in the pursuit of their profession find themselves at times inveighing against all manner of things. In the long run all or many of them must find themselves lapsing into a feeling of frustration and despair for the very good reason that despite their hearty denunciation of things nothing much happens or at least not enough happens to the object of their scorn.

There is, however, one happy instance to the contrary at hand. In this the most irreconcilable critic has found full and complete satisfaction. Reference is made to the eventual fate which has attended the Von Sternberg production entitled "The Devil Is a Woman."

It will be recalled that last Winter when this picture was first exposed to public

H. M. Warner Due to Be Reelected

Harry M. Warner is expected to be reelected president of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., at the annual directors' meeting December 17, following a stockholders' meeting in Wilmington December 9 at which directors are to be elected. Two suits are pending to prevent the stockholders from confirming proposed agreements.

Harry M., Albert and Jack L. Warner are scheduled to be continued as directors, with Abel Cary Thomas, Waddill Catchings and Henry A. Rudkin.

The company's annual financial report was to be issued this weekend, for the year ended August 31st.

Sufficient Proxies Expected

Proxies for the annual stockholders' meeting are pouring in, it was said, and it is anticipated that more than the required amount will be obtained, which would assure confirmation of the proposed agreements unless prevented by court order.

Meanwhile, hearing on Martin J. Clougherty's move to block confirmation of an out-of-court settlement of a suit brought against the company some time ago by Max Goldberg, a minority stockholder, was postponed to November 27 by Federal Judge Mortimer W. Byers in Brooklyn. The court had issued an order requiring Warner to show cause why a stay should not be issued.

Warner attorneys have applied for a counter order to have Mr. Clougherty, a Boston resident and Warner stockholder, show cause why the case should not be dismissed on the ground the court has no jurisdiction and none of the parties involved reside in the district. The point was argued and decision was reserved pending the filing of briefs before November 25th.

Charges "Excessive Price"

The complaint alleges that as part of the settlement Mr. Goldberg's stock was acquired by the company at an "excessive price," and that proxies sent out for the stockholders' meeting provide only for approval of the settlement and make no provision for the registering of disapproval by stockholders. The move for an accounting deals with the employment contracts of the Warner Brothers and their stock deals with Renraw, Inc.

Supreme Court Justice Carew in New York has indicated that he would deny a motion for an injunction against the company to prevent stockholders from voting on a compromise and settlement made by the Warner brothers, under which they delivered 100,000 shares of stock to the company in payment of certain obligations. The action was brought by Harris Pepper, a minority stockholder. While Justice Carew reserved decision, he indicated that Mr. Pepper's proper course would be to campaign among the other stockholders to prevent ratification of the agreement. The employment contract was made in 1928.

Censors Hit Only One Film

The state of Massachusetts, which under its Sunday censorship law is one of the strictest surveyors of films in the country, directed eliminations in only one of the last 48 pictures passed by the Department of Public Safety. Paramount's "Ship Cafe" suffered the elimination of one scene.

Lichtman Takes Up New Duties

view the immediate result was a torrent of adverse criticism—just about as severe as any which has greeted the release of a motion picture. But the legion of reviewers who liked not at all this picture, whose ranks included this writer, now may indulge in the uncommon experience of savoring a satisfaction which is the ultimate, which will stand for all time as the one complete, uncompromising answer to the outraged critic's prayer. "The Devil Is a Woman" has been deliberately, carefully and thoroughly burned up!

It is true that the incineration of this unhappy picture was primarily in answer to an adamant position taken by the Spanish Government on account of alleged affront to civil guards but incidentally also it gives to the critics a denouement often hoped for but seldom if ever attained.

New Reel Length Given Approval

With RKO approving the 2,000-foot reel length, all major distributors have given their consent with the exception of Universal, and actual adoption of the new standard becomes effective April 1, 1936, it was announced by Gordon Mitchell, Academy Research Council manager, in Hollywood on Tuesday.

Companies adopting the new length are MGM, Columbia, Paramount, RKO, Samuel Goldwyn, Twentieth Century-Fox, United Artists and Warner. They are now making the necessary alterations in exchange vaults, shipping equipment and the like. Sample reels, with a 15-inch diameter and five-inch hub, are being shipped to New York by the Council for inspection by the distributors' committee.

All reel manufacturers are to receive specifications of the standard. During the transition, studios will cut all productions for changeover at 1,000-foot lengths to accommodate theatres not equipped for the new reel. To protect theatres receiving the 2,000-foot reel from getting false changeover cues in the middle of a reel, the Council recommends two alternative methods, one to be handled in the exchange, the other the making of a dupe negative of part of each reel in the laboratory.

Injunction Halts Lincoln Case

A temporary injunction holding up settlement of the Augusta Paper-Lincoln Theatres Corporation suit in Lincoln, Neb. has been obtained by Homer Burket, Annie Leonard, Willard Folsom and Phoebe Miller.

Mr. Paper recently was awarded a verdict of $11,754 for breach of contract, but the plaintiffs in the new action claim that they hold a judgment for $7,597.

Seven State Units Of Exhibitor Meet

Seven exhibitor organizations held meetings this week—Independent Theatre Owners of Arkansas met at Little Rock; Denver exhibitors gathered to hear Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; the Iowa-Nebraska Theatre Owners gathered at Des Moines; Allied of Massachusetts met in Boston, to elect a president; Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio held their annual convention in Cleveland and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Oklahoma also heard Mr. Kuykendall.

The formation of regional boards to settle all differences arising with film distribution was the subject of general discussion, and the one of the most importance, at the convention of the I. T. O. of Arkansas at the Harion Hotel in Little Rock.

Now Favors Giveaways

In Denver, at a luncheon attended by approximately all the independent theatre owners, Mr. Kuykendall told of the fights his organization is waging and asked for cooperation to prevent discriminatory taxation and adverse laws. One of the important developments from his talk was the revealation that the president of the M.P.T.O.A. has shifted his stand with regard to giveaways and is now highly in favor of them because many theatres would be forced to close without them because of the inferior grade of pictures they are forced to play.

"Iowa-Nebraska Allied is willing to cooperate with the National Allied organization though withdrawn from membership, on all national programs for the good of their interests," declared president Leo F. Wolcott at the organization's meeting in Des Moines.

Pinanski Heads Unit

Samuel Pinanski of the Mullin & Pinanski theatres was elected president of Allied of Massachusetts at their annual meeting in Boston. John H. Devlin of Loew's was elected vice-president and Stanley Sumner of the University, treasurer. Joseph H. Brennan was chosen secretary.

At the Allied Theatre Owners of Michigan convention in Detroit, Abram F. Myers, president of the national organization, gave an hour's talk and urged a stand against block booking. Presidents A. A. Bair of Indiana and Martin Smith of Ohio also addressed the meeting as did Congressman Pettingill.

The third annual convention of the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio met in Cleveland at the Deshler Wallick Hotel with the preferred playing time bill, music tax, Bank Nights, giveaways, sales policies of various distributing companies and sales taxes on film rentals the chief topics.

In Oklahoma City the old-age pension tax law, already in effect, antimarathon legislation or court action, theatre fire insurance, taxes, self-regulation, score charges, Bank Night and dual billing all came in for attention at the annual meeting of the M.P.T.O. of Oklahoma. Mr. Kuykendall also spoke at this gathering, outlining the set-up of the national organization for the benefit of the theatre owners.

Home Office of Lawyer Hays

¶ It's up there on top of the tallest building, on the dominant corner of Courthouse Square in the Hoosier town of Sullivan

by TERRY RAMSAYE

Rolling out of Terre Haute, that "little town of Tail Holt" immortalized by James Whitcomb Riley, crossing the Wabash where Paul Dresser saw "the candle light a-gleaming," and taking a sharp right down the river, you traverse a comfortable Indiana land of hills and prairies, passing through historic Shackamak and within the hour fetch up in the central square of Sullivan.

It is the seat of Sullivan county with the courthouse in the middle. It would remind you ever so much of the old state house sitting very like it in a very like square up at Vandalia in Illinois, where one young Abe Lincoln made some sort of history and won a legislative victory in destroying a quorum by jumping out a window. They prove it to you up at Vandalia by showing you the window, anyway.

Thinking of Lincoln, this sunny noontide in peaceful Sullivan, one may remember that quotation-weary line of Ralph Waldo Emerson's to the effect that if a man build a better lawyer's office than his neighbor, the world will beat a path to his door, even though his home be in the woods—or something to that general purport and effect.

So up there on top of Sullivan's most imposing building, the Sherman, three stories of red brick, on the dominant corner of the courthouse square, highly visible but chaste gold leaf letters proclaim the office of Hays & Hays, attorneys-at-law.

Hays & Hays cover the whole top floor, with suite after suite of offices and law libraries. There's an elevator available, too, if you are not in a hurry and the operator chances to be about at the time, but the stairs are well worn.

That Hays & Hays law plant is as crisp as a letter from the late George Eastman. It is as uncarpeted as a hospital, with expanses of good Indiana hardwood flooring, age-mellowed and waxed to the texture of an old violin. It is, in fact, so slick that they do not need any screens. Every fly that lights slips and breaks his neck. The walls are monotone in spotless paint. Furnishings are conservative, substantial and of a manner to be impressive. Everything is in its place, precisely.

Smack in the corner of this floor of legal machinery is an office lettered "Will H. Hays." That's Will's office and his headquarters, believe it or not, and that's right where Sullivan folks expect to find him.

Will's office is fitted out in circassian walnut desk and long table, the desk in orderly array and differing importantly from the desk he uses when he is out of town in New York only in that the Indiana equipment includes two ash trays, while the New York installation has none. Like as not he's found that smoking encourages callers toward loafing. The Indiana telephone looks used—not worn, you understand, but used.

He's Still One of The Sullivan Folks

There is a picture of his father on the wall, but no other relief of its plain expanses. Will came into the law offices in 1900 and got his name on the door and the stationery.

Exploring the floor we came upon Alonzo Owen, of the staff of Hays & Hays, who was at the moment in conference on a matter of some land titles with one weathered, lank and alert "Mr. Sharp." Mr. Sharp's hobby seems to be farms and many of them.

"One of Will's clients," Mr. Owen remarked in introduction. "I am just taking care of him today because Will happens to be out of town."

"You retain rather imposing counsel in your land matters," we ventured to Mr. Sharp.

"You bet—Will's a dern smart lawyer—there ain't none better on Sullivan county titles," Mr. Sharp confided. Mr. Owen nodded.

Out in front, down along the wall of the courthouse square the villagers and farmer folk were sitting, comfortable in the warming glow of the autumn sun, with flickering shadows of scattered reluctant maple leaves above flecking shadows on the walks, all in overalls, a-chewin' of dogleg tobacco and a-talkin, as they will in Indiana, of politics from the Sullivan county courthouse to the White House. Of course they all knew Will, agreeing too that for a hometown boy he'd done purty well so far.

None of these folks, of course, knew or would have cared much about those two special long distance telephone lines on the poles overhead that link the office of Hays & Hays with its national and international law business and which keep their Will, in New York, Los Angeles or wherever—when he is "out of town"—in touch with concerns of which he is continuously the active head. These friends down there in the courthouse square set a heap of store on Will and they like the way he's remembered his dad with his name right up there on the window in gold letters along with the active members of the organization—right at the top of the list, too: "John T. Hays (deceased)." They've heard to be sure about Will having some sort of a connection with the movies, just another client of his'n that takes him out of town a bit now and then.

Law business, even for the big fellows in the movies, is just law business to these Sullivan county folks. Politics, that's something else. In Sullivan the big fact about Will is that he was the postmaster-general, and he knows a lot of "big men."

Politics? Will Does His Votin' in Sullivan

Will votes here, right here in Sullivan—you bet he does. He's never out of town on election day. He lives here. Ain't his house he built himself right down there at No. 250, and ain't he got his commission as postmaster-general right up there in his reception room on the wall, with the real handwritin's of Warren G. Harding, president of the United States, onto it? Sure he has, and not so far from that autograph of Ohio's last gift to the White House is an autographed picture of James J. Davis, Pennsylvania iron puddler, U. S. senator and builder of the Loyal Order of the Moose. If you call him "Jimmy" at the discovery of the picture—"Jimmy," not "Jim"—then you are identified as an insider, a close friend. Our error.

Will knows his Sullivan county. There is not a movie picture or autograph in the place—that's for New York, if any.

There is, to be sure, on the big floor, a room devoted entirely to the storage of mementoes, photographs, mostly, and a whole table is covered with letter openers. The vast array of them suggests they were tokens from grateful customers when, succeeding Mr. Burleson, Mr. Hays took steps to restore the postal service.

Down stairs on the first floor of the Sherman building and right back of the drug store is the Sherman theatre, Sullivan's first run, and until they get done putting a new Formica front on the Lyric, across the square, in the process of being rebuilt after a fire and a lease controversy, the Sherman is the only run.

The girl at the box office couldn't remember selling Will a seat—maybe he sees plenty of pictures when he's out of town.

Richardson's Sixth 'Bluebook' Is Out; New Handy Index

Containing over 700 pages of text and illustrations, and with its material so organized that both the highly trained projectionist and the student are equally served, the sixth edition of F. H. Richardson's "Bluebook of Projection," just published, reveals a painstaking effort to combine an exposition of underlying principles with detailed explanations of approved projection practice.

Throughout the book the fundamental sciences represented in the projectionist's craft, such as electricity and optics, receive theoretical attention as well as practical application to the every-day problems and processes of projection and sound reproduction. There are 32 chapters, and, in addition, sections devoted to definitions of technical terms, mathematical quantities, and so on.

Making the volume particularly handy for reference as well as for general study is a system of paragraph identification designed to facilitate cross-references and the finding of the answers to the study questions which precede each chapter.

This edition of what has become through the years a standard work on projection, is published by the Quigley Publishing Company. It is handsomely printed on coated paper and is profusely illustrated with diagrams and photographic reproductions.

In a foreword, Adolph Zukor, pioneer producer and chairman of the board of Paramount Pictures, Inc., gives glowing recognition to the part the skilled projectionist plays in the effectiveness of the motion picture as an amusement medium. Mr. Richardson has dedicated the book to the IATSE & MPMO, with the approval of George E. Browne, international president of the organization.

Skouras and Loew Pool Is Discussed

Radical changes in the pooling arrangements for Astoria, L. I., and upper Broadway, New York City, loom on the Manhattan theatre horizon in the event of completion of negotiations now underway between George Skouras and the Loew's Circuit houses in Long Island City and Skouras, RKO and Springer & Cocalis on upper Broadway.

In both, Skouras pool operation of the houses will be retained by the present management, the effect of the deals being to concentrate and allocate product into the theatres declared most suited.

The Skouras interests operate the Broadway, Steinway and Grand in Astoria, while Loew's has the Tri-Boro and the Astoria.

On upper Broadway Skouras has the Nemo, Riverside and Riveria; Springer & Cocalis the Symphony, Olympia, Stoddard, 77th Street, Thalia, Beacon and the Carlton; RKO has the Midtown, 81st Street and the Yorktown.

Supply Dealers Meet; Discuss Advertising

Furtherance of advertising campaigns which have already started was the principal topic at the semi-annual meeting of the directors of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers' Association in New York, beginning Thursday.

Attending were B. F. Shearer, Seattle, president; K. R. Douglass, Boston, vice-president; Clem Rizzo, Philadelphia, treasurer; J. E. Robin, New York, executive secretary; J. C. Hornstein, New York; George McArthur, Detroit; J. M. Graham, Denver, and A. F. Morrone, Pittsburgh.

Paramount Moves Meet to Chicago

Paramount home office executives and district sales managers will meet at the Edgewater Beach Hotel in Chicago on December 1st, 2nd and 3rd, instead of in Los Angeles, as previously announced.

The three day meeting, to discuss policies and products, will be attended by John E. Otterson, Adolph Zukor, George J. Schaefer, Neil Agnew, J. J. Unger, Charles Reagan, Russell Holman, R. M. Gillham, Alec Moss, Al Wilkie and Don Velde from the Paramount home office; Ernst Lubitsch, Watterson Rothacker, Chandler Sprague and Bill Pine from the Hollywood studio, and the following district managers: M. S. Kusell, P. A. Bloch, Harry Goldstein, William Erbb, Oscar Morgan, Jack Dugger, J. E. Fontaine, R. C. LiBeau, Hugh Braly, M. H. Lewis and B. Blotcky.

They will be shown six completed productions ready for release during the first weeks of the new year, and selected episodes from another half-dozen important productions now nearing completion in Hollywood. The delegates are promised completed prints of "The Bride Comes Home," starring Claudette Colbert with Fred MacMurray and Robert Young; "Collegiate," with Joe Penner, Jack Oakie, Ned Sparks and Frances Langford; "Rose of the Rancho," so-starring Gladys Swarthout and John Boles; "The Milky Way," Harold Lloyd's comedy; "Her Master's Voice" with Edward Everett Horton and Peggy Conklin; and "Millions in the Air," with John Howard, Wendy Barrie and Willie Howard.

In addition, the Chicago delegates will view portions of "Anything Goes," with Bing Crosby, Ethel Merman and Charlie Ruggles; "Desire," co-starring Marlene Dietrich and Gary Cooper; "Give Us This Night," starring Gladys Swarthout and Jan Kiepura; Mae West's "Klondike Lou"; Walter Wanger's production in Technicolor of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," starring Sylvia Sidney with Fred MacMurray featured; and "Woman Trap," with Gertrude Michael and Akim Tamiroff.

Walter Reade Cleared of Theatre Vandalism

Walter Reade, New York circuit operator, was exonerated Tuesday in General Sessions court of a malicious mischief indictment, returned by the county grand jury last May after the wrecking of the fixtures of the Astor Theatre in Times Square, as it was about to be turned over to court receivers in a foreclosure proceeding.

The court held there was no evidence that Mr. Read, who was indicted with four others, was in the theatre, which he formerly leased, on the night of the vandalism.

Magazine Asks Boycott of Films Called Pro-War

Boycott of films out of harmony with Red and pacific views was urged in the current issue of New Theatre, a magazine of radical tendencies, which has a newsstand sale. The publication describes the campaign of radical student organizations against such films as "Red Salute."

The magazine discloses that in addition to a number of cities where students have fought the United Artists-Reliance picture, "picket lines are planned for showings in Chicago, Pittsburgh and Madison." New Theatre takes exception also to "Here Comes the Band" (MGM) and "Annapolis Farewell" (Paramount) as being "propaganda for war," as well as "Riffraff" (MGM), "Fighting Youth" (Universal) and "Frisco Kid" (Warner).

The Red press in New York continues to agitate for boycotts and demonstrations at theatres, and is listing films opening at local houses which are to be attacked by Communists. Among these is "Riffraff," and it is pointed out that "Red Salute" will shortly be at all neighborhood RKO houses.

There was a flurry in Philadelphia last Thursday night when about 40 students and others from local radical organizations paraded in front of the Aldine at the opening of "Red Salute." The number was reduced by the police to the usual and legal two, though the picketing was not attended by any real disturbance.

Members of the picketing band distributed leaflets condemning the picture to passersby. The circulars demanded that the film be withdrawn from the Aldine and that neighborhood houses cancel their bookings. Picketing was resumed Friday morning.

Two Claims Against Paramount Rejected

Federal court Judge Alfred C. Coxe, in New York, signed an order this week granting the petition of Paramount Publix to disallow a claim of $156,784 by Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, and another claim for $31,905 by Afgar Corporation. Both are in connection with the reorganization proceedings of Paramount Pictures Distributing and is based upon an assignment dated January 20, 1934, from the Sunrise Corporation, Florida, to Paramount Pictures Distributing Corp.

Hearing has been set for November 22 before Judge Coxe on the motion of Sir William Wiseman, of Kuhn, Loeb and Company to vacate the subpoena requiring him to submit to examination before trial of the suits brought by the Paramount trustees in which he is named as a defendant.

Si Fabian's offer of $1,500,000 for the Brooklyn Paramount has been rejected by United States District Court Judge Inch with the advice that the trustees of Allied Owners' Corporation should wait until they see whether they can get taxes cut before a sale is attempted. Two other offers made by Riker and Company and Samuel Strausberg were also disapproved.

Thirty-Six Productions in Work As Seven More Are Begun—"Captain Blood" a Year's Labor — Will Rogers Stage Dedicated by the 20th Century-Fox — Union Clamps Down on Two Producers

As the number of pictures actually in work totalled 36, the week saw seven features started and five completed. The newly started and finished product appears to be of higher grade, and several of the pictures give promise of making a big-time standard.

This status is reflected in the potential audience interest and showmanship availability values of the two pictures started at Warner's. On the stages is "Anthony Adverse," adapted from the widely publicized novel of the same title and for which a three-month shooting schedule has been set. Fredric March is featured, supported by a large cast which currently includes Steffi Duna, Rafaela Ottiano, Donald Woods, John Carradine, Anne Shoemaker, Clara Blandick, Barlowe Borland, Claude Rains and Joseph Crehan. Mervyn LeRoy is directing.

Matching this feature is "Singing Kid," in which Al Jolson is the top name. Others listed are Beverly Roberts, Edward Everett Horton, Allen Jenkins, Ricardo Cortez, Mitchell and Durant, Andrew Tombes, Joseph King, Claire Dodd, Sybil Jason and Martha Tibbetts. William Keighley is directing.

Two pictures were also started by 20th Century-Fox. In "Captain January," which David Butler directs, Shirley Temple will be seen supported by Guy Kibbee, Buddy Ebsen (featured in "Broadway Melody"), Slim Summerville and Garrett Joplin. Teaming Warner Baxter and Gloria Stuart in the leads, "Shark Island" also got under way. Harry Carey, Claude Gillingwater and O. P. Heggie are included in support. John Ford is directing.

Universal started "Captain Commanding," which will present Jack Holt, Diana Gibson, Grace Bradley, Robert Armstrong, Charles Murray, Dewey Robinson, Edwin Maxwell, Guy Usher and Betty Healy. Lambert Hillyer is directing.

"The Pace That Kills" was started by Willis Kent Productions. The cast lists Noel Madison, Dean Benton, Lois January, Lois Lindsay and Sheila Manners. William O'Connor is directing.

Columbia started "Hell Ship Morgan."

The three 20th Century-Fox features dominate the completed picture quota. "King of Burlesque" looks to be the most important of the trio in story, cast and production values. Among the featured names presented are Warner Baxter, Alice Faye, Arline Judge, Mona Barrie, Gregory Ratoff, Dixie Dunbar, Fats Waller, Charles Quigley, Paxton Sisters, Shaw and Lee, Andrew Tombes, Sirley Deane, Kenny Baker, Zoop Welch, Claudia Coleman, Ellen Lowe, Herbert Shelley and Key Luke. Sidney Lanfield directed. The second feature, "Gentle Julia," will present Jane Withers, Tom Brown, Marsha Hunt, Jackie Searle, Francis Ford, George Meeker, Maurice Murphy, Barry Holman, Myra Marsh, Hattie McDaniel, Jackie Hughes and Eddie Buzard. John Blystone directed. In the last of the group, "Champagne Charlie," Paul Cavanagh, Helen Ford, Thomas Beck, Minna Gombel, Herbert Mundin, Noel Madison and Montagu Love will be seen. James Tinling directed.

CONFEDERACY AIDS "SO RED THE ROSE"

Chapters of the Daughters of the Confederacy are receving letters this week from Mrs. A. Massey, general president, urging a movement to enlist the support of all members for Paramount's "So Red the Rose," and urging them to influence the support of others.

Paramount, last Thursday, conducted premieres of the picture in the 11 southern state capitals of the old Confederacy, enlisting the support of the various southern governors and important civic and political associations.

Exploitation campaigns were conducted in each city, reports on which appear in the Managers' Round Table section.

Paramount finished "Anything Goes." A musical, it features Bing Crosby with Ethel Merman. The support includes Charlie Ruggles, Ida Lupino, Grace Bradley, Arthur Treacher, Robert McWade, Laura Treadwell, Margaret Dumont, Jerry Tucker, Sanami and Michi and Matt Moore. Lewis Milestone directed.

Columbia finished "Panic on the Air."

"Captain Blood" One Year in the Making

From the scenarist's typewriter to the day the film editors locked the completed film in the vaults, "Captain Blood" traced an eventful colorful production career. Since the time Warner Brothers-First National studio executives first conceived the idea of the story's vivid hero, Peter Blood, as a motion picture character in which audiences and showman would find unusual interest, until the time it is given general release late in December, more than a year will have elapsed.

Responsibility for the production was handed to Supervisor Harry Joe Brown shortly before last Christmas. Casey Robinson was assigned the task of preparing the screen play for the famous Rafael Sabitini novel of romance and adventure. Aided by a corps of assistants, these two spent months in research, an analysis of the story in its relation to semi-historical considerations, and an effort to be sure that everything planned was authentically correct before a player or director was signed.

Six months of this. Then in June Michael Curtiz was selected as director and he, with Robinson and Brown, spent weeks in testing scores of players before the two leads, Errol Flynn and Olivia de Havilland, both at the time comparatively unknown artists, were chosen. Finally, midway in July, the picture went into work with Hal Mohr heading a regiment of cameramen.

Sixteen weeks were required for actual filming, during which time 282,160 feet of film were used. It took more than two weeks for the film editor, George Amy, and his assistant cutters to consolidate this amount in the approximate footage of 10,000 feet, in which it will eventually reach the world's motion picture theatre screens. Both on stages on location some of the largest sets, which necessitated intensive labor and ingenuity on the part of hundreds of artisans, electricians, designers, decorators and technicians were built. More than 60 in number, these sets included the construction of two medieval war galleons, complete to the smallest details, which alone taxed the capacity of one gigantic stage. A second stage was occupied by a set depicting a Jamaica slave plantation. A third stage contained interiors of the palace of King James II and the inner rooms of the mansion of the governor of Port Royal. The fourth was occupied by a set reproducing the pirate tavern in Tortuga. Additionally, stretching for more than a quarter of a mile along Vitagraph Lake, the city of Port Royal as it existed during the time of the story's action, was reproduced in every feature.

Some idea of the scope of the picture which in addition to featuring Flynn and Miss de Havilland may be gleaned from the size of the supporting cast. Among scores of other name players, Lionel Atwill, Basil Rathbone, Guy Kibbee, Ross Alexander, Robert Barratt, Henry Stephenson, Forrester Harvey, David Torrance and J. Carroll Naish will be seen. Yet during the three-month production schedule more than 2,800 extras were given a total of 32,000 hours of work.

Propping the production was one of the largest tasks ever assigned a studio prop department. In addition to completely rigging the two vessels and providing the millions and one little details on the 60 or more separate sets, more than 2,000 costumes, exact in detail from wig to shoes, occupied the activities of scores of designers, seamstresses, milliners, hairdressers and makeup specialist. To head prop man, "Scotty" More, whose name is seldom seen and of whom only a few off the lot ever heard, was assigned the job of supplying the props. What he had on his hands may be seen in the hundreds of practice flintlock muskets and muzzle-loading pistols, more than 500 cutlasses, and half as many rapiers and sabers, 60 practical bronze cannon, not to include the myriad gems, silks, coins, art objects, as the pirate loot.

Will Rogers Stage At Movietone City

Smiles blended with tears as, with hundreds of his old friends in attendance, 20th Century-Fox studios dedicated a magnificent new stage to the memory of Will Rogers. As industrial, state and national dignitaries, struggling to subdue their emotions, paid tribute to the man whose untimely passing was an incalculable loss, not only to motion pictures and this nation, but to the entire world, it became the lot of a little girl, Shirley Temple, who in merely saying "I loved Mr. Rogers, too," after she had unveiled the bronze plaque to his memory, to give adequate voice to the sentiment which her famous elders sought eloquently to express. (Picture in Pictorial Section.)

The words, "Will Rogers, you made the whole world laugh and made the whole world love you," embossed in bold relief beneath his picture on the plaque, were the inspiration for every speaker.

Introducing Rupert Hughes as toastmaster, Joseph M. Schenck said, "Let us not make this a solemn occasion, for Will Rogers is with us in spirit today; let us, instead, make it an occasion for celebration." Louis B. Mayer voiced the esteem in which the entire motion picture industry held Will Rogers, while Frank F. Merriam, governor of the state of California, added the tribute of the people of the state.

When Gladys Swarthout sang "The Parting of Friends" tears began to well in the eyes of all present. There was no holding them back when Irvin S. Cobb, visibly affected, spoke reverently of his old friend, and when John Boles sang "Old Faithful." Fred Stone, Rogers' closest friend, faltered as he told of his love for "my old pal who has gone."

The words of the former Secretary of Commerce in charge of aviation, Colonel C. M. Young; United States Senator William Gibbs McAdoo, and the Governor of Arizona, B. B. Moore, echoed the prevailing sentiment.

Debenture Holders' Plan for GTE Is Approved in Court

Chancellor Josiah O. Wolcott in the Wilmington chancery court on Wednesday approved the debenture holders' committee's plan to reorganize General Theatre Equipment, which has been in receivership since February, 1932.

The plan would transfer all assets to the benefit of the creditors.

At the same time Chief Justice Daniel Layton approved a settlement between United States Senator Daniel Hastings, GTE receiver, and Chase National Bank of New York under the terms of which Chase, Amerex Holding Corporation, directors and officials of Chase and those associated with it in financing GTE, would be released from all obligations. Chase would reduce its claims against GTE by $3,462,767, and Amerex would surrender to the receiver GTE debentures worth $1,500,000.

The Mrs. William Fox's All-Continental Corporation, large GTE creditor, on Wednesday withdrew its objection to the reorganization plan, leaving the sole objector Bessie Cohen, New York, holder of $2,000 in bonds.

The machinery for erecting the reorganization will be started at once by the reorganization committee, which represents about $12,000,000 in GTE debentures.

A petition, which was filed by Albert L. Simon, New York attorney, representing the petitioner, Jay Carton, of Tuckahoe, N. Y., seeks permission to intervene in an action pending in federal court of Delaware since an involuntary petition of bankruptcy was filed against GTE on June 12, 1934.

Federal Judge John P. Nields, Wilmington, set this Friday for a hearing to show cause why Mr. Carton should not be made a party in the United States court action.

Calls Procedure Incompatible

Mr. Carton, who says he is the holder of $5,000 in principal amount of six per cent convertible gold debentures, alleges that although Section 77B of the bankruptcy act was adopted in June, 1934, no effort has been made to require the filing of an answer to the involuntary bankruptcy petition. It is further claimed that meanwhile chancery court proceedings and the chancery receivership of the debtor, with United States Senator Daniel O. Hastings, of Delaware, being made the receiver, have been allowed to proceed without interruption "to the point where now it is proposed to settle and dispose of the main assets of the debtor for a comparatively trifling sum and to reorganize the affairs of the debtor (GTE), in a manner wholly incompatible with the interests of the bondholders."

The Chancery receivership "is what is known as a friendly receivership," influenced by the interests which are sponsoring the settlement and a plan of reorganization, the petitioner states he is informed. Mr. Carton maintains the continuation of the Chancery action is in violation of the intent of Congress and the priority of the federal bankruptcy statute and defeats the purpose of Section 77B.

The petition says Mr. Carton's ultimate purpose, among other aims, is to transfer the jurisdiction to the federal court for the district of Southern New York. It is brought out that the original federal action was filed subsequent to the filing of the Chancery suit.

Presentation of the plan to reorganize GTE was started last Wednesday. Aaron Finger, of the law firm of Richards, Layton and Finger, of Wilmington, representing a committee of debenture holders which evolved itself into a reorganization committee, presented the plan to the court.

Among those who spoke in favor of the plan in addition to Mr. Finger were William J. Quinn, representing Breed, Abbott and Morgan, New York City, counsel for Senator Hastings, and Robert G. Starr, of Wollman and Wollman, New York City. Mr. Starr supported Mr. Finger in contending that if the reorganization plan is approved and put into effect "it will prove very beneficial to all of the securities holders."

The Proposed Plan

The proposed GTE plan provides that for each $1,025 of secured obligations and debentures ten shares of capital stock in the new company be issued and warrants to purchase 1¾ units of capital stock of the Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation at $60 a unit on or before October 1, 1936 and at $70 a unit on or before October 1, 1937. Each unit consists of two shares of preferred stock and one share of common stock.

For each $1,025 on note and accounts payable shall be issued 7½ shares of capital stock of a new company and warrants to purchase 1¼ units of capital stock of Twentieth-Century-Fox Film Corporation at the aforementioned prices.

For each ten shares of preferred stock a warrant shall be issued to purchase one share of capital stock of the new company on or before October 1, 1937, at $12 a share and for each twenty-five shares of common stock a warrant to buy one share of capital stock at $12 on or before October 1, 1937, will be issued.

Phil Meyer To Head GB's Special Sales

Phil Meyer, manager of GB's New York Exchange, will be in full charge of the newly created Special Sales Division of the company, it was announced by George W. Weeks, general sales manager. The new division will be located at the Home Office. Mr. Meyer will contact circuit situations for the branches on buying done in New York City. Mr. Weeks said further that Meyer will also act in the capacity of Salesman-at-Large, assisting in sales in the field.

According to Mr. Weeks, Arthur Greenblatt will be the new manager of the company's New York exchange, succeeding Mr. Meyer. Irving Gumberg, while continuing in charge of sales in the New Jersey territory, will also act as assistant to Mr. Greenblatt. An open house party in celebration of these events took place at GB's New York exchange on last Saturday, with 250 local exhibitors attending.

U.S. WILL MAKE FUTURE TRUST CASES "AIR-TIGHT"

Justice Departm't Going Ahead With Enforcement, but Is Giving Complaints Extra Combing After St. Louis Defeat

Department Officials at Washington Chagrined by Reduced Batting Average; Complaints by Cole and Others Studied

Any further cases directed by the United States Government against distributors on charges of conspiracy in violation of the anti-trust laws will be made "air-tight" by the Department of Justice before they are brought into federal courts for prosecution.

This intimation emanated from an authoritative source in the Justice Department at Washington, following the Department's crushing defeat last week in St. Louis where a federal jury, after sitting for six weeks, acquitted Warner Brothers, Paramount, RKO, their officers and subsidiaries, of criminal-indictment charges of conspiracy in the Harry Arthur-Fanchon and Marco case. The speed with which the 12 jurors reached their decision — taking only 38 minutes — surprised not only the industry but the court itself, especially in view of the 1,000,000 words of testimony that had been taken.

The defendants still are awaiting the outcome of their petition to have the circuit court of appeals disqualify Judge George Moore from presiding at the Government's suit against them for an injunction to restrain the same corporate interests from alleged withholding of films from Fanchon and Marco's Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres in St. Louis. Disqualification of Judge Moore was asked on grounds of prejudice allegedly evidenced during the criminal-indictment trial.

Defeat of the Government last week in the criminal trial will have absolutely no effect on the efforts of the Department of Justice to enforce the anti-trust laws in the motion picture industry, according to a Washington spokesman.

Complaints Closely Scanned

Apparently irked over the St. Louis fiasco, Justice Department officials this week were understood to be scanning closely all other complaints against distributors which are pending as a result of information supplied both by independent theatre owners and by Department agents who have been secretly investigating in the field. But no new suits will be brought, it was indicated, until the basic information and the evidence have been sifted thoroughly.

Despite the Department's failure to obtain a conviction through its related attorney general's prosecuting agency, the Government will proceed with the equity suit for an injunction. This suit formed a part of its program in the St. Louis area.

Officials of the Department declared this week that no reason existed to anticipate failure in the civil proceedings because of the federal jury's "not guilty" verdict last week, pointing out that conviction on the conspiracy charge is the hardest one to prove in the entire range of defenses. In any event, the equity trial will be delayed because of the distributors' motion to take it out of the hands of Judge Moore. The Government, it was said, is anxious for a quick trial.

The St. Louis case, it was said at the Justice Department, was not "part of a campaign" against the film industry. The Government's prosecutors have never undertaken a "campaign" against any industry as an industry, it was declared at Washington. Nor was the St. Louis action a test case.

There are, it was admitted, a number of complaints pending in which the film industry is involved, but it has never been necessary to make a drive on a whole industry, since one or two "smashing" verdicts against illegal practices are all that is needed to induce an industry to "clean house" by correcting practices and eliminating the abuses complained of.

Every case that comes before the Department is handled on its merits, it was asserted. Hundreds of complaints are received annually; few, on investigation, develop any basis for action. But every complaint is carefully studied before dismissal or reference to investigators for checking.

As to the St. Louis verdict, Department officials had little to say. From their point of view, the most distasteful feature was that it reduced their batting average.

Since the enactment of the Sherman Act in 1890 through June of the current year, according to the records of the Department, the Government initiated a total of 419 proceedings, 235 of them civil and 184 criminal. Of this number, 390—now 391—have been terminated, 66 of them after appeal to the United States Supreme Court.

In the civil proceedings, 60 favorable decisions and 100 consent decrees were obtained. In the criminal proceedings, 92 convictions were had against 2,587 defendants, against whom fines totaling $2,321,384 and prison sentences aggregating 446 months were imposed.

Wins 252 of 390 Cases

It is thus shown that the Government was victorious in 252 of the 390 cases disposed of, a very high record considering the difficulties encountered when suits involving business practices are prosecuted.

What the trial of the St. Louis case cost the Government and the defendants probably will never be calculated with exactitude, but undoubtedly ran into a small fortune. The direct expense to the Government, it is estimated, was $15,000, but the indirect expense, which cannot be estimated, was probably several times that figure. In all probability, the defense spent as much as the Government.

Indications that the St. Louis case is not entirely closed were seen in reports reaching Washington that Department of Justice agents were on the scene of the trial, investigating the possibilties of bribery or perjury.

Department officials refused flatly to discuss these reports, but it was learned they were interested in ascertaining how the jury reached its verdict in slightly more than a half-hour in view of the fact that it had required six weeks to submit the evidence.

Meanwhile, the Department was understood to be going ahead with its investigation of the complaint of Colonel H. A. Cole, president of Allied States of Texas, and of a number of other complaints which are pending before it. Whether any of these matters have reached a point where prosecutions can be initiated was not disclosed, but undoubtedly no further cases will be started unless the Department is sure of its ground and convinced that it can hammer its charges home.

At St. Louis, Federal Judge Moore said over the weekend that he has not had opportunity to study two affidavits charging him with personal bias or prejudice against the defendants. One of the affidavits was filed by Maurice Schweitzer, local manager for Paramount; the second was entered by Herman Starr, vice-president of Warner Bros. Both were accompanied by the necessary certificate of good faith by defendant counsel. Judge Moore's certification of the sufficiency of the affidavits to Presiding Judge Kimbrough Stone of the United States circuit court of appeals would cause Judge Stone to appoint another judge to preside. Under a guiding ruling of the court of appeals, Judge Moore apparently has little recourse but to accept the personal disqualification asked for.

Mr. Starr's affidavit goes into the text of Judge Moore's final instructions to the jury in the criminal case, the manner in which the charge was delivered, the court's reaction to the exceptions taken by Frederick H. Wood, of Warner counsel, and the $100 fine for contempt of court imposed.

Russell Hardy, Government prosecuting attorney, returned to Washington from St. Louis to confer with Attorney General Homer S. Cummings. Mr. Hardy failed to get Judge Moore to hand down a temporary injunction against the defendants in the forthcoming equity action. Mr. Hardy had held that, on the basis of the testimony given in the jury-criminal case, sufficient grounds had been established for the issuance by Judge Moore of a temporary restrainng order. However, counsel for the defendant Warner, RKO and Paramount companies had insisted they were entitled to a full hearing on the facts.

THE CUTTING ROOM

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by Gus McCarthy of Motion Picture Herald's Hollywood Bureau

GIVE US THIS NIGHT

Paramount

Sometimes, when showmen are called upon to participate in the presentation of new stars, subsequent developments give them cause to regret their initial enthusiastic efforts. In connection with this production, however, such a condition should not prevail. No one can maintain that its two principal characters, Jan Kiepura and Gladys Swarthout are unknown to the public, class and mass. Kiepura's appearance in "Be Mine Tonight," several years ago, created a great impression and its wide popularity in this country made him a favorite figure. Gladys Swarthout, making her screen debut in "Rose of the Rancho," an as yet unreleased Paramount, is sure to have that picture give her a prestige with audiences equal to that which she enjoyed as a Metropolitan Opera Star. The repute she gained in this field has been widened by her radio work.

In idea, "Give Us This Night" is a comedy romance embellished by operatic music featuring Kiepura and Miss Swarthout. The locale is Italy. In text it follows the local boy makes good plot. Kiepura, leading an insurrection against a sour-voiced tenor, both busts up the show and falls in love with its diva, Miss Swarthout. Even though his singing makes an impression on the girl, he flees the wrath of an enraged populace to turn up a singing hero when he breaks in on the opera's premiere to pinch hit for the impossible tenor.

Story is adapted from an original by Jacques Bachrack by Oscar Hammerstein II and Brian Hooker. Presenting many operatic numbers, it also has several distinctly modern and topical, the lyrics of which are by Hammerstein with music by Erich Korngold and Richard Whiting. Picture is directed by Alexander Hall, who recently completed "Annapolis Farewell."

Kiepura and Miss Swarthout being the natural outstanding names, the supporting cast includes Phillip Merrivale, a newcomer, Benny Baker, Michelette Burani, William Collier, Sr., Sidney Toler, Charles Judels and Maurice Cass.

CHATTERBOX

Radio

This production looks to be of the class that will require shrewd showmanship to whip up popular interest. The story basically is a dramatic comedy romance, in which, however, there are several unusual situations. The cast, headed by Anne Shirley, places her in familiar, almost typed character of the unfortunate farm girl who, in encountering many disappointments, tragic to her but farcical to audiences, has a hectic time for herself. It returns Phillips Holmes to the screen in the hero role. The supporting cast lists Edward Ellis, Erik Rhodes, Margaret Hamilton, Granville Bates, Allen Vincent, Lucille Ball (soon to be seen in "I Dream Too Much") and George Offerman, Jr.

The story is an original screen play by Sam Mintz. George Nichols, Jr., is the director. It is being produced by Robert Sisk, who made the previous Anne Shirley features.

The story concerns an orphan daughter of a stage actress. Stage-struck herself, an innocent escapade leads to her being locked out of her stern New England home by her rigidly moralistic grandfather. She and the hero land in New York. Determined to be an actress, the girl finally gets the assistance of the hero in making the grade. The tragic melodrama that is supposed to establish her as a great tragedienne turns into a farce burlesque. The girl, realizing that she has been made foolish, has the satisfaction of rushing into her grandfather's arms, who, it turns out, did not drive the girl from his home, but sought to protect her from the typical small town menace. Returning to the old homestead, the hero bobs up in a situation similar to that in which the girl left, to make for a happy ending.

Undoubtedly intended for family audiences, this picture nevertheless presents a problem in successful selling. Undoubtedly it will be necessary to take into consideration particular local likes and dislikes.

HITCH HIKE LADY

Republic

This is a comedy of adventures and misadventures. It concerns a poor old English slavey who comes to New York to visit her son, whom she believes is a California orange magnate, but who actually is caged up in San Quentin. Believing that the Golden State is just across the river from Ellis Island, she boards a bus, only to be dumped out in company with another trail beating young lady. Victimized by a pair of slick confidence workers, she and her companion start hitch-hiking, only to run into a series of experiences that have their climax when the crooks turn honest, liberate the prisoned son and establish him on an orange ranch, out of which they have flimflammed a community of trusting fruit growers.

The basic story is an original by Wallace MacDonald, with screen play by Gordon Rigby and Lester Cole. Direction is by Aubrey Scotto.

Alison Skipworth, typical in character, will be seen in the title role, and Mae Clarke, long absent from the screen, is her fellow traveler. The story's romantic angles are carried by Miss Clarke and Jimmy Ellison. Arthur Treacher, seen in several recent pictures and currently in "Remember Last Night," and Warren Hymer are the team of crooked confidence men. Supporting players are Beryl Mercer, Dell Henderson, Lionel Belmore, Harold Waldridge, Christian Rub and George Haynes.

While there is little about the worth of the story or cast to key patrons up to enthusiastic anticipation, there are included several angles that should make for pretty good showmanship effort. These not only control the leads personal experiences, but the manner in which the players, friends and crooks alike, strive to conceal her son's predicament from her and the way in which they connive to arrange things so that she may be happy in the end.

KIND LADY

MGM

Melodramatic always this is a shudder atmosphered drama, the mystery of which is always evident to audiences. Adapted from a published novel titled "The Silver Mask," by Hugh Walpole, which was subsequently made into a stage play currently being presented, it deals with a member of the Herries family, which theatre-goers came to know in "Vanessa, Her Love Story." Walpole's other screen contribution in addition to that feature, was collaboration on and appearance in "David Copperfield." Screen adaptation is by Edward Chodorov. The director, George B. Seitz, has for his recent credits "Calm Yourself" and "Woman Wanted."

The story, localed in England, has a strange and unusual motivation with a sinister swing. In accord with title significance, it deals with the experiences and tragic adventures of a kind lady who befriends a mild mannered, poverty stricken man. Once established in the woman's affections, he reverts to true type, a cunningly depraved scoundrel who does not stop at torture and even murder to strip his benefactor of her wealth.

Aline MacMahon, currently featured in "Ah, Wilderness," will be seen as Mary Herries, the kind lady. Basil Rathbone, seen in many pictures, but vividly remembered for his role of the heavy in "Copperfield," is the heartless, cruel villain. The support includes several known players and others who are not so familiar. It features Dudley Digges, Doris Lloyd, Donald Meek, Nola Luxford, Murray Kinnell, Ely Malyon, Justine Chase, Barbara Shields and Mary Carlisle, the last personality being the one about whom the romantic love interest contrast revolves.

While there is, naturally, romance and comedy in the production, the central interest is weird and sinister drama. Tempo of story in action and dialogue, together with substantiating production effects, are geared to accentuate the latter quality. Key to its selling theme, in addition to name worth and title value, may be found in the idea expressing the character of a woman who sought to do good only to have her kindness returned with evil.

PRISON FARM

Warner

True to what the title says, this is a romance contrasted drama of prisoners and unspeakable conditions under which convicts are made to serve their sentences and live their lives. It deals with two boys, framed into jail sentences because the knowledge of one threatens to wreck a dishonest political empire. Starting as a topical newspaper expose story, it quickly plunges into the melodrama of its motivating character, and with desperate men rebelling and rioting, death striking sharply on both sides, results in the accomplishment of what it had started—the elimination of political graft and a new and more humane deal for convicts.

The story is an original by Abem Finkel and Harold Buckley, with screen play by Dalton Trumbo. Direction is by Louis King.

Donald Woods and Carlyle Moore, Jr., will be seen in the roles of the two boys, Woods as a reporter whose dynamite-laden stories result in their framed-up jailing. The romantic angle features Kay Linaker, who made her screen debut in the current "Murder of Doctor Harrigan." Other players included in the cast are Harry Cording, Olin Howland, Joseph King, Henry O'Neill, Addison Richards, Charles Middleton, William Davidson, Marc Lawrence, Ed Van Sloan and Eddie Shubert.

Inasmuch as it has been some time since prison stories enjoyed a vogue, during the era of "I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang" and similar features, the various news stories continually cropping out from different sections of the country dealing with jail breaks and the conditions under which convicts are forced to work and live, such reports have always kept public

A Parrot Could Never Be a Showman

A parrot's great asset is his ability to imitate.

A showman to be successful must never imitate.

Darryl F. Zanuck, one of the industry's most successful showmen, hates imitation.

In fact, if he has one outstanding characteristic, it is his ability to explore new entertainment fields.

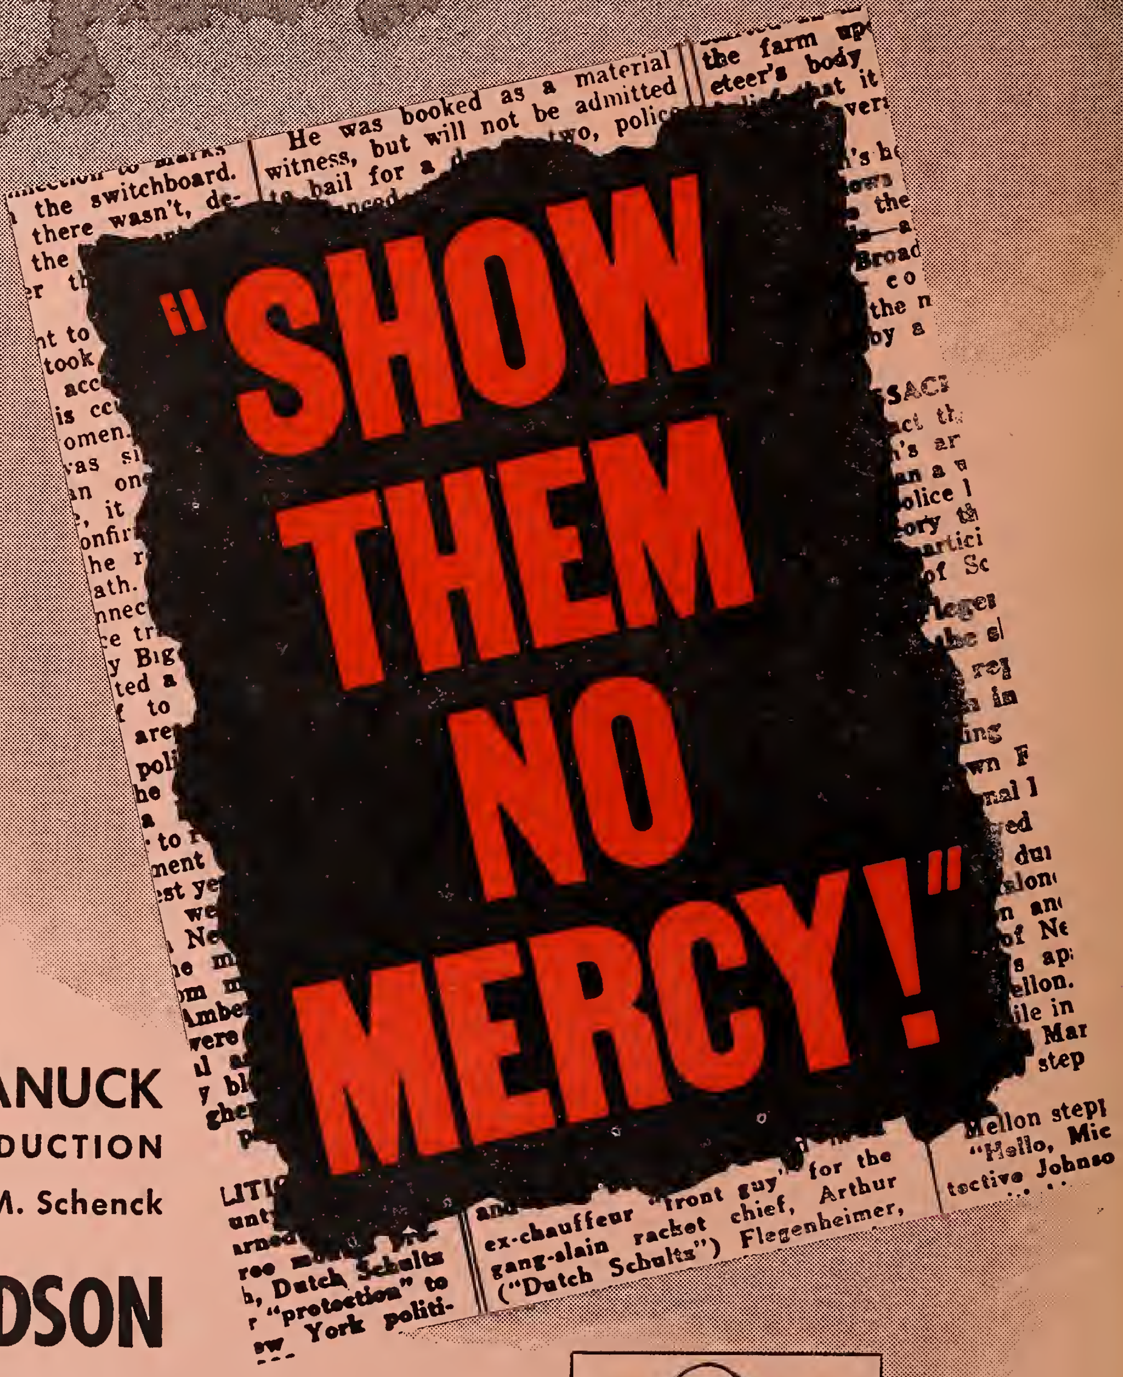
In the field of crime pictures, he demonstrated this with his "Little Caesar," "The Public Enemy," and "I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang."

Because each brought out a new and amazing phase of life, each made exhibitors an astonishing amount of money.

Darryl F. Zanuck demonstrates his originality again with "SHOW THEM NO MERCY," his next 20th Century Picture.

It, too, is thrilling, suspenseful, packed with action AND STARTLINGLY DIFFERENT! And it, too, will make you a lot of money!

IT BLASTS A NEW UNDERWORLD TERROR INTO THE OPEN!



"SHOW THEM NO MERCY!"

THE KEYSTONE OF YOUR FUTURE

Fox 'Met' Control Passes to Schenck

The status of Fox Metropolitan theatres in New York, long in dispute in the courts during reorganization, was finally and definitely established this week when Joseph M. Schenck acquired an additional 50 per cent interests, giving him 90 per cent of control, with Keith-Albee-Orpheum holding 10 per cent and an option to buy from the Schenck interests another 10 per cent. This option will likely be exercised.

Some 80 or 90 theatres in the Greater New York area thereby pass to United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., a wholly-owned Schenck corporation.

A last minute effort was made by Fox Theatres Corporation's Stockholders Protective Committee to have Federal Judge Martin T. Manton compel Fox Theatres to buy the available 50 per cent interest in Metropolitan Playhouses. The new Metropolitan is the reorganized Fox Metropolitan, which was a subsidiary of Fox Theatres before bankruptcy. Judge Manton refused the stockholders' plea, and the properties passed to Mr. Schenck on his payment to Fox Theatres of $150,000 in settlement of Fox Theatres' claim against Metropolitan.

Milton C. Wiseman, New York attorney, and vice-president, secretary and a director of Metropolitan, will continue in his present positions, according to William Phillips, Metropolitan vice-president and treasurer. Mr. Wiseman had been active with Mr. Schenck in constructing and effecting Metropolitan's reorganization plan. Mr. Wiseman is also receiver for Fox Theatres.

The order sought by Fox Theatres' minority holders to have Judge Manton direct Fox Theatres to buy the available 50 per cent interest in Metropolitan, was opposed by Fox Theatres' creditors, who hold claims aggregating $13,000,000. In order to acquire the half interest, Fox Theatres would have been compelled to pay the Schenck-United Artists circuit some $275,000. The creditors believed, and Judge Manton agreed, that it would be more advantageous to waive their Metropolitan stock purchase right, thereby saving the $275,000, and, in addition, receive the $150,000 paid to it by Mr. Schenck for its claim against Metropolitan.

The Schenck-United Artists-KAO interests would have been able to obtain control of Metropolitan even in the event that Judge Manton did direct Fox Theatres to purchase the available 50 per cent. The Schenck group, already holding 50 per cent, would pick up small additional holdings in the open market from creditors and thus obtain operating control.

Fruechts Celebrate Anniversary

A goodly crowd of his business associates and their wives turned out last week in Buffalo, N. Y., to fete Henry C. Fruecht and Mrs. Fruecht on their 25th wedding anniversary. Mr. Fruecht is office manager and chief auditor of Shea's Buffalo theatre and assistant treasurer of Buffalo Theatres, Inc.

THE CUTTING ROOM

interest in this topic at a hot pitch. With that condition to serve as an initial exploitation basis, the fact that the production is an action drama, providing one surprising thrill after another and with romantic love interest complications accenting the tensity of drama, it should not be difficult to apply topical showmanship taking advantage of story and cast values.

TWO O'CLOCK COURAGE

Radio

In story idea this is a baffling mystery melodrama. Mechanically it makes use of so many complicated twists and puzzling situations that such a thing as audience advance solution of the plot appears to be a practical impossibility. Shrouded in an atmosphere of legitimate mystery from the beginnning, yet at the same time avoiding the temptation to amplify its straight theatrical values with anything that might give rise to horror or shudder, it deals essentially with amusement elements that have proved their entertainment worth.

Based on a published novel of the same title, the time is the present and the locale Boston. A wounded man, suffering from amnesia, falls at a girl's feet. Later, a man is murdered and broadcast description of the suspected slayer tallies almost identically with the appearance of the man the girl found. Ensues the imagination baffling story of the murder, the part the amnesia victim played in it prior to and after certain incidents restore his memory. Soundly contrived, yet pursuing the familiar course, it builds to a thrill packed climax through which runs a whole chain of mysterious killings until the murderer is discovered and motivation for the crimes revealed.

What worth the story represents is accentuated by the cast which will interpret it. Walter Abel, who made his screen debut in "The Three Musketeers," is featured with Margot Grahame, who will be remembered for her performance in "The Informer." Supporting players include Eric Blore, Addison Randall, Alan Hale, Phyllis Brooks, Wallace Ford, currently featured in "Mary Burns, Fugitive," Ray Mayer, Erick Rhodes and Arthur Hoyt.

With an unusual sounding title to serve as a starting point, the character of the story, plus the worth of cast names, should provide an incentive to some real showmanship exploitation. Keying all to mystery drama, there seems to be plenty in all lines upon which to build interest creating campaigns.

KING OF BURLESQUE

20th-Century-Fox

Title significance to the contrary, this is not a glorification of burlesque shows. Rather it is a singing, dancing musical comedy romance based on an original story by Vina Delmar, titled "The Day Never Came." It will present a long list of favorably known screen names, including Warner Baxter, Alice Faye, Jack Oakie, Arline Judge, Gregory Ratoff, Nick Long, Jr., recently seen in "Broadway Melody of 1936," Mona Barrie, Claudia Coleman and Kev Luke, and many others. It also returns Dixie Dunbar to the screen. In specialty features it presents Shaw and Lee, noted vaudeville and musical comedians, the Paxton sisters, novelty dancers, and Fats Waller, champion piano player. Music and lyrics are by Ted Koehler and Jimmy McHugh, with the spectacular dance ensembles staged by Sammy Lee. Direction is by Sidney Lanfield.

The show, backstage in atmosphere and vividly paralleling the careers of some of the most notable stage and screen personalities, concerns a producer who takes his burlesque show and its performers from the cheap priced houses, dolls it up in lavish style and presents it on Broadway at top prices. Through it runs a thread of romantic conflict involving the producer, his colorful burlesque days star and a Park Avenue socialite, with the aristocrat taking the producer for a financial sleigh ride which is saved from complete debacle only when the oldtime pal of the coffee and cake era comes back to reestablish him as the king of musical revue producers.

Lively and colorful in songs and dancing, both specialty and choral, it also is brimming over in comedy, in action, situations and dialogue. Modern in content, it is being produced with a view to striking a balance between the worths of comedy dramatic romantic story value and those of eyefilling music and dance embellished production settings.

THE TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE

Paramount

Many things in this production bring themselves forcibly to the showman's attention. It is the first outdoor feature-length picture to be made entirely in color. As such, it is potentially of enough of audience and publicity interest to compare with the first outdoor talking picture. The story, written by John Fox, Jr., is famous as a stage show and previously, about 20 years ago, was made into a motion picture. It is familiar to millions. It is a romance which moves to the plot of desperate Kentucky mountain feuds.

The cast, particularly the featured players, seems to be fully able, without other benefits, to stimulate quick public attention. Sylvia Sidney, whose appearances in "Accent on Youth" and the forthcoming "Mary Burns, Fugitive," will do much to restore her popularity, is starred in the role of June, the heroine of story and song. Fred MacMurray, highly popular because of his work in "Hands Across the Table" and "The Bride Comes Home," is the young Northern engineer who is in conflict for Sidney's affections with Henry Fonda, seen in "Farmer Takes a Wife" and "Way Down East." Fred Stone, outstanding in his picture debut, "Alice Adams," is Judd Tolliver. Supplementing the name worth of this quartette are Fuzzy Knight, Beulah Bondi, Spanky McFarland, Nigel Bruce, Alan Baxter (featured in "Mary Burns"), Charles Middleton and a host of well known minor players.

The importance which the producer, Walter Wanger, attaches to the worth of the story and cast, is further seen in the selection of the Director Henry Hathaway, who followed up "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" with "Peter Ibbetson."

Practically the entire film footage is being shot in the high mountains surrounding Big Bear Lake in California. In topography it captures the charm and grandeur of the original locale.

RCA SELLS BRITISH INTERESTS FOR $10,220,000; RKO ELECTS SPITZ

Mazur and Swope Resign as RKO Directors; Election of Aylesworth as Chairman of RKO Board Formally Ratified

RCA's Funded Debt Practically Erased by Sale of Its 29 Per Cent Interest in Electric and Musical Industries, Ltd.

Out of RCA's recent disposal of its interests in RKO to the Floyd Odlum-Atlas-Lehman Brothers interests there come this week several developments affecting either the managerial or corporate setup of both RCA and RKO, as follows:

RCA further narrowed its amusement holdings by selling for $10,220,000 cash its 29 per cent interest in Electric and Musical Industries, Ltd., to a British syndicate headed by Morgan, Grenfell and Company and Edward De Stein and Company, London, thereby virtually erasing the corporation's funded debt. Wall Street immediately forecasted a new financial setup for RCA.

RKO's directors formally elected Leo Spitz, Floyd Odlum's candidate, as president, and Mr. Spitz immediately departed for Hollywood for a studio study.

Paul M. Mazur, of Lehman Brothers, and Herbert Bayard Swope resigned as RKO directors. No successors were in sight, as RKO's reorganization is awaited.

Formal ratification was made of the election of Merlin Hall Aylesworth, Mr. Spitz's RKO presidential predecessor, as chairman of the RKO board, a post vacated by David Sarnoff, who continues as a board member.

Mr. Spitz left New York over the weekend for Chicago to visit with his family and was then joined by Ned E. Depinet, president of RKO's distributing subsidiary, both traveling from Chicago to the studios in Hollywood, where production conferences will be held between other home office executives and studio officials. Discussions, primarily, were to revolve around the remainder of 1935-36 product, and with investigation of studio problems, will keep both on the Coast until Christmas or thereabouts.

At the RKO directors' meeting late last week, at which Mr. Spitz was formally named president, no action was taken on the election to the board of successors to the resigning Paul Mazur and Herbert Swope. The reason for continuing vacancies, according to Broadway, may be attributable to a desire of the new interests to defer selections until the eve of RKO's reorganization. Reconstruction of the board is expected to include representatives of the Odlum-Atlas and Lehman Brothers interests. Mr. Spitz, however, already has been elected to the board. David Sarnoff will continue as a member, following his resignation as chairman to make way for M. H. Aylesworth.

Operating Under 50 Per Cent Interest

The Odlum-Atlas-Lehman Brothers group are operating through the 50 per cent interest which they acquired from RCA, together with an option to buy the remaining half interest.

The acceptance by RKO's board of the resignation of Mr. Swope ended his association with all RKO companies with the exception of Keith-Albee-Orpheum. Mr. Swope continues as chairman of the board of KAO, a post to which he was elected jointly by the RCA and M. J. Mehan interests.

FINANCIERS POINT TO FILM STOCK RECOVERY

Broad recognition is being given in financial quarters to the recovery of earning power by the film companies, says the Journal of Commerce. A combination of higher quality feature and short pictures and increased ability and willingness of the public to spend for amusement has resulted in greatly enlarged box-office attendance, an article in the publication states. In addition, it is pointed out that the increased number of cities permitting Sunday motion pictures will serve to increase gross revenues and fim rentals.

Furthermore, it is pointed out that film companies are paying more attention to costs than before and, while they are not skimping at all on production, they are actively preventing waste both on the lots and in the offices.

Mr. Swope had resigned earlier from the RKO executive committee and from the boards of RKO Radio Pictures and RKO Pathe News. His resignation from the RKO board, although offered a year ago, was not accepted until last week's meeting, which was the first to be held in more than a year.

Hearing of exceptions to the recommended allowance at $8,207,000 of Rockefeller Center's claims against RKO, which was scheduled for Monday before Federal Judge William Bondy, was postponed to December 9.

Efforts to agree on a compromise settlement of the claim are under way between RKO reorganization factors and Rockefeller Center and the court hearing is being deferred pending the outcome of these negotiations.

Involving some 1,700 ordinary shares, the arrangement whereby RCA disposed of its 29 per cent interest in Electrical and Musical Industries in London was explained by David Sarnoff, president of RCA, as follows:

"The price to be paid to RCA for this block of EMI shares has been agreed upon and is $10,220,000, payable in cash within three weeks, in New York funds. The shares are being sold ex dividend and RCA will therefore receive, in addition to the above amount, the sum of approximately $400,000 in dividends payable this month," or a total of $10,620,000.

Electrical and Musical Industries is supposed to have considerable ambitions in the television field.

The announcement follows within a comparative few days RCA's disposal of its interest in Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, which is estimated as likely to yield from $10,000,000 to $14,000,000. The RKO investment is said to be carried on RCA's books at cost or $14,600,000.

These two stock holdings—totaling on the books upwards of $27,000,000—constitute the two major items in RCA's fixed investments totaling $30,995,000, and in two fields in which it has been plainly indicated the company has no great desire to continue.

See Strengthened RCA

Dow, Jones, of Wall Street, predicts that "from these two major investments, which up until recently were entirely unproductive of any return, RCA should now finally receive from $20,000,000 upward, further improving its already strong cash position and advancing the prospects of an early consideration of some method of taking care of the $10 a share accumulated dividends on the 767,275 shares of B preferred stock."

Continuing, Dow, Jones points out that "accumulations on the A preferred stock, amounting to $9.62½ a share, were paid off earlier this year, necessitating a cash payment of some $5,000,000. Last available balance sheet, that of December 31, 1934, showed RCA had net working capital of $34,250,000, of which $23,679,000 was cash or readily marketable securities.

"RCA now has no funded debt with the possible exception of a small amount of real estate mortgages, a $4,000,000 debenture issue having been called for retirement a few weeks ago. So prior obligation to the B preferred shares is now the 495,597 shares of seven per cent $50 par value preferred A shares ($24,779,870 par value) and callable at 55. Possibilities of retiring this issue have been viewed by officials at times in the past, though the stumbling block has been the heavy cash outlay involved, amounting to about $27,000,000," according to Dow, Jones.

"Electric & Musical Industries, Ltd., organized in 1931, is a consolidation of the old Gramophone Company, Ltd., and the Columbia Graphophone Company, Ltd., the latter representing the defunct Columbia Graphophone Company in which Victor Talking Machine Company eventually acquired a substantial interest," it was explained.

While the affiliation with EMI abroad may have had some beneficial aspects from a trade viewpoint, this was minimized by Dow, Jones by the fact that the two companies are in competing lines in selling receiving sets, and from a monetary viewpoint the return on the $13,000,000 investment has been negligible. EMI inaugurated dividends at the close of 1934, paying an initial dividend for the year of 10 per cent or one shilling, on the 10-shilling par value shares, which after payment of British income taxes gave a net return to RCA of bout $320,000. A 12½ per cent dividend was declared this year which is payable this month, likely to yield about $400,000.

Atlas Corporation has under option RCA's interest in RKO, consisting of 1,250,463 shares of common stock and roughly $9,800,000 of six per cent debentures, and while option for only half of the securities has been exercised, it is expected to take up the balance, thus eliminating RCA from the motion picture field. RCA, however, still maintains RCA-Photophone which produces motion picture sound equipment.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

The executives of virtually all of Hollywood's large studios have in hand the following unusual application for employment from the unknown Gannon Kearins, a Chicagoan, whose sole recommendation is an ambition to write and a sporting inclination:

> GENTLEMEN:
> Offering the sporting challenge of a "1,000-to-1" bet. (Bigger odds than most writers would give on identifying their own stories or their wives in the dark).
> You have three chances to win this bet:
> 1. I can't be any worse than some of your writers.
> 2. I'm liable to be as good as others.
> 3. I might even be better than you suspect.
>
> The bet is that, given a 90-day tryout in your scenario department, I will produce at least one choice story idea acceptable for screen production.
> I will parlay the bet that the accepted story idea will prove better box office than any like newcomer has produced during the past year. A triple parlay that I can produce two such story ideas in that time.
>
> The tryout is to be on the basis of a $10 daily expense allowance for the 90 days for a final total of $900. The studio withholds half of this, $450, as my stake against a 45-cent bet it places on the side, making the score $450 against 45 cents, or odds of 1,000-to-1.
>
> If I win I won't worry about the 45 cents, and you won't have to worry where your next humorist is coming from.
> Sincerely yours,
> GANNON (LUCKY) KEARINS.

There are some producers in Hollywood who will read Kearins' letter and then go out and buy some well known stage play for $100,000, change the title and then write an entirely new story around the new title. (Example: Sam Goldwin paid $100,000 for "Children's Hour, is rewriting the play, and will release it as "These Three.")

Reed Porter, eagle-eyed movie editor of the Independence (Kansas) Daily Reporter, believes little or nothing of the widely-publicized RKO information that Merian Cooper made considerable of "The Last Days of Pompeii" abroad. A close inspection of the six-sheet poster on "Pompeii" revealed to Mr. Porter the following inscription atop one of the arches of the ancient Roman Coliseum: "Made by Maicet Bairds, Cleveland, Ohio."

Traveling down memory lane for Louie Sobol, George McManus, who has been "Bringing Up Father" for a quarter-century, recalled the day when Dick Carle, 44 years an actor, stood at the bar of the white-stone Lambs Club off Times Square and ran his can across the bar, knocking all the glasses to the floor. He was expelled from the club for a year. Returning one year later, Carle was standing at the bar when Wilton Lackaye approached him and expressed his delight at seeing him back at the club. "Why were you expelled?" asked Lackaye, to which Carle answered, "Oh, for doing this," and once again he ran his cane across the bar, knocking all the glasses to the floor. Carle was expelled for another year.

Another McManus anecdote dates from the old Marlborough Hotel, at 39th Street and Broadway, where, like all hotels of the kind, they had rope fire escapes to slide down from the rooms to the street, with instructions on the wall as to how to use them. Tom Powers, likewise a stage actor of the old school, and McManus had had a bad night and were not feeling so well on a Sunday morning. Hearing a Salvation Army group blasting on their brass on the corner, Powers decided, "There's a worthy cause," and taking a $10 bill, tied it on the end of the rope fire escape and let it out of the window. Realizing the scarcity of currency at the moment, McManus protested, "Tom, I think you're a big fool," to which Powers replied, "I guess you're right." With that he hauled back the rope ladder just as the Salvation Army band was reaching for the money.

Tom Bate, known in New York theatricals as an accomplished actor and stage manager, encountered on Broadway, near Times Square, one of our reporters whom he knew when the drama industry was abooming, and proceeded to relate some of the vicissitudes of a thespian in these days of the impoverished stage.

"Just imagine," said Tom, "last Saturday I received a call to go over to Metro's producing place in New York, and when I got there they told me to hold the tail of a honey bear—mind you, the tail of a honey bear, after all the great parts I've played on the stage. Well, they were making a scene for Hearst Metrotone News, and as I held the tail, I recited a piece about why the great American public should be kind to dogs. It was for the benefit of 'dog week,' or 'honey-bear week,' or sumthin'."

They had Mr. Bate sign a release, he added, for "one dollar and other valuable considerations."

But even a day's work in the life of an actor these times is not to be burped at, as witness the experience of Mr. Bate's friend, Arthur Casey, who, some 12 months ago, took to Kansas City a stock company of Ferenc Molnar's "The Play's the Thing," with that grand old trouper, Guy Bates Post of "Masquerader" and "Garden of Allah" fame in the leading role.

Mr. Casey tried hard to keep the play running even a few days, but failed. He quit the stage on the spot, tearfully admitted that "the show business in general is on the bum," that "art in Kansas City is in particular on the wane," and then departed for Haverhill, Massachusetts, to sell caskets.

The electric eye apparatus consists of a photo-cell which operates the mechanism by means of an electric motor when the car approaches the gate, making it unnecessary for the occupant to alight and open the gates by hand.

In reel life, the characters in Universal's "Do You Remember Last Night?" acquire an unconscious-making quantity of alcoholics. Murder is committed. "Do you remember last night?" they are asked by the authorities, and they reply negatively.

The other day, in real life, one George Rutledge, 31 years old, of Salt Lake City, admittedly drank to a similar extent. Murder was committed—three deaths and two woundings by bullets. Rutledge, too, was asked, by Sheriff Joseph Holbrook, "Do you remember last night?" He also replied negatively.

Critics of the motion picture who charge that the screen suggests crime might point out the similarity of these incidents as proof of their contention. But, the Salt Lake City incident happened just two weeks before Universal's release, this week, of the motion picture.

MUSIC INTERESTS TO SUE FILM PRODUCERS

Association Claims $97,000 from Erpi and 11 Companies for Recording Foreign Music

Suit against 11 motion picture companies, including all the principal firms, and Electrical Research Products, Inc., was impending this week when the Music Publishers' Protective Association, through John G. Paine, chairman, authorized its attorneys to bring action in the state courts on an interpretation of foreign licensing contracts in which $97,000 is involved.

Attorneys for film companies who would be made defendants in the action considered it probable that additional suits would follow against RCA Victor, Photophone Division, and the companies subscribing to RCA recording licenses.

The question involved, according to E. P. Kilroe of the Twentieth Cenury-Fox legal department, is whether the arrangements used in recording foreign music in films produced in the United States are subject to licensing fees, when that music is in the public domain abroad. The film companies contend that the lack of copyright releases them from the obligation of paying a recording fee under those circumstances, but publishers maintain that copyrights do not enter into the question. Mr. Paine said it was a matter of interpreting the contracts.

This was the chief matter up for consideration at a meeting of the producers' permanent committee on copyrights, headed by Mr. Kilroe, held at the offices of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, late last week. It is understood Mr. Paine at the meeting served notice he would institute action to recover the royalties, which the MPPA has threatened to do the last three years, and that the producers' attorneys politely called his bluff.

The film companies and the association, which acts as the collecting agency for copyright owners in synchronization matters, have been at odds over the issue since October, 1932, and the claim covers the period from 1929 to the present.

The argument had its inception in a license agreement for recording of foreign music entered into between Erpi and E. C. Mills, the present head of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and at that time agent for the MPPA, under which companies using the Erpi recording licenses were obligated to pay copyright fees.

The motion picture companies contend that arrangements made here of compositions which are copyright-free in other countries are not subject to the usual royalties, while the music publishers insist that a fee is due to the person owning the copyright to the arrangement.

Under the normal arrangement, the license collection for abroad are distributed on a basis of 75 per cent for full use of a composition and 25 per cent for partial use. The revenue, too, is divided equally between the English speaking countries and others.

Mr. Paine explained that the Erpi agreement in question provided that whenever a work was recorded, the film companies would pay on a basis of a film's exhibition in foreign countries. The MPPA claims that the motion picture companies did not pay on the basis of that agreement, but on the basis of copyright status. He said the film companies contend that was the intention of the basic agreement.

Mr. Kilroe said that if suit were filed, it would have to be directed against Erpi, since it was directly bound to the contract, and that the individual companies cannot rightfully be sued. If, however, the MPPA obtains a judgment against Erpi, he said it would be defrayed by the participating film concerns.

Some of the companies, including RKO and Warner, had a double license with Erpi and RCA, and these may be subject to other court actions, attorneys believe.

The matter of a blanket licensing agreement to include performing as well as recording rights, which are now split up, was not broached at the conference with Mr. Paine, but it must soon as the music publishers' contracts with ASCAP, the performing rights agency, expire, December 31, and many publishers so far have refused to sign until many points of dissatisfaction are ironed out.

If the publishers fail to renew their ASCAP agreements, some other agency would have to be set up, as otherwise negotiations would be conducted with the publishers individually. The danger that ASCAP will break up under the pressure of internal dissension is causing some worry to the film companies, as it would affect their synchronization facilities. Also, the publishers would be in a bargaining position which would create difficulties not only for the film companies but for the exhibitors as well.

CANADIAN TAX RATE TOO HIGH, SAYS JUDGE

The rate of 20 cents a seat—annually charged Canadian theatres by the Canadian Performing Rights Society, the counterpart to ASCAP, is excessive, and the 10-cent rate established in 1931 under the Copyright Act is a fair return and should be restored, it is recommended by Judge James Parker, who conducted an investigation of the music fees for the federal government.

Judge Parker believes that reports to the Society by exhibitors and other music users on individual programs are necessary, but the report forms should be greatly simplified.

Hearings in the inquiry were held in Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa, Halifax, Winnipeg and other cities.

$2,326,000 Tax Paid U. S. in '33

Gross revenues in 1933 of $443,916,000 by incorporated motion picture theatre companies and $162,407,000 by incorporated producers and distributors were reported on Monday by the United States Bureau of Internal Revenue. Income and excess taxes collected from the two groups for the year amounted to $2,326,000. Admission taxes, of course, are in addition.

Making public a report on the financial condition of corporations in the amusement industry in 1933—one of a series of studies dealing with corporation income and taxes—the Bureau disclosed that only 773 of a total of 2,952 film theatre corporations and 42 of a total of 256 producer corporations reported taxable income for the year.

The 773 theatre companies had an aggregate gross income of $159,032,000 and a net income of $10,726,000 on which they paid taxes amounting to $1,549,000, of which $1,524,000 were on income and $24,000 on excess profits.

The 42 money-making producers had an aggregate gross income of $27,176,000 and a net of $3,198,000 on which they paid $455,000 on income and $22,000 on excess profits, a total of $477,000.

The 2,076 theatre corporations which paid no taxes had a gross income aggregating $284,884,000 but, after allowable deductions, had a deficit of $44,927,000. The remaining 103 corporations were inactive and filed no income report.

In the producing field, 158 paid no taxes their gross income of $135,231,000 winding up in a deficit of $40,354,000, while 56 concerns were reported inactive.

Motion pictures held up better in 1933 than any branch of the amusement industry, it was revealed, reports from 5,278 corporations in other branches showing only 541 with taxable net income. The aggregate gross income of this group was but $21,501,000 and their net $2,140,000 on which they paid taxes of $316,000. Another $3,845 companies had a gross of $88,217,000 but a deficit of $19,863,000.

Cast your eye on what HOLLYWOOD REPORTER SAYS:

M-G-M's "Ah Wilderness" an all-round natural. Direction, writing, cast, all superb. A thing to place next to that great American classic, "Seventeen," and a picture that stands head and shoulders above the run of the mill for gentle humor, the drama of youth, the lovely memory and entertainment that one and all should see. It's a gift on a silver platter from Producer Hunt Stromberg, Director Clarence Brown, Writers Goodrich and Hackett (not to mention O'Neill), and Eric Linden, Lionel Barrymore and Wallace Beery. The story is a simple and homely tale of a youngster back in 1906 who has to go through all the crashing despondency of an idealistic lad of seventeen. There is no sense in going into the details of that story, for it is the way in which they are told by camera, acting and writing that make it something you cannot afford to miss. Frances Goodrich and Albert Hackett have taken the comedy of O'Neill and transferred it faithfully to the screen and made a screen play out of it. There can be no complaints from the first writer of the stage about what two of the best screen writers have done to and for his play. The added scenes give greater pleasure, and give it a bit more life than it had as a play because they widen the scope of action. Clarence Brown has directed with such complete good taste and feeling for the proper sentiment, without for a moment going banal and sloppy, that he hereby adds still another feather to his cap which must make an Indian Chief envious by now. Eric Linden comes back to the screen with a bang. Restrained, sincere, and with a fine appreciation of the character, he delivers a moving and delightful performance of the kid you love but not to have around the house too long. He is particularly good when he comes back from his first kiss with the girl of his dreams. Lionel Barrymore as the father need have no worries about comparisons between his conception of the role and the original. That father and son scene is still the highlight, and Barrymore is grand. Cecilia Parker as the little sweetheart is everything that ever stepped out of the story books about those times. Aline MacMahon is perfectly lovely as the semi-tragic spinster whose memory of one incident blights her life. Spring Byington is a thoroughly right mother and lovely to watch. Mickey Rooney and Bonita Granville as the youngsters do a swell job and Frank Albertson, Edward Nugent and Charles Grapewin are excellent. Helen Flint delivers her lines in an elegant whiskey tenor and scores brightly in her few scenes. Clyde DeVinna's photography is beautiful and gentle as the story, with the backgrounds just right. The montage in the graduation scene is something to note particularly, as is the entire sequence. Hunt Stromberg has chalked up another winning production for himself. It's a honey from start to finish and that includes a very effectual musical score put together by Herbert Stothart for the added enjoyment of the picture.

And COAST VARIETY:

“Ah Wilderness” (M-G-M) Saga should whiz turnstiles. Earns bows all around.

For the general excellence of “Ah Wilderness” all concerned can take bows. Picture is a saga of Americana that should make box office records. Hunt Stromberg is to be congratulated for his handling of the picture. In story, direction and casting he has given the O'Neill play intelligent supervision. Clarence Brown's sympathetic and understanding direction gives the comedy a homeliness that is its biggest asset. His knowledge of the bewildered and bewildering youngsters and the feeling he has given the knowing father stand out as the picture's high spot. Picture sticks close to the play with the exception of the father's counseling of his son against the association with questionable women. Story has to do with Eric Linden, son of Lionel Barrymore, who tries to fathom the ways of love. When his girl seems to have gone back on him, he tried one night of riotous living, finds it does not pay. His father sets his course and he's off again on the primrose path. Barrymore as the father gives a sterling performance. At all times he appreciates the adolescent viewpoint of his son, never worries about the outcome. Young Linden turns in a class performance as the boy. Cecilia Parker is excellent as his girl, indicates she has a future in pictures. Spring Byington as the mother is true to type, makes her portrayal real. Aline MacMahon, as the spinster who loves Beery, also adds greatly to the picture's excellence. Mickey Rooney, as the bothersome youngest son, is always the real boy. Frank Albertson, as the older brother, contributes a nice performance as does Charles Grapewin, the town grouch, Edward Nugent, a young sport, and Tom Dugan, a bartender. Helen Flint deserves special mention for her work as a trollop. Frances Goodrich and Albert Hackett have made a faithful transcription of the play, have written some added scenes that gives the picture an even flow lacking in the stage version.

Get ready to put it in Year's 10 Best!

FILM DAILY SAYS:

Outstanding production, expertly handled all-around, with appeal for all audiences. This picture of a regular down-to-earth American family should undoubtedly be considered for the "10 Best of the Year." That goes for production as well as for box-office. Any exhibitor can safely give his personal recommendation to "Ah Wilderness." Everything about the production merits the highest praise, and Eric Linden's work should receive the utmost consideration when choosing the Academy prize performance of the year. Wallace Beery's portrayal of the easy-going, lovable drunk is outstanding, and Lionel Barrymore, as the understanding father, makes the role live. The scene in which he tries to give his son some knowledge of the facts of life is handled expertly. Eugene O'Neill's play was quite a piece in itself, but Frances Goodrich and Albert Hackett have added some fine material, bringing in added scenes, movement, a lot more comedy and they have wisely built the son's role while keeping the father as important as he was in the play. Clarence Brown has directed with a fine understanding, giving the characters the humanness that makes this picture all that it is, his individual touches can be noted throughout and they bring the proper responses. There are many children's roles in the picture, and Brown brings them out so that they each mean something. Although the picture delves into characterizations, there is plenty of action so that there is never a moment in which one loses interest. Clyde DeVinna's photography and the choice of outdoor locations are worthy of special mention. Hunt Stromberg has given the production everything that should make it outstanding. Linden, an idealistic sort of chap, is in love with Cecilia Parker, a very innocent girl, who is closely watched by her father. When the father suspects that Linden has wronged his daughter, he forces her to write Linden that all is over between them. He becomes very much upset and goes off on a wild party from which he returns with a pain in the head and the stomach. He and the girl are happily brought together. All through the picture Beery and Aline MacMahon are having their on and off love affair, on when he is sober and off when he is drunk. They, too, come to an agreement with Beery definitely swearing off liquor. Direction, Expert Photography, Best.

No "BUTS" about it according to M. P. DAILY:

HOLLYWOOD —This picture mirrors life. It reflects ordinary human emotions, ambitions, tragedies, triumphs with sincere conviction. It does so with the simplicity that makes for power, giving audiences and the showmen the most to be desired in screen merchandise, a good story that was intelligently acted on the stage. It is hardly to be doubted that the picture will make a popular impression. It is certain to win approval. Its locale is a small town of three decades ago. The comedy drama glows with homey humor. The drama is natural. Following vivid contrasts it builds to a sock climax when the father tries to explain the facts of life to his son. Eric Linden, the prototype of modern youth, is convinced that he is misunderstood. Lionel Barrymore is the average man, bearer of everyman's problems. An amusing high school graduation whirls the audience into the trials and tribulations of a middle class home. Linden deems his father and mother, Spring Byington, crusty old fogies; brothers Frank Albertson and Mickey Rooney, and sister, Bonita Granville, pests. Furious at his sweetheart, Cecilia Parker, for not kissing him, the youth becomes involved in an episode with Helen Flint. Welcomed home by his distraught family, Barrymore attempts to explain the facts of life. With the boy adjusting himself to new conditions, there's an all's-well-that-ends-well finale with Linden and Miss Parker.

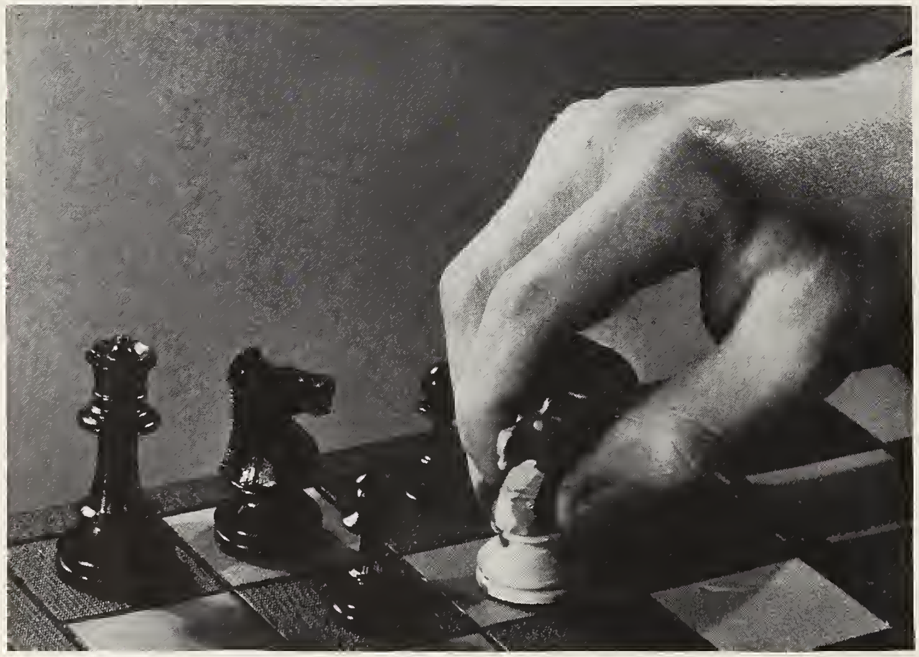
And just a word from the LOS ANGELES TIMES:

This new M-G-M production is something to be treasured close to the heart like a brooch or a photograph. The producers have done a superb job.

SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW

says it's just what the public wants:

"Ah Wilderness"— M-G-M's famed Eugene O'Neill stage hit — a natural for big B. O. profits; romance and comedy Barrymore is a small town publisher. His son, Eric, falls in love with Cecilia Parker, daughter of Grapewin, who forbids the two lovers to see each other after finding radical utterances and love notes addressed to his daughter. Eric is drawn into bad company by Edward Nugent and his conduct brings about considerable consternation in the household. Beery is Eric's uncle and constantly falling off the wagon. His romance with MacMahon is dependent upon his keeping sober. Finally an understanding comes about between all concerned and happiness is the outlook for evermore. Summary: This is just what the public wants in the way of entertainment. Gobs of romance and oodles of comedy, with several dramatic situations that hold and sustain interest throughout This Eugene O'Neill stage hit is destined for profits and real big ones, too. It has plenty of the qualities that make for word of mouth advertising. The acting is superb. Eric Linden steps right up and snatches all honors right away from such old-timers as Barrymore, Beery and others, who are all outstanding in their respective roles. This time youth must be served, and Linden, with his love-light, Cecilia Parker, capture top honors. Clarence Brown's direction is grand. His comedy timing is immense and appreciation of the romantic values certainly commendable. Cast and title outstanding draws.



"IT'S YOUR MOVE NOW to ballyhoo it to the skies!"

SCHOOLS SPEED USE OF SOUND FILM AS TEACHER

Thousand Installations of 16mm. Equipment Indicated by End of Year, 5,000 in Three Years; Educators Predict Projector in Every Classroom and Film Exchange for Each School System; Libraries Growing

Most farseeing revolutionary changes in public instruction are under way through the use of sound motion pictures in presenting visually and verbally what hitherto has been possible by only one of these methods.

"Audio visual" instruction, say educational authorities, already has proved itself a medium by which intricate subjects may be taught more conveniently, grasped more readily and with maximum results to the student. In short, films now give promise of realizing the "royal road to learning" that school teachers for ages have been telling their pupils is a pure myth.

While there exists a variance of opinion on the instructional functions in which the new medium can be employed, there is no lack of unanimity that the possibilities of its use are limitless.

Predict Widespread Use

What this means to the motion picture industry as a whole is indicated in the fact that educators are predicting that in time all of America's 264,000 public schools accessible to electric power lines will include film instruction in their curricula, with a projector in every classroom and auditorium, every teacher a projectionist, and every school system maintaining its own film exchange.

In their enthusiasm—or overenthusiasm—for the medium, there are those even predict that motion pictures some day will supplant teachers and textbooks, but this is rejected by responsible educators as an idle dream.

World interest in instructural sound films has been growing for 30 years. In this country, before sound, there were 15,000 to 25,000 silent projectors in the schools, at first 35 mm. installations and. since 1924, several thousand of the 16 mm. type. Most of the available films, however, were unsuited for instructional use.

Manufacturers Active

By the time the industry adopted sound, 90 per cent of the silent instructional films had fallen into disuse entirely as obsolete. While some early interest was displayed in the 35 mm sound projector, the average school was not ready for the development, chiefly because of the cost, and it was not until the 16 mm. sound projector was placed on the market—in April, 1934—that lagging interest was revived

Adaptability, mobility and comparatively low cost of the small projector constitute the greatest potential impetus to development of visual education. Several manufacturers are directing their major effort to school installations. While there are only about 500 installations of 35 mm. equipment in the United States and probably not more than an equal number of 16 mm, R. S. Zimmer of Erpi Picture Consultants, an affiliate of Electrical Research Products, Inc., estimated this week that on the basis of the present installation rate and the prospects, there will be a thousand 16 mm installations in schools before the year is up and between 5,000 and 7,000 installations within the next three years.

Major factors retarding the growth of instructional sound films in the past have been economic conditions and a lack of a proper approach to the problem, both by teachers and by those producing instructional films. The educators' attitude for the most part was due to the almost total absence of suitable educational film libraries, educational not in the sense of newsreels or such, but in the sense of being integrated with the course of study or adaptable to it.

Only 100 Pedagogical Films

A realization of the difficulty led Col. Frederick L. Devereux, at that time time general manager of Electrical Research Products, to initiate intensive research, with the result that in 1932 Erpi Picture Consultants was formed with Colonel Devereux as vice-president and general manager, for the purpose of developing the field of truly instructional subjects.

The term "educational films," it was pointed out, has been subjected to much abuse and misuse, as indicated in the fact that while some 10,000 subjects are listed by the United States Department of Commerce as "educational," only a relatively few are recognized by educators as actually pedagogical. Of these Erpi has produced a library of some 70 films for use in grade and high schools, universities and teacher training courses.

Dr. Joseph F. Noonan, superintendent of schools in Mahanoy City, Pa. (population, 15,000), is credited with pioneering the application of sound films in secondary education. The first installation of a sound film projector was made in the high school auditorium there four years ago. Dr. Noonan

MAYOR'S STAGE PAY FINANCES WATER FIGHT

Mayor William McNair of Pittsburgh had his City Hall moved into the Harris-Alvin theatre the other day when he began a week's vaudeville engagement there, at $1,500 a week.

At the first show the mayor's routine consisted of a buck-and-wing, eating of an apple, playing of a fiddle and the singing of an Italian aria. Dispatches from Pittsburgh said "he was the hit of the local theatrical season."

With his salary the mayor will hire lawyers to prosecute factories dumping refuse into Allegheny River tributaries. He and other Pittsburgh citizens drink the water out of the Allegheny and when the city was asked for funds to fight the factories and turned down the request, Mayor McNair signed for the week of vaudeville to get the money.

Parents Plan Programs Suitable for Children

Nearly forty public and private schools in New York have enlisted in a movement to improve the motion pcture fare of their students by selecting complete week end programs in which the newsreels and shorts as well as the features are free of "the vulgar, the risque and the horrid." Convinced that recent attempts at motion picture surveillance have achieved only partial success because the vigil has been limited to feature films, parents representing twenty-five private schools and ten public schools have formed the Schools' Motion Picture Committee. The committee is headed by Mrs. Alonzo Klaw, of the Friends' Seminary; Mrs. William Barclay Parsons, Jr., president of the Parents' League, representing the private schools, and Mrs. Irving Heyman, of the United Parents Association.

Five theatres have agreed to surround their approved feature presentation with approved newsreels, travelogues and other shorts. These selected programs will be presented from 1:45 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. Saturdays at the Plaza Theatre, the Little Carnegie Playhouse, the Lenox Theatre, the Eighth Street Playhouse and the Sutton Cinema.

Film Outlines Man's Rise

The Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago is sponsoring the showing in various large cities of its new film, "The Human Adventure," which shows man's rise from the days when he was a savage. The showings are under the supervision of Dr. James Henry Breasted, who supervised the film's production.

SCHOOLS BUILDING NEW PATRONAGE

since has installed three or four 16 mm. projectors for classroom lectures.

The first complete application of sound films in a public school system was made in Evansville, Ind., after Erpi Picture Consultants experts conducted a survey and made recommendations, as a result of which audio visual instruction became an integral part of the course of study with the opening of schools this fall.

Audio visual instruction is in operation in Pittsburgh, Boston, Newark, Providence, Fresno, Oakland, Port Chester and Tarrytown, N. Y., and Allentown and several smaller cities in Pennsylvania. The state of New Jersey is eager to adopt films in classroom use, but the necessary appropriation has not been forthcoming from the legislature.

On the whole, the Middlewest and West have shown greater progressiveness in adopting the method than the East. State visual aid libraries are maintained in Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, California, Texas, Arizona and Oregon, sometimes sponsored by the extension divisions of state colleges.

In Pittsburgh, where a visual instruction department is being developed on the basis of cost of $1 a pupil per year, the old library of 1,000 silent educational reels is to be augmented by sound films.

When Ohio's state film library is established, films will be available to the schools for the cost of postage. Out of the expected $100,000 additional annual revenue to be derived from the increase in censorship fees under the law which went into effect last July, an estimated $40,000 a year will go to education by film.

Big New York Experiment

The most extensive experiment in the value of the audio visual instruction is planned for the largest school system in the world. Dr. Joseph M. Sheehan, associate superintendent of schools for New York City, recommended that all new high schools and a number of centrally located elementary and junior high schools in each borough be equipped with a 35 mm. sound projector and screen. He proposed also that for further experimentation 16 mm. sound projectors be placed in seven high schools, five junior high schools and seven elementary schools. An appropriation of $15,000 is being sought from the city for equipment and films.

The 35 mm. installations were intended for high school auditoriums with a view to presenting selected films for the purposes of:

1. Developing in the children standards of taste which, Dr. Sheehan believes, "should in time result in an increased and continued demand for better motion pictures"; and

2. Presenting to school audiences definite life situations, their reactions and discussions to result in definite opportunity for "character training and the development of right social attitudes."

There are now 630 projectors in use among the 694 New York schools and their million pupils. All these projectors are silent, but a few sound projectors have been placed where the principals have made special requests. The equipment also includes 1,200 screens and 1,500 reels of film for the elementary schools, and other material.

MANUSCRIPTS, RARE BOOKS NOW ON FILM

Motion pictures of rare books, manuscripts, and the like, will become one of the most important functions of the John Hay Library at Brown University in Providence, R. I., according to Dr. Henry B. Van Hoesen, university librarian, president of the American Library Institute and secretary of the Bibliographical Society of America.

"We have explored the possibilities of inexpensive film copies of valuable and unobtainable research material far enough to be convinced," Dr. Van Hoesen declared, "that there is no book or manuscript we can not have at a cost of approximately $5 or less if we are satisfied with having it on film."

Successful experiments in the photographing of books, page by page upon motion picture film, of which the finished print was screened for an entire group of students, are the basis for the statement of the librarian.

Considerable scientific evidence in favor of sound film effectiveness in teaching has been developed by various tests. In a comprehensive experiment conducted by Dr. V. C. Arnspiger at Teachers College, Columbia University, it was found that the superiority of the classes using sound film in natural science was 26 per cent, in music 27 per cent, according to James Marshall, a member of the New York Board of Education.

Pupil Superiority Studied

Dr. Phillip J. Rulon of Harvard University evaluated films in teaching science in the ninth grade, and concluded that groups studying with the aid of the sound picture showed a superiority of 20.5 per cent. On a test given several months later, the sound picture groups reflected a superiority of 38.5 per cent. This test was conducted under a grant from the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching.

The sound picture also has demonstrated its worth in the colleges and universities, particularly in the University of Chicago, for which Erpi has produced several films dramatizing abstract subjects and making them more readily understood.

Erpi has been a trail blazer in the field of exclusively visual instruction films and still is a pioneer, alone in this activity, so far as is known, with the exception of a few universities, which, however, retain their films for their own use. The company launched its educational films about five years ago. After making 18 subjects, experts applied them in research in 20 school systems in the West, with the result that educational authorities began giving the project considerable attention.

Colonel Devereux expressed the conviction that motion pictures in schools are building new patronage since they are making large numbers of children "film conscious." Colonel Devereux, who has written a text book on visual instruction, is of the opinion that "use creates use" and that while films in the schools will remain solely an educational function, they are stimulating the development of a great new audience for the commercial theatre both among the children and, through them, among the parents.

Technique such as microphotography, animation, slow motion and time lapse (stop motion) is freely used in producing the films depicting complicated experiments and such subjects as the molecular theory of matter, the growth of plant life, and dentistry and surgery.

Edwin Carewe, film director, recently announced a plan to make "educational and instructive" motion pictures for schools and churches, some with a religious and patriotic background. Mr. Carewe said his project called also for installation of sound equipment in hundreds of schools and churches in the United States and Canada, and an initial order for the equipment specifying delivery of 1,000 16 mm. projectors as fast as manufactured.

Church Showing on Coast

The first showing in Mr. Carewe's program was held Sunday night at the Hollywood-Beverly Christian Church, with state and city officials participating. A 16 mm. version of "Are We Civilized?" was screened. Mr. Carewe announced his company would make "The Life of Christ."

Some of the instructional films make use of natural color photography, as, for instance, a subject made by the department of entomology in Georgia showing the development of tomato plants.

In Europe, attention has been devoted for years to the subject of instructional films, and the field is highly developed in the British Isles, Switzerland and Germany. There are 3,000 small sound projectors and 500 others in use in the German schools, and 100 films with 40,000 positive prints have been turned out by the national board for instructional films, it recently was reported. About 5,000 teachers have undergone training in the use of such films in Germany, and sooner or later all teachers will have to take a course. The work is supervised in Germany by a well organized system of national, provincial and local boards.

Problems Delaying Activities

W. Farr of the British Film Institute recently said that among the difficulties found in England as barring more widespread use of films in schools, the chief were: Some schools are not provided with electricity; the lack of dark rooms; high cost of projectors; the fact that educational boards are not willing to provide projectors for the schools, and the lack of a supply of suitable films. He said England was far behind Scotland, France and Germany in the use of projectors in schools.

Extending its field of activities, GB Equipments, a subsidiary of GB Pictures, is providing schools, homes and clubs with portable projection units for the showing of full-length feature films in 16 mm. size. All films made by GB are available for reduction to sub-standard, and release is made 12 months after the general release.

This service—which is confined to the British Isles for the present—was instituted about a year ago, and has grown so popular that nearly 1,000 films are in weekly demand, according to the company. In addition, cartoons, comedies and travelogues are available, and news summaries of the most interesting events of the month are issued monthly.

MONTGOMERY ADVERTISER—MONTGOMERY, ALA. "A powerful melodrama of the war that split a nation, moving realistically, interpreted by a happily selected cast, 'So Red the Rose' is a great picture . . . There could be no warmer praise for the picture's realism than the comment of Col. Mark Young, father-in-law of Montgomery's sheriff, as he left the Paramount last night: 'It was the war as I knew it'."

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION—ATLANTA, GA. "Rich with the color and the culture of the Old South. There is a strong plea for peace in the picture, and powerful tragedy when the mother believes that her son is dead. It is another great portrayal of romanticism and a splendid production of its director, King Vidor."

'Movies Are Highest Art' Says Wells, So He'll Write

With Hollywood Ahead, British Writer Now an Enthusiastic Fan

H. G. Wells, 69-year-old British writer and sage, returned to America on Monday from England, "not in the role of the Utopian novelist, the prolific historian or the genial appraiser of the New Deal," but as the world's new champion of the motion picture.

Mr. Wells was the center of a concentration of newspaper attention the like of which has hardly been enjoyed even by a Professor Einstein, a George Bernard Shaw, or whoever-else. It was literally a mass meeting of the press, held in the 14th floor office formerly occupied by ex-United Artists president Al Lichtman, in the corporation's New York headquarters off Broadway. Out of it came Mr. Wells' observation—he's going to write for Hollywood—that "in this new art I can see the very greatest form of expression, greater than the stage, infinitely finer than the opera."

His talk was mainly about his filmic plans, but he touched on political, scientific and literary subjects as well. From the interview, he was to travel post haste to Hollywood as a "quiet observer," the guest of Charles Chaplin. Meanwhile, United Artists has the rights for the showing in this country of his two latest works, both produced in England: "Things to Come," which starts in 1940 with a world war, pestilence and the collapse of civilization; and "The Man Who Could Work Miracles."

Mr. Wells started the interview with the acknowledgment that he is an amateur—"I have only been dealing with the film in the last two years," he said, "but I found an opportunity of making a couple of films with Alexander Korda in which I could have a certain voice in the production, and I thought it was worth while to come in before it was too late and try my hand at the new art. I think it is the very greatest art, with the possibilities of becoming the greatest art form that has ever existed. What I think is so extraordinary in the last four or five years, is the way in which voice production has reached a point of perfection, and the photographing of the face for dramatic effect—so that you can have more personal drama on the film than you can have on the stage. I don't know how it seems to you, but it seems to me that the film is likely to oust both the opera and the stage in the long run. You can get, I think, more emotion, more drama on the film, if you know how to put it there, than you possibly can get on the stage, and I don't see why musical films should not be infinitely finer than the opera." At this point the press let loose a barrage of questions:

Film as Art Form

Q. Do you believe the film will ever oust the novel as an art form?

A. I should think it would have a very considerable reaction—I do think that it will develop a literary collateral of the stage or the novel. I think a time will come when it will be possible to write treatments in such a way that they will be read just as plays are read. I have been trying a little of that myself, but my efforts are only just beginning. I think, however, that by telling the story in the present tense we will find out how to make it an extraordinary form for reading.

Q. You have been in Hollywood before?

A. No. I am going to Hollywood because I want to see what's done there. I have seen most of the work done in English studios, now I want to see what is being done in organizations in Hollywood.

Q. Are you under contract to a film company?

A. I am tied to Mr. Korda for a certain term, but I cannot say more.

Entertainment First

Q. Do you think that real social significance should be stressed in films?

A. I am for entertainment; but I think it is more entertaining to deal with something that is possible than just to have fantasy.

Q. Mr. Wells, stories as you have outlined, seem to deal with problematical efforts. Don't you think that films should deal with social efforts?

A. The films do 20 or 30 different things. You know there is not one particular form. You get the newsreel, which is developing beautifully, like "The March of Time"—great stuff that—then you are going to have the film, the fantastic form, and also going to have drama.

Q. Do you intend to write novels?

A. I don't know what may happen to me. As I say, I am writing film stories, but I want them to be published as books and read as books. I think it is one of the misfortunes of the film at the present time that, after a release, you don't have a chance of seeing the film. I would like to read the scripts of Rene Clair in book form. That would amuse me so much.

Q. How about censorship?

A. I don't know about your censorship here. I am told there are rules. I object to every form of censorship. It's an impertinence of the officials to interfere with the artists, who are much more important than politicians.

Q. Do you think television will do away with films?

A. I don't know. Quite possibly you will have the film in your own house.

Q. Do you find that the fixed personalities of the stars interfere with your writing?

Filling the Part

A. No, but I think you have to be very careful in casting. I think it is more necessary that an actor should fill his part in the film than on the stage.

Q. What effect will color have on the films?

A. The film organizations should agree not to make full-length colored films for ten years more. This would be the best thing they could do for themselves and for the films. When all is said and done the public want a story.

Q. Should color be limited to short subjects?

A. It would be good business for the art if it were reserved for shorts and wern't used for the long films, the important films.

Q. Can these treatments be used on the stage?

A. The methods of the two arts are entirely different. I do not believe in transferring stage plays on to the screen. The stage has limitations that the screen should not accept. A stage play requires original treatment before it can properly be used for motion pictures. Incidentally, some novels are almost what I refer to as treatments, notably Thomas Hardy's "The Dynasts." If you read that over, I think you will see that there is really a very great film in that particular book. I think it would go on the screen almost as it is.

HERBERT GEORGE WELLS

Q. What do you think of propaganda in the film?

A. I don't like propaganda anywhere. I think the business of a writer and an artist is to express himself, and if he hits people that is their look-out. I suppose by propaganda you mean making people believe something that you don't believe yourself.

Q. Do you think increasing propaganda will be employed in the films?

A. They are bound to be dull films.

Q. Do the movies give you any room for argument?

A. Very little. The movie goes too fast, there is no time to argue.

Q. Do you believe films are better than the stage?

A. The film is very much greater. It gives you scene, drama, human voice, human expression, numberless things the stage cannot give you. The stage is very limited.

Q. You said the film was out to oust the stage. Don't you think it would be a great pity?

A. One thing has to give way to another. Artistic forms have to move with the times.

Q. You say that the fact that Hollywood has come to Broadway and is producing many of the plays is a waste of time and money, that stage plays are not written for the movies?

A. If plays have been written for the movies, I don't think they have been successful. A play has to be written within extreme limits.

Q. What do you think about the average movie fan?

A. There is no average movie fan. Needless to say there are different sorts of people.

Q. Do you think the movies play down to the audience?

A. I think newspaper proprietors and editors, book publishers, book sellers, theatrical productors and film people all play down to the public, and have played down too low. I believe the public can stand very much better stuff than it ever gets a chance to appreciate.

ACTORS, FEARING "AX," PROTEST WPA $10,000,000 RELIEF PROJECT

Players' Union in Hollywood Assails Program as Threatening Existence; Elmer Rice Answers Critics of Government Idea

Guild Envisions Attacks on Salaries of Players; Demands Representation; National Theatre Also Seen as Threat

The many-sided chorus of criticism of the government's ambitious plans to blanket the nation with federal theatre relief projects drawing on a fund of $10,000,000, was swelled this week by the protest of the Screen Actors' Guild, the players' union in Hollywood, which expresses serious fears of the effect on the status of the theatre and the actor.

While Actors Equity in New York, whose Council has substantially approved the project over the opposition of many of its members, was admitting that at the moment the Government's theatre plans "are in a state of extreme uncertainty," the West Coast group was assailing the entire program.

The Actors' Guild thus aligns itself on the side of the Actors Forum, militant group within Equity, which has challenged the project and whose opposition to Equity's procedure in giving approval has brought to a head long smoldering internal dissension which is due for a showdown next Monday.

The Screen Actors' Guild was planning a mass meeting to map action on WPA wages and Little Theatre subsidizing.

Rice Defends Program

Elmer Rice, playwright who has himself been vocal in the past in criticism of certain things theatrical, meanwhile as New York regional director of the federal theatre projects was defending himself against cries of the organized performers raised in complaint to some of the features of the WPA program. One of these was the withdrawal of dramatic and vaudeville companies which have been touring the Civilian Conservation Camps in the second and third corps area, for which motion pictures will largely be substituted.

The Screen Guild's Magazine currently calls the dangers inherent in the federal relief projects to the attention of Guild Members, and prefaces its attack on the WPA by saying:

"We readily admit that the theatre has fallen to a low state, and it does not require a great deal of intelligence to realize that the screen and motion pictures have suffered from this condition. Pictures need the stage. In the past, plays have been the greatest source of screen story material. But last year, to quote an analysis recently made by MOTION PICTURE HERALD, only 13 per cent of motion picture story properties purchased were plays.

"The stage, too, has been the primary source of supply of new acting talent. But now, with few plays running longer than three weeks in New York, this source for new talent is disappearing. In addition, the stage has been the place to test new trends in dramatic exposition."

CWA EQUIPS MOBILE RECORDING APPARATUS

Presaging extensive sound film production by Government agencies, the CWA has equipped a mobile recording apparatus and is using it to make a sound film record of the resettlement projects in the South, for permanent inclusion in the files of the National Archives in Washington. The filming primarily is of the settlers giving their reactions to the project.

This supplements the work of six cameramen who have been sent into the field by Harry Hopkins, federal relief director, to take silent pictures of the progress of the $4,000,000 WPA program throughout the country. Director of the film project is Sydney McKean, formerly with Fox and Paramount.

Newsreels may obtain these films without cost for inclusion in regular releases.

Consequently, the Guild feels that the Government's theatre program is important to its Hollywood acting talent, so important that it devotes four pages of its magazine to discussions of the various phases of the plans.

First, the Guild points out that the project was established to put back to work needy professionals connected with the theatre in all its branches, but nevertheless most discussions of the subject steer clear of mention that the wage scale for actors is $30 to $94 maximum a month, and that it is not clear that playwrights are to be paid at all. The Guild ventures that mention of these phases is omitted from WPA publicity to avoid controversy.

Hidden in this and in the intention of the WPA to make the various projects self-supporting and to continue them on their own momentum after the federal program is completed, the Guild suspects an ax to slice actors' salaries. A solution to the problem is proposed, that theatrical unions such as the Guild be given representation on the projects' board of directors and on the boards of the 12 regional districts throughout the country.

Why, asks the Guild, are managers of professional theatre groups conspicuous by their absence from the roster of regional directors appointed by Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, the national director?

"Theoretically, the plans are admirable. Where they diverge from theory, and attempt long-scale, permanent planning, they fall down miserably. Here in California, upwards of 2,000 actors will be employed, and of this amount 10 per cent need not be on relief. If, when the projects are completed on June 30, 1936, another category of alphabetical symbols materializes or the country returns to what is laughingly called 'Prosperity,' some 2,000 actors who were anxious and willing to work for $23.50 (top scale) and were non-union actors, would be clamoring at the studio doors.

"Or if the projects are successful in their attempt to become self-sustaining, these 2,000 adapted to living on such a low wage scale, will be thrown into direct competition with actors then employed in standard wage positions. One need not be an economist to realize it would not be long before actors' wages in all branches would come tumbling down."

Demanding that film actors, through the Guild, be given representation in the organization and planning of the projects, the Guild points out that most of the unions concerned, such as Equity, the stagehands' union and others, have been consulted by Mrs. Flanagan, but that an apparent discrimination has been made in the case of Hollywood talent.

Another danger is seen by the Guild in the statement of Gilmor Brown, director of the project in six western states centering in California, that an attempt will be made to create a National Theatre.

Meanwhile in New York, Equity's protest against removal of the CCC camp shows, which it had encouraged, was combined with an excoriation of Mr. Rice by the American Actors' Federation, and both hit at the regional director for his statement that "the quality of the plays and productions now touring the camps is decidedly poor and far below any reasonable standard of professional excellence."

Activity also was beginning in the field, and in Los Angeles it was announced that 840 men and women professionals will be given employment in the WPA theatre projects. Admissions will range from 10 cents to $1 top, the proceeds to defray royalties and the cost of equipment.

The WPA in Chicago is preparing to stage an elaborate show, probably at the Civic Opera House, in December, with a cast of about 250, and officials are also considering the possibility of stock production in the Kedzie Theatre, on the west side, at a price scale of 10, 20 and 30 cents.

A state theatre is to be established in Indianapolis by the Government project, with a company of 150 producing in a legitimate house to be leased. Dr. Lee R. Norvelle, head of the division of speech and dramatics at Indiana University, has been named director for the state.

Watch for Competition

Bert Plummer of Alton, Ill., has been named WPA supervisor of music for that district in southern Illinois, and will be in charge of organizing orchestras, bands and other entertainment. A similar program is expected to be launched in St. Louis shortly, on a more extensive scale.

In Boston, it was announced that Hirman Motherwell, who began his career as dramatic critic of the Boston Evening Transcript, will be the regional director in New England.

Exhibitors in Columbus were watching for elements of competition in the construction of a Civic Center there with a grant of $1,569,000 from the WPA, and to include a theatre.

THEATRE TELEVISION IN A YEAR—PERHAPS

Baird May Start at Dominion or Capitol, but Obstacles Must Be Removed First

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

Persistent rumors that regular television programs will be featured in one or two London theatres before the end of the present year are neither confirmed nor denied by Baird Television, Ltd. It is this company's name which is associated with most of the current gossip about television.

The most widely circulated story is that Baird plans to provide television items regularly as part of the program at the Dominion, Tottenham Court Road. Also frequently mentioned is the Capitol, Piccadilly Circus, which like the Dominion is a G-B house; it recently was scheduled for reconstruction with television specially in view, but has not yet closed down for that purpose.

It is probable that when Baird is ready to transmit television items for full-screen reproduction it will tie up with one or both of these theatres, but there are various obstacles to be removed first.

The technical problems may or may not have been surmounted, as has been claimed. The legal position has yet to be stated authoritatively. The leading fact is that the transmission of television is a monopoly of the British Broadcasting Corporation and that BBC's provisional plans for reception embrace the private listener, but not, so far as is known, the public reproduction of the items to be sent out from Alexandra Palace early next year. The reticence of Baird may be explained by this fact—or it may simply be due to the internal condition of the company, which is at present facing a reconstruction problem.

About a month ago Baird, which is controlled by Gaumont-British, announced a plan to raise $1,500,000 by a rearrangement of its capital which would place all shares in the category of one dollar (5/-) Ordinaries. The plan involved a sacrifice of 58 per cent of holdings by preferred and 28 per cent of holdings by deferred shareholders. These details, on publication, were subjected to considerable criticism and a special meeting arranged for October 31 was cancelled at the last moment and announcement made that a new reconstruction plan was being prepared to meet the wishes of both classes of shareholders. The details have still to be published.

GTC Has Noisy Meeting

The annual meeting of General Theatres Corporation, Ltd., which among other things was to sanction the reconstruction plan sponsored by Gaumont-British, was an extremely noisy affair. The preference share holders, who had unsuccessfully opposed the plan in the courts, turned up in force and voted down, on a show of hands, practically every proposal of the board, refusing to accept the report and accounts, and passing resolutions demanding details of theatre receipts and payments to G-B under various heads, and the appointment of an investigating committee. They also declined to re-elect Maurice Ostrer to the board and the auditors for a further year of office, and their spokesman delivered a sweeping attack on the G-B management of GTC theatres. All this made a lively afternoon at Film House, but just what purpose it served is not so clear. In every case where the show of hands showed a defeat for the board, the chairman demanded a poll, and as it is public property that the board has over 1,000,000 proxies against the dissentients' 200,000 votes, all the official resolutions were, in fact, passed and the plan goes into operation.

H & G, the New Phase

Another series of company transactions of the week registered the completion of a further stage in the prolonged controversy between Gaumont-British and the Kinematograph Renters' Society in regard to the booking of the "Hyams" theatres. At extraordinary meetings, each of the H & G companies went formally into voluntary liquidation and appointed liquidators, as a preliminary to their absorption by Gaumont-British Super Cinemas, Ltd. In each case there appear to have been a cash payment and an allotment of shares by the last named company.

The position now appears to be that a majority control in the H & G companies is legally held by G-B Super Cinemas, in which a majority holding is by Gaumont-British Corporation.

The KRS, in the meantime, has refused to accept the first H & G—G-B Super Cinemas deal, and affirms the intention of distributors to deal only with the original owners of the halls—who have now gone out of business! Time will show whether, in sheer default of any other owners, it eventually will accept the H & G halls as part of the big G-B booking circuit or whether further legalities will be added to the already lengthy list of such ingenuities which this test "booking combine" case has brought into existence.

Censorship Appeal

An announcement by the London county council entertainments committee this week may have important bearings on the attitude of distributors toward the British Board of Film Censors. The committee has approached the board with the request that it revise the clause in its agreement with film owners by which the owners agree not to handle films rejected by the board. In future the clause is to contain the additional word "unless the express consent of the licensing authority to its exhibition has been obtained."

The legal position as regards censorship is that any film owner whose subject is rejected by the British Board of Film Censors may appeal to the licensing authority, which must then view the film. A high court ruling has laid it down that the licensing authority may not delegate its powers to the BBFC; in effect, distributors have, by agreeing not to show films prohibited by the BBFC, given the latter's rulings a legal standing to which they are not entitled, and have stultified the licensing authorities.

Sidney Kent Subpoenaed

Sidney R. Kent, president of Twentieth Century-Fox, on Wednesday was subpoenaed for trial of a suit filed by Paramount trustees against former officers and directors of the company to recover large sums alleged to have been paid them in participation in a so-called employees' stock purchase plan in 1931.

Tax Is Voided in Washington State

Distributors were victorious this week in obtainng from Washington State supreme court a nullification of the one-half of one per cent tax on gross income, although in New York they were still battling with city authorities over the legality of the sales tax there.

The supreme court of Washington has ruled that distributors are exempt from the state business tax of one-half of one per cent on gross incomes and the ruling upholds the recent superior court decision which held the tax was an unlawful levy upon interstate commerce.

The suit was brought originally by Paramount, RKO, Universal, Fox, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, United Artists, Vitagraph and Columbia against the State Tax Commission.

In New York, under a new interpretation of the sales tax, the city finance department is endeavoring to assess distributors on the basis of all film rentals received through New York exchanges, regardless of whether the revenue is paid by theatres located within the city, it has been revealed.

The city's proposed assessment, heretofore, has been confined to film rentals derived from theatres within the city limits. Under this interpretation of the tax the estimated assessment against all local distributors was approximately $700,000. The new interpretation, which holds all revenues received by New York exchanges subject to the tax, increases the assessment to an amount estimated at $3,000,000.

In Oklahoma, meanwhile, distributors will pay the assessments made by the state in connection with its new tax for old age pensions which became effective November 1, but the payments will be made under protest. In opposing the measure they will contend that the statute amendment authorizing the tax is faulty, burdensome and ambiguous. The tax amounts to one-quarter of one per cent of gross revenue of exchanges and two per cent of theatre grosses.

Butterfield to Add More Theatres in Michigan

The Butterfield Circuit has started in Michigan a building and rehabilitation campaign. A new theatre is being built in Alpena in cooperation with local interests. The Orpheum theatre, Ann Arbor, which has been closed for several years, is being entirely remodeled and equipped from booth to stage. The McGin theatre, Cadillac, and the Ramsdell theatre, Manistee, will be remodeled, reseated and will open shortly after the new year. The Bijou theatre, Battle Creek, also will be fixed over.

The Mecca, Saginaw, has just opened after having been entirely redecorated and reseated with several alterations being made which makes it practically a new theatre.

Jones With Youngblood

J. D. Jones, who was reported as having resigned from all activities in the industry, is associated with H. L. Youngblood as manager of the San Angelo, Texas, theatres of the Robb & Rowley circuit.

FEDERAL AIM TO BOSS TELEVISION DRAWS FIRE IN CABLE MEDDLING

A. T. and T., Challenging Government, Refuses to Build Experimental Coaxial Line If It Must Be Available to Rivals

Telephone Company Considers Dropping Plan for U. S.; a Strangle Hold for England with World Line Seen Result

Open rebellion of the dominant television interests against the Government's plans to control the development is indicated by the demand of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company that the Federal Communications Commission cease its meddling in operation of the projected coaxial cable between New York and Philadelphia.

The determined fight of the A. T. and T., parent company of Western Electric Company, Inc., and Electrical Research Products, Inc., against federal dictation threatens to shift television development from this country to Great Britain, said a report from Washington.

Bluntly challenging Government authority to dictate the terms under which it can pursue its research, the A. T. and T. refused to build its proposed experimental line unless the Commission modified its ruling that it must be made available to research by rival companies.

Called Outside Jurisdiction

Attacking the Government ban on the project as an unconstitutional attempt to usurp management functions, the A. T. and T. charged the Commission stepped outside its jurisdiction in seeking to regulate scientific research. As a result of these charges, the Commission not only granted A. T. and T.'s demand for a rehearing, but decided to reopen the entire case next Monday in Washington.

At a previous hearing, the application for a permit was opposed by radio and minority film interests on the ground that construction of the cable would give A. T. and T. a monopoly in the television field, in which Radio Corporation of America is its chief rival.

At the same time it was learned that A. T. and T. is seriously considering abandonment of its plan to lay the cable in this country. One alternate proposal being weighed would place it in the A. T. and T. system in Canada. Another would place it between New York and Albany, N. Y., eliminating federal supervision by confining it to one state.

See Leverage for England

"Perfection of television, through experiments in Canada, was seen as promising England a strangle hold on the new medium of communication," reported Universal Service, which serves Hearst and other newspapers. "Through use of radio-telephone facilities in London, as well as trans-oceanic telegraph lines, an international system of television, experts believe, could be devised in which the United States would have no part."

Dr. Frank B. Jewett, president of Bell Telephone Laboratories, which conducts the research for A., T. and T., pointed out that under the present terms of the Commission's construction permit "it might be possible for some one to exercise a confiscatory action on A. T. and T. property that may cost more than $500,000."

TELEVISION COMING, SAYS GENERAL HARBORD

General James G. Harbord, chairman of the board of the Radio Corporation of America, in a recent address at Princeton University, asserted that seeing a man who is talking from a distant city, as if he were speaking face to face with the listener, seems a nearer possibility today than sending a telegram across an ocean without wires did on the eve of Marconi's first transatlantic test.

The British Postoffice is reported to be planning coaxial cable experiments of its own, and so is Germany, said Dr. Jewett.

Television engineers, confronted with the riddle of how to establish a nationwide network to carry images, found encouragement in the recent testimony of Dr. Jewett. He indicated there is reason to believe that if the tryout of the coaxial cable between New York and Philadelphia is successful it will be an immediate forerunner to extending this type of cable to other parts of the United States.

Dr. Jewett explained that when the 100-mile circuit between the two cities is demonstrated to be practicable it will indicate for the first time the possibility of transmitting television images of good definition over longer distances.

In authorizing construction of the cable, the Commission ruled that A. T. and T. "cannot monopolize the experimental advantages, features and uses of the coaxial cable to the disadvantage, exclusion and detriment of other parties."

The coaxial cable has proved capable of carrying 240 conversations simultaneously without interference, and also multiplex telegraphy. Existing telephone cables carry only three. It is conceded to be the most practical device for transmission of television photos.

Further indication that television has reached a high stage of development is signalized by the news of refinements trickling out of the research laboratories and by additional applications filed with the Federal Communications Commission for the construction of transmitting stations. While David Sarnoff, president of the Radio Corporation of America, said recently that the perfection of television as a public development is still far in the future, there are enthusiasts who believe that it will be ready commercially in about a year, and the first-line optimists say possibly in several months.

Returning recently from a European radio inspection tour, Mr. Sarnoff reported that America continues to lead the world in television development and that progress here is in advance of anything he saw abroad.

Typical of the intense research and experimentation going on in the new field is the activity in the laboratories of the RCA-Victor Company at Camden, N. J., where Dr. V. K. Zworykin, television research expert, recently described a powerful electric amplifier designed to convert an infinitesimal amount of light into electricity, heralded as another big boost in putting television on its way.

So microscopic and sensitive is the device, which Dr. Zworykin calls an electronic multiplier, that it can "see" light impulses too feeble to be discerned by the human eye.

The amplifier is built in the form of a glass tube, approximately the size of a standard radio tube. Literally, electrons, or tiny specks of negative electricity, go in one end of the tube and emerge at the other end in the form of high current. The device is so powerful and flexible that a single unit could combine all the functions of the tubes in a six to 10-tube radio set, at the same time increasing sensitivity and lessening noise. A small tube with 10 stages of amplification is capable of producing a gain of 500,000 times.

Circuit Noise Elimination Claimed

Despite the enormous amplification, the unit eliminates all circuit noises, Dr. Zworykin said, pointing out this is a decided advantage over the thermionic amplifier tube used in the ordinary receiving sets and makes it specially adaptable to television, in which images without the din of background noise or "static" are desired.

Extending its scope, Philco Radio and Television Corporation of Philadelphia has applied for an experimental television transmitting license with the Federal Communications Commission. If granted, the construction permit will sanction operation of a 250-watt installation. Philadelphia Storage Battery Company also has asked the Commission that its radio station license W3XE be assigned to the Philco corporation, which is understood conducting its developments under the Philco-Farnsworth patents.

Another company which seeks to broadcast television while developing the commercial possibilities of receiving sets is National Television Corporation, which has pending an application for a license to construct a transmitting station in New York City.

The Commission up to now has issued

Museum Starts Student Series On January 1st

The relation between Tom Mix and movie tempo, and the part that Theda Bara played in adding the word "vamp" to the American language will be the concern of thousands of high school, college, museum and university students the country over after January 1st.

January, 1936, has finally been set as the date when the newly founded Rockefeller-endowed Museum of Modern Art Film Library, New York, will start the actual circulation of film programs giving to students for the first time the opportunity to study the art of the motion picture exactly as the other arts are already studied—painting, sculpture and the like.

This branch of the Museum of Modern Art began last June to trace, secure and preserve outstanding films of all types so that programs of film should be made available to students of the cinema. Gifts of film from members of the American film industry and others have since flowed into the Film Library.

The two preliminary programs now in preparation confine themselves chiefly to the American film. They range from the 50-foot kinetoscope films of 1895 through the rise of the "early masters," D. W. Griffith, Mack Sennett and Thomas H. Ince, to the great films of the beginning of the sound era.

John E. Abbott, general manager of the Museum's Film Library, this week announced the first two series to be circulated will be constructed as follows:

FILM SERIES I

A Short Survey of the Film in America, 1895 - 1932

1. The Development of the Narrative 9 reels, available Jan. 1, 1936
   - 1895 WASH DAY TROUBLES
   - 1895 THE EXECUTION OF MARY, QUEEN OF SCOTS
   - 1902 A TRIP TO THE MOON, by George Melies
   - 1903 THE GREAT TRAIN ROBBERY, by Edwin S. Porter
   - 1907 FAUST, a Pathe film
   - 1911 QUEEN ELIZABETH, with Sarah Bernhardt
2. The Rise of the American Film 11 reels, available Feb. 1, 1936
   - 1912 THE NEW YORK HAT, by D. W. Griffith, with Mary Pickford and Lionel Barrymore
   - 1915 BETWEEN MEN, by Thomas H. Ince, with W. S. Hart
   - 1915 THE CLEVER DUMMY, a Mack Sennett comedy
   - 1914 A FOOL THERE WAS, by Frank Powell, with Theda Bara
3. D. W. Griffith 12 reels, available Mar. 1, 1936
   - 1916 INTOLERANCE
4. The German Influence 11 reels, available Apr. 1, 1936
   - 1928 HANDS, by Stella Simon
   - 1927 SUNRISE, by F. W. Murnau
5. The Talkies 14 reels, available May 1, 1936
   - 1926-7 Early sound experiments, with a scene from THE JAZZ SINGER
   - 1927 Movietone newsreel, with Mussolini, Tilden and Bernard Shaw
   - 1930 ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT, by Lewis Milestone
   - 1928 STEAMBOAT WILLIE, by Walt Disney

* * * * *

(For those not equipped with sound apparatus)

5a. The End of the Silent Era 10 reels, available May 1, 1936
   - 1928 PLANE CRAZY, the first Mickey Mouse
   - 1928 THE LAST COMMAND, by Josef von Sternberg

FILM SERIES 2

Some Memorable American Films, 1896 - 1934

1. The "Western" Film Available Jan. 1, 1936
   - 1903 THE GREAT TRAIN ROBBERY, by Edwin S. Porter (1 reel)
   - 1916 A GOOD BAD MAN, with Wm. S. Hart (2 reels)
   - 1923 THE COVERED WAGON, by James Cruze (10 reels)
   - or 1924, THE IRON HORSE, by John Ford (10 reels)
2. "Comedies" Available Feb. 1, 1936
   - 1900 THE DOCTOR'S SECRET, by George Melies (1 reel)
   - 1910 GERTIE THE DINOSAUR, by Winsor McCay (1 reel)
   - 1916 HIS BITTER PILL, a Mack Sennett satire (2 reels)
   - 1925 THE FRESHMAN, with Harold Lloyd (7 reels)
   - or 1923, SAFETY LAST, with Harold Lloyd (7 reels)
   - 1927 *THE SEX LIFE OF THE POLYP, with Robert Benchley (1 reel)
   - 1929 *THE SKELETON DANCE, by Walt Disney (1 reel)
3. Documentary Films Available Mar. 1, 1936
   - 1897 INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT McKINLEY (100 feet)
   - 1934 *Newsreel of the assassination of King Alexander of Jugoslavia (½ reel)
   - 1925 GRASS, or 1927, CHANG, both by Merian Cooper and Ernest Schoedsack (each 6 reels)
   - 1933 Ultra-slow motion studies (½ reel)
   - 1933 THE NESTING OF THE SEA TURTLE, by Floyd Crosby (1 reel)
   - 1933 THE GREAT GLASS BLOWER, by Jean Benoit-Levy (2 reels)
4. Mystery and Violence Available Apr. 1, 1936
   - 1911 TATTERS: A TALE OF THE SLUMS (1 reel)
   - 1927 UNDERWORLD, by Josef von Sternberg (8 reels)

Columbia, United Artists Sued By Artist On Cartoon Series

A suit for an accounting and injunction proceedings have been filed in the New York supreme court by Pedro Llanuza, newspaper cartoonist, and artist, against Columbia Pictures, Winkler Film Corporation and Charles B. Mintz. Also named co-defendants in a second action were Walter Disney and United Artists.

In his complaint the cartoonist sets forth that in the summer of 1931 he conceived the idea of using caricatures of popular screen stars in animated short subjects, which was an original and novel creation of his own. In September, 1931, he said he submitted a sample scenario accompanied by sketches to the defendants, and he goes on to say that in the fall of 1932, in violation of the agreement which he had with the defendants, they wrongfully used for commercial purposes his scenarios and caricature sketches without his knowledge or consent. These were entitled "Seeing Stars," "Out of the Ether," "Auto Show," "Hollywood Babies" and "Hollywood on Parade," he alleged.

"The wrongful production and exhibition of the aforesaid animated screen shorts," according to the cartoonist's complaint, "had netted Columbia, Winkler and Mintz profits in excess of $500,000, no part of which has been paid to the plaintiff."

In the second action, directed against Disney and United Artists, he says that Columbia, Winkler and Mintz wrongfully authorized Disney and United Artists to produce and exhibit animated screen shorts based on his idea. One, in particular, was entitled "Who Killed Cock Robin?" He is seeking an accounting of the profits, an injunction to restrain all of the defendants from making further use of his idea and also an award of money damages to whatever extent the court deems fit.

Federal Aim to Boss Television Brings Protest

only experimental licenses, and how soon it starts granting commercial licenses depends on the rapidity of the development as well as how soon the Government believes television is technically and commercially feasible.

It is certain, however, that the Government intends to maintain close regulation of television and not to permit its growth without direction as was the case with radio, according to John W. McKay, vice-president and general manager of National Television.

Will Control Quality, Too

Through the Federal Communications Commission, the Government's control will extend even to the quality of the programs transmitted and to the apparatus, including the receiving sets, with the intention of maintaining a standard, said Mr. McKay this week. Technically, he added, television has achieved a high degree of refinement, being capable of projecting an image 85 per cent as good as that obtained by a portable home film projector.

By the fall of next year it is expected there will be home receiving sets offered to the public at a cost of probably $500 to $700, which it is conceded will be too high to permit wide popular use.

As was the case with radio, however, after the market for the high-priced apparatus has reached its saturation point, the cost will be reduced, but not until installations become as common as radio sets are today will television offer strong competition to theatres, according to belief in motion picture circles. Even then, the fact that humans are basically social beings and inclined to mingle with others is pointed out as a sufficient psychological reason why theatres will still be the attraction.

Television companies are not looking beyond home reception at the start, but ultimately it is predicted that entertainment will be broadcast from films at one central point to the screens of a circuit of theatres. However, this entails obvious commercial disadvantages and is so far in the future as to cause no worry to theatre operators.

In addition to the high initial cost, it is expected that the receiving sets will be expensive to operate, certainly more than to maintain a present-day radio set. Also, there is the problem of suitable talent, since the performers will be seen as well as heard. The early programs probably will consist mainly of broadcasts from films.

Commercial Obstacles

Television is proceeding rapidly in England, where visual transmission is expected to be in full swing by the fall of 1936, according to word from London. Preliminary test transmissions are to be followed by regular public service as soon as practicable. Development in Great Britain is under the direction of British Broadcasting Corporation, which is government controlled, in arrangement with the Baird Television Company, Ltd., and the Marconi-E. M. I. Television Company, Ltd.

GROWING NATIONALISM THREATENS AMERICAN FILM REVENUE ABROAD

Major Herron Sent Overseas by MPPDA to Study Problem First-hand as Restrictions There Steadily Grow

Quotas, Dubbing and Taxing Regulations Enhanced by Censorship of Films of Political Tinge or Touching Nationalism

Intense nationalistic feeling in other countries resulting from the rivalry for world markets and the desire to protect home industries, is making it increasingly difficult for American motion picture distributors and exporters to do business abroad. Accentuated by economic conditions and the patriotic fervor which is sweeping most of the world, the restrictions imposed have reached a stage which is seriously threatening American film revenue from overseas, which has varied from 10 per cent to as high as 35 per cent of a single company's total rental intake.

So drastic are the foreign regulations, that the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America recently dispatched Major Frederick L. Herron, chief of its foreign department, to Europe for a first-hand investigation.

While the purpose of Major Herron's tour has not been announced officially, it is understood he will confer with the national governments with a view to ameliorating some of the regulations which now hamper American distributors in their foreign activities. His first concern was the stringent French film decree, which has been postponed indefinitely.

In addition to quotas, dubbing and taxation regulations, European countries are quick to impose censorship on films which have a political tinge or are considered offensive to national customs and traditions.

The most serious situation of this kind in years was settled only upon Paramount's agreement to withdraw "The Devil Is a Woman" from the theatres of the world, following the demands of the Spanish Government, which acted as a result of popular objection to scenes depicting a member of the Civil Guard in a state of intoxication.

State Department Urged Withdrawal

The Spanish Government issued an ultimatum threatening to confiscate all of Paramount's prints in that country and to bar the company's pictures from exhibition in Spain if the company refused to discontinue world circulation of the Marlene Dietrich picture and destroy the prints.

The American State Department interceded, and, taking cognizance of the official protest over the "insults to the Spanish armed forces," advised Adolph Zukor, Paramount chairman, "to withdraw the film as soon as possible." While the Madrid Government described the edict as "very satisfactory," it has advised its embassies throughout the world to observe the progress of the withdrawal of the film and to expedite it where possible.

Paramount is taking steps immediately to comply with the demand, and will negotiate individual settlements with exhibitor accounts who had the picture under contract but have not played it. The master print was burned last Thursday in the presence of the Spanish consul-general in New York.

War clouds hanging over Europe are causing the governments to be extremely sensitive to anything shown on their screens which might cause unrest, and in recent weeks there have been a number of instances of censorship imposed on American and other films, chief of which is a decree banning all films of a martial nature in Austria. In the British West Indies, where the population is predominantly Negro, pictures of the Italo-Ethiopian conflict were ordered withdrawn.

The feeling extends to diplomatic representations in this country, although perhaps without the official sanction of the governments, as was the case when Robert G. Closterman, German counsul at Portland, Ore., took exception to the Nazi sequence in the current "March of Time" release. The management of the Paramount theatre, and the local censors refused to eliminate the objectionable portion.

Artistry Hampered

Artistic development of motion pictures is considerably hampered, too, by the objections to the filming of books and plays which may run afoul of national sensitiveness, said Major Herron's office. Paramount now is in a quandary over the indignation registered by France when it was announced the company would make "Paths of Glory," originally a novel and recently seen on the New York stage, which tells of an occurrence in the World War not too complimentary to the French war machine.

MGM has announced Franz Werfel's novel, "The Forty Days of Musa Dagh," as a forthcoming release, but is worried by the protests of the Turkish Government, and if the film is made true to the original story, its theme of atrocities visited on the Armenians probably will bar it from exhibition in the republic of Kemal Pasha.

While instances of this sort are neither frequent nor new, they are growing in intensity as a result of the present wave of nationalism, and the American companies fear the Spanish edict as a precedent threatening distribution.

Behind this nationalism is the fight to keep foreign competition from swallowing the domestic markets and the press for international business. Since Americans are the heaviest exporters, with 60 per cent of the world's playing time to their credit, the decrees place the brunt of the burden on the United States.

Withdraw Within Themselves

Then, too, import regulations among European countries bring retaliations and cause them to withdraw within themselves commercially and, following that, artistically. It is pointed out, for instance, that Germany has been in the vanguard of nations seeking to become self-contained and that hardly any films of world-wide commercial or artistic significance have come out of Germany in the last two or three years. None of the domestic film industries, in fact, has received any benefits, with the important exception of England, and there the industry has been stimulated quite aside from the protective measures afforded, it was pointed out.

England's progress in the United States is an indication of its strides elsewhere in the world. With adequate facilities, improvement in product and enjoying free interchange of trade and its far-flung colonies and dominions, Great Britain has maintained a pace second only to the United States as a leader in the world film market.

The situation affects all export business, not only films, and it is with a recognition of the increasing trend toward closed markets that the Government, through President Roosevelt and the State Department, has undertaken to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements. Such treaties are in effect with Cuba, Brazil, Belgium, Haiti, Sweden and Colombia, and others are in negotiation with Spain, Italy, France and other countries.

Distributors Favor Pacts

American motion picture distributors are definitely favorable to such pacts, since they prevent the imposition of further restrictions and by mutual concessions lay the foundation for stabilized world conditions.

A reduction from various higher figures to 15 per cent ad valorem has been granted on film machinery, arc lamps, screens, sound equipment and the like entering Canada from the United States, under the new reciprocal trade agreement consummated last week, it has been revealed in Washington.

The Canadian duty on films for aerial photography has been reduced from 15 to 10 per cent ad valorem, and the rate on photographic instruments is cut from 30 to 22½ per cent. American periodicals, which have been subject to duty, are now declared duty free. Before the treaty can become effective, it must be ratified by the Dominion Parliament.

Quotas against American films are imposed by Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Austria, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, New South Wales and New Zealand. France has no specific quotas with respect to American pictures, but foreign language films can be shown in only five theatres in Paris and 10 in the provinces. The hoped-for stimulus to French production, however, has not materialized.

Dubbing must be done locally in France, Italy, Germany, Austria and Czechoslovakia, and those governments exact a dubbing fee

Criticism Is AMPA Keynote

Motion picture publicists received a polite, but helpful, "panning" for their wasted opportunities of crashing the public prints when Alice Hughes, merchandising columnist of the New York American, faced them in their own council at the luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at Jack Dempsey's restaurant in Manhattan last week and told some of the things that are said and thought by the people on the receiving end of the pieces the boys write for the papers.

The first fault of the publicity men, Miss Hughes said, and the one that must have hurt her listeners the most, is that they show no initiative. The editors have made the suggestions, whereas the ideas should certainly originate with the film companies' publicity departments, before an angle that is really alive is developed, she continued. In the liquor business and the cigarette trade such things are done much better—and by a woman. Take it from Miss Hughes. She knows the female opportunist who handles the Schenley Distillers' account and who revitalized the fashion worlds of New York and Paris with her creation of the new "Dubonnet red," the latest color rage which has helped to send Schenley, to say nothing of Milgrim's, Patou's and Lanvin's, stocks to new highs.

The same person, Miss Hughes revealed, will have the fashion world at her feet next spring with her new "Golden Wedding yellow," only now aborning. And if the color doesn't fit them, Schenley's Golden Wedding rye may.

Lacks Authentic Ring

The trouble with the film publicists is, Miss Hughes added, that their copy, besides lacking human interest, doesn't have an authentic ring to it.

"You can't make a subject come alive with statistics," the columnist reminded the publicity men. "It isn't enough to say that there are three acres of silk and 3,000,000 spangles on Joan Crawford's new gown. What the customers want to know is how they'd look in it and if it hurts the star to sit down on that many spangles."

She offered the opinion that film publicists were neglecting a good publicity field in not placing pictures and story material on home interiors and decorating, as employed on studio sets. She recounted the experience of one publisher interested in using this material who was obliged to send to Hollywood for stills. All he received, she said, was bedroom art.

Publicist Speaks

Also on the program was Helen Hoerle, publicist, who gave her own views on selling people what they don't want and don't need by endowing their merchandise with an alluring name.

The entertainment end of the luncheon, as distinguished from the workshop end, was upheld by Rubinoff, Ferri La Franconi and Elsie May Gordon.

On the dais, alongside Gordon White, AMPA president, were Lester Grady, editor of Film Fun; Pert Kelton and Max Hofstadter and Thomas J. Brennon. The latter two discussed color processes.

Pettey Heading East

Tom Pettey, who has been substituting for Lupton Wilkinson as public relations head of the producers' association, is due in the East next week and is slated to establish contacts with exhibitors and newspapers in key cities en route.

RESTRICTIONS INCREASE

ranging from 9,000 marks in Germany to 25,000 lira in Italy and 20,000 kronen in Czechoslovakia, on each film. Besides, there are import duties, censorship cost, distribution charges and other taxes. No subtitles are permitted, such as are seen in foreign language films in this country.

Of 315 foreign pictures released in France in 1934, 224 were American. These figures clarify attempts to pass drastic decrees governing the film industry which would be so stringent as to drive American film companies out of France, imposing as they did a 30 per cent quota requirement, forcing French theatres to show a minimum of that number of feature films made domestically, giving in return an advantage in taxes to exhibitors.

Problem Still Open

Following protests by the French organized exhibitor interests and an appeal to the Government by American companies through the American embassy, the Government failed to jam through the laws by the deadline of October 31 set for their passage. They can, however, be introduced again in the Chamber of Deputies in the form of a new bill.

American distributors have not been as active in Germany since the Nazi government came into power, with its thorough campaign of regimentation and policy of fostering home industries. Some of the large companies have shifted their principal continental distribution offices from Berlin to London and Paris. While German film imports have been curtailed, the exports likewise have suffered. Italy recently extended the dubbing restrictions to films of less than 1,000 meters in length.

The Asiatic countries do not present as great a problem, and with the exception of censorship there are no limitations in Japan, China and India. Nominally, there are no restrictions in Russia, but American product receives little if any distribution in the Soviets because of what they term our capitalistic attitude. While it was announced some time ago that the 19 Russian studios are attempting to give their films a greater audience appeal and less of propaganda, the political theme continues to dominate.

Censorship an Obstacle

Censorship is a serious problem in Europe. Ireland is extremely vigilant in this respect; Italy permits no war films; France frequently prohibits the showing of military scenes in news reels. It will be recalled that the French police confiscated the news reels of the assassination of King Alexander of Yugoslavia and of the maritime strike at Boulogne.

Cable dispatches from Oslo, Norway, over the weekend said that a conference on censorship by authorities of Scandinavian countries had determined on a drastic curb of American gangster and western films as a means of safeguarding youth against criminal influence.

Sound seems to have made a major difference in regard to the attitude of European countries toward American producers, who, before the pre-sound era, dominated the world market even more than now.

In New York home office distribution circles it is pointed out that quotas and other restrictions never have contributed anything to the advancement of an artistic industry such as motion pictures, and as one spokesman put it, "you cannot quota people into a theatre."

The American view is that the various restrictions, such as that requiring the production of quota films domestically, have no commercial or artistic justification, that the only way in which the film industry of any country can be successful is not by imposing drastic decrees but by turning out marketable, quality product which of itself will find a world audience.

European countries might regard our nominal footage duty on importations as a "restriction," but aside from this the United States is a wholly free and open market subject only to investment and entertainment values. The progress made by European distributing companies in this country is pointed to as evidence of that American policy.

Central Casting to Speed Up Services

The Central Casting office in Hollywood recently inaugurated a new telephone and teletype system, designed to speed up the casting of extras. Under the new system two switchboards will handle calls for two distinct classes of extras, with each board carrying a different number. A large name board, covering an entire wall in the casting room, also was installed, so that casters may know available talent at a glance.

Tolstoi Film Remade in Sound

The Franco-Austro Film Company, Paris, France, is preparing the silent film, "The Kreutzer Sonata," in sound for release in America. The picture is taken from the novel of the same name by Leon Tolstoi.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 289.—J. L. Grant, Portland, Maine, says: "Will you ask the engineers these questions in our Bluebook School: (A) What do they consider as the best method of lubrication for a generator commutator and how is one to be certain lubrication is needed? (B) How does a split-phase start motor compare with the synchronous motor for speed regulation and how is its speed governed? (C) If the field circuit of a loud speaker is broken, but all other parts in order, would or would it not deliver sound?"

Answer to Question No. 286

Bluebook School Question No. 286 was: (A) Is there any means by which the projectionist may himself test the sound absorbing effect of the various materials employed to line theatre auditorium walls and ceilings, to ascertain which is the most effective? (B) What causes loud speakers to get out of phase with each other? How may such a condition be detected by projectionists and what is the remedy? (C) What may cause a loud speaker to develop a scratchy sound as though two metals were rubbing together and what is the remedy?

In announcing the queries, the engineering staffs of two of our best sound organizations reply as follows. The first says: "There is no easy means of measuring the sound absorbing effect of various materials that may be used for sound treatment in theatres. However, most of the manufacturers are only too willing to supply data on their materials; also published lists of the coefficient of absorption for the more common materials are available in technical magazines. We believe the data desired may be readily obtained from such sources." The second one says: "There is no easy means by which a projectionist, or even a technical man, can test the sound absorbing qualities of various acoustical materials. Such work must be done in a laboratory equipped for making acoustical measurements. However, the Acoustical Materials Association, 919 Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, has issued bulletin No. 2, dated September, 1934, in which appears all the various acoustical materials made by different companies, together with their various acoustical absorbing coefficients. I believe projectionists may obtain a great deal of useful data from this bulletin, and that with it in hand there would be small need for individual measurements."

(B) The same two groups of engineers answer. I print both for the reason that while there is no disagreement, some may understand the wording of one better than the other. First: "When two or more loud speakers operate in unison, they must of necessity be in phase. That is to say, the motion of their cones must be in the same direction when the signal to be projected is applied to the loudspeakers. About the only reason the speakers would get out of phase is that the connection to either voice coil or loudspeaker field supply has been reversed, which condition may be remedied by reversing either of these connections, since this would reverse the direction of the movement of the cone so that where formerly the cone moved outward on a particular signal, with the voice coil leads reversed, the cone will move in the opposite direction on the same signal.

"The easiest way to check the phasing of loudspeakers is to energize the loudspeaker field and use a 4.5 volt battery applied intermittently to the voice coil terminals to determine if the cones move in the same direction at the same instant of time. That is to say, when the voltage is applied the cones should all move either backward or forward. If they do not, simply reverse the voice coil leads until they do."

Second says: "by the phrase, 'loudspeakers getting out of phase with each other,' we believe reference is made to possibilities of mis-poling of the units. This may usually be determined by listening at the point where the sound from the two units overlaps, reversing the polarity of one unit and observing the difference. Or if the mis-poling be external to the unit the poling may be checked with a meter at the terminals of the loudspeaker. Usually the correct polarity of the terminals is marked."

(C) The first say: "A loudspeaker may develop scratchy sound either because of dirt or metal particles in the air gap, through a loose speech coil or a defective vibrating member. Also the fault may develop because of a loose connection or connections in the speech or field circuit."

The second say: "Usually when a loudspeaker develops a scratchy sound, as indicated in the question, it will be found that the cone is off center, with result that the voice coil is pressing upon the pole piece. The remedy in such case is of course to re-center the cone, so that it moves freely without scraping upon the sides of the pole piece. Another reason may be that the voice coil, instead of being exactly round has become oval-shaped, under which condition naturally the cone will rub or scrape the sides of the pole piece. In this case it is good policy to install a new cone."

These questions knocked most of the "boys" for a loop, though a good many were able to answer one or more of the questions correctly, or very nearly so. But out of hundreds of answers I was only able to select these very few that could, even with some straining, be classed as correct on all points: C. Rau and S. Evans; G. E. Doe; D. Danielson; H. O. Bradley; F. L. Benton; F. H. Klar, L. Klar and T. H. Morton; L. M. and C. B. Traxler; H. Polies; Nic Granby; T. Turk; M. and J. Devoy and T. Van Vaulkenburg.

Well, men, finally, at long and last the new Bluebook is ready for delivery, with most of the pre-orders now in the mail. Again I say, I am anxious to know what you think of it, as it is something wholly new in book make-up. Never anything at all like it before. Order from the MOTION PICTURE HERALD (price $5.25) and after you have had it a sufficient time to familiarize yourself with the new plan, strewing no bouquets, tell me exactly how you like it.

In this edition I have tried hard to compile a book that will provide solid, basic, fundamental instruction that, combined with the instruction booklet issued by the manufacturer of each equipment, any projectionist who studies the book and absorbs the enormous amount of information it contains on both visual and sound projection, will be enabled to handle any make or kind of projection equipment well and efficiently. Books will now be shipped out immediately upon receipt of order.

Ah, Wilderness

(MGM)

Domestic Comedy-Drama

This picture has just about all the essentials that audiences want and exhibitors demand of the screen. A domestic comedy-drama, with a problem complex, the subject matter of its story and action, geared to a modern mood, is familiar and close to the hearts of American families. Adapted from a popular and much talked about play as presented on the stage with George M. Cohan and the late Will Rogers, it is, under the guidance of intelligent direction and surging to the pitch of inspired acting, an unusual entertainment feature. In the power of its simplicity, natural humanness and reflection of problems confronting every family, it is one of the most impressive features brought to the screen in recent years.

There are many things in the picture commendable in their ability to entertain, to instruct without preaching, to play upon sentimental interests as smiles are blended with tears—entertainment features which should engage the most keen-minded showmanship. It does not seem possible that "Ah, Wilderness" will be anything but one of the season's high ranking attractions. Taking advantage of all the values it provides and selling with a zeal equal to that which unquestionably went into its making, this picture should be a great popular success. There is a possibility that certain segments of its theme will stimulate controversy, but regardless of this, the production as a whole is almost sure to win commendation from forces both in and outside the industry, which gives showmen another angle to work with.

The story is that of an average American father and his family, particularly in his relations with his ultra-modern son. It's a yarn of ordinary family hopes and ambitions, illusions and disillusionments, tragedies and triumphs. Its comedy is warm and richly human. The drama is the human drama of a father and mother who fear what is happening to their boy. Puppy love, which all adolescents adventure into with burning enthusiasm, keys its romance. In contrast to this, it has a sexy simple-boy-smart-golddigger interest about which the controversy is likely to turn.

Richard is a high school senior, wise beyond his years, considering himself a modern Sir Galahad, one of a new generation who will lead the world to a new order. The graduation exercises consist in a comedy classic, and Richard comes face to face with his first problem when sweetheart Muriel refuses to kiss him. Her father, wise to the youth and fearful of him, orders Richard's father Nat to keep him away from the girl. To the tune of a hectic old-fashioned Fourth of July celebration, the family, again burdened with swiggling Sid, goes about its daily routine in the prosaic way. But it's a horrible day for Richard. Tempted by Wint, he picks up with Belle, a chorus girl, who teaches Richard the full art of hot love making. At home, the distraught family awaits the prodigal's return. Their relief is great, even though he is gloriously drunk. Discipline necessary, Nat awaits till next day when the boy's head clears a bit. When he tries to tell his son the facts of life, drama hits a high pitch. A poignant passage follows when the now disillusioned Richard goes strolling with Muriel in the soft evening twilight, and Nat and mother Essie know that at last his footsteps are pointed in the right direction.

The manner in which the preview audience reacted to the show is indicative of the reception that can be expected with its release. It laughed and cried; time after time it burst into applause. Though Wallace Beery's name tops the list, he is merely a supporting character, as the load of the show is carried by Eric Linden and Lionel Barrymore, both of whom give accomplished performances. A show with a definite heart sock, it is also a comedy chock full of smiles and laughs. The combination is so finely balanced that the best entertainment values of each are presented. As such it is an unusual picture that demands unusual thought and care in selling. It should be sold with a type of exploitation emphasizing it as an attraction which any kind of patron, old or young, cannot afford to miss.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

My Marriage

(20th Century-Fox)

Drama

This is a story of a woman at bay. Not of a woman fighting for her life; rather of a woman fighting to hold her husband's love, protect the good name of his family, while her icy mother-in-law does everything in her power to ruin the marriage and make the girl's lot bitter. As the story is unfolded, the various phases of which occasionally make for a seeming confusion and conflict, the spectator is always aware as to which woman is right and which is wrong. Yet as the elements apparently clash, they build a suspense calculated to stimulate audience anticipation of how the yarn will resolve itself so that all is made right and everyone happy.

Treating of swanky, sophisticated people, the story is told in an unsophisticated way, as it aims its appeal at average audiences. Carol Barton's promise of a happy married future with John Tyler, scion of an austere aristocratic family, is apparently blasted when simultaneous with the murder of her supposedly respectable father, he is revealed as a super-racketeer. Befriended by Detective Dolan, an old family friend, she seeks to save Tyler and his family any dishonor by flight. He, loyal to her, follows and their meeting results in marriage. Brought to the Tyler home, Mrs. Tyler, though pretending to be happy and pleased, makes it quickly evident to audiences that she is going to wreck the marriage. Situations then make it known that Roger Tyler was an unwilling and innocent participant in the murder of Carol's father.

As Mrs. Tyler, through continual interference, makes Carol's life a torment, she leaves the family home. With Dolan still her friend, working to uncover her father's assassin, Roger follows her to her hotel. There, after confessing his part in the crime, he kills a gangster, Jones, who, bent on blackmail, has interrupted the session. Still striving to protect the Tyler name, Carol is silent as to whether he or some other man is this killer. But Detective Dolan, knowing underworld alliances, forces a full confession from a thug, Harris, which, in clearing Roger, reunites Carol with John and brings to Mrs. Tyler a realization and acknowledgment that Carol is the kind of girl she is really proud to have as a daughter-in-law.

For practical showmanship purposes, as this is a picture of woman against woman conflict, it is essentially a woman's picture. Though that conflict is the basic theme, the action which surrounds it, however, is such that recommends itself to general adult audiences. Its theme being too deep for juvenile understanding or appreciation, a campaign calculated to arouse the interest of persons more mature should be adopted.

I Dream Too Much

(RKO Radio)

Drama With Music

Packing human interest punch, aglow with natural comedy in action, situations and dialogue, tinged with just enough drama, and sparkling with operatic and modern topical music, this well produced show is potentially promising of being a delight to both audiences and showmen. In the worth of story quality and production effects, it has class and mass appeal alike, as there continually is something to interest all types. It also presents a newcomer to the screen, whose vocal ability is known, but whose flair for comedy is certain to prove a pleasing surprise to picture fans.

The story itself is interesting. It's that of a different kind of husband and wife conflict. Annette, an opera singer, and Jonathan, an ambitious but unsuccessful opera composer, awake to find that as a result of a romantic adventure they are married. Annette, like all women, wants to retire to be a simple home loving wife and have lots of babies. Yet continuance of her career brings Jonathan into social and artistic circles he never knew before. However, as is usually the case when the wife is the principal family support, the husband rebels. Still anxious to become a composer, Jonathan leaves Annette. As she goes on to greater musical success, he is reduced to a menial position. Their love nevertheless continues, and Annette, eventually finding him, takes his supposedly classic score to her manager and they combine to transfer the seriously intended composition into a musical comedy that becomes the rage of London, with Annette starred. Its success makes it possible for Jonathan to realize his ambition of being not only a great composer, but also the financial mainstay of the family. Annette retires from the stage to realize her real ambition also.

Miss Pons' singing of several operatic arias and four topical numbers is an entertainment and showmanship asset. Her screen personality more than augments these values. Fonda is convincing as the romantic hero. Comedy, mainly contributed by Eric Blore and Mischa Auer, is unusually effective for this type of picture.

Showmen have many angles at their disposal with which to sell this picture. While it devotes much of its action to operatic music, it is not a Grand Opera picture, even though it features an operatic star. While there is plenty of good music with which to attract attention from patrons of music, there is also a smartly contrived romance to interest the average person. In presenting a new screen personality, Miss Pons, it does so in a manner that lifts her potential future out of the risky class. It's almost certain that after this picture audiences will want to see her again. Fonda, of course, has been pretty well established through previous appearances, and the balance of the cast provides several good names. If the entertainment values of all the productions assets are made known to the public, this picture should fare well at the box office.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Broadway Hostess

(Warner)

Romantic Drama

Featured by torch song singing, this is a comedy-tinged romantic drama laid in New York. For a spectacular chorus dance episode, it presents an expertly contrived illusion of a group of girls rising out of champagne bubbles. Modern in atmosphere, it tells a human interest story which has for its elements romantic conflict, dialogue and situation comedy, occasional bits of drama through which punch and suspense are generated, music and production effects as described, and a surprise climax. In common with a trend noted in recent pictures it includes a chase sequence.

Opening in a manner that establishes its entertainment character, the picture presents Lucky Lorimer, Broadway night club figure, getting an embryo torch singer, Winnie Wharton, a floor show tryout. The girl clicks, and Lucky, a chiseler at heart, appoints himself her manager, bludgeoning the proprietor, Jarvis, into an unheard of salary. Her vocal ability, guided by his business astuteness, makes her the talk of the town. Climbing the ladder to wealth and fame, Winnie falls in love with Lucky, but he has eyes only for a socialite, Iris Marvin. Going Park Avenue, leaving Winnie more or less to work out her own destiny, Lucky has a romance with Iris (which has a comedy contrast in that of Fishcake and Mrs. Wemblye-Smythe) but it collapses.

Determined to get the money that will put him on the same plane as Iris, Lucky opens a gambling joint. Snobbish Ronnie, brother of Iris, loses a lot of money, and to make it good, loots the family jewels and turns them over to Lucky. The theft is reported and the gems are found in Lucky's possession. He is arrested. Winnie hearing of this would bail him out, but Iris, learning of her brother's guilt, has the influence to free the man who would "take the rap" to protect her family's name. A conniving lawyer absconds with Winnie's money, Lucky and Iris are married, and the torch singer goes into retirement. Winnie is brought back in a show financed by Lucky, featuring her in a bubble dance. There Lucky is shot by Ronnie. At his bedside the two women come to an understanding. Winnie marries Tommy, who for years has loved her in silent adoration.

While this picture makes no pretentions at being elaborate, in either story or production, it has much audience appeal, most of which lies in Winifred Shaw's singing. She has five or six specialties, and Phil Regan has one. A surprise in the picture is quite likely to be Marie Wilson, a "dumb" comedienne who is now being seen in "Stars Over Broadway."—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner-First National. Directed by Frank McDonald. Screen play by George Bricker. Photographed by Arthur Todd. Film editor, Jack Killifer. Art director, Esdras Hartley. Gowns by Orry-Kelly. Assistant director, Drew Eberson. Songs and dances directed by Bobby Connolly. Music and lyrics by Allie Wrubel and Mort Dixon. Musical director, Leo F. Forbstein, P.C.A. Your Uncle Dudley

(20th Century-Fox)

Comedy-Drama

Here's one of those clean, wholesome, laugh-packed small town business-domestic comedies that's right up the alley of those exhibitors catering to family audiences. Dealing with conditions and incidents familiar to small town and intimate neighborhood folk, it's built for laughs. Though much that happens is hokum and farcical, there is so much that is natural that it succeeds in achieving its objective of being thoroughly amusing. Fast moving, full of fun in action, dialogue and situations, even when these factors are supposed to be semi-dramatic, it concentrates on things which millions of people are familiar with, either because they have actually experienced them or know about them happening. This is an asset that should not be overlooked in the exploitation.

Humorously burlesquing the Babbitt idea, it presents Edward Everett Horton in one of his typical roles. As Dudley Dixon, enthusiastic community prestige builder, his rewards for being the "fall guy" for a lot of hard work are a collection of loving cups, while his keener minded associates garner fat profits. A Babbitt here, he's more of a one when he tries to be master of his own romantic destinies as well as head of the Dixon menage, for his shrewish sister-in-law, Mabel, has him in hot water from morning till night. She, like many mothers, has no intention of letting her daughter, Ethel, marry Kirby, or Dudley marry Christine and thus be deprived of future security. Causing the family many humorous heart aches, Christine finally goes overboard when through a little jealous dirty work, she causes Ethel to win a singing contest. That's too much for Dudley. The meek lamb becomes a roaring lion. Bending Christine to his newly found iron will, he extracts full vengeance from the club and business associates who have handed him so many trimmings, puts the skids under Mabel, forces Ethel to take up residence with her husband, Kirby, and finally finds time to get married himself.

Not a pretentious show, but one that takes full advantage of comedy essentials that have often proved of entertainment worth, it's an all-in-fun show that's fun for all. Always down to earth, it has in addition to this quality many suggestions in dialogue and situations for selling ideas, and marketing it should be an easy and pleasant task. While there may be only one so-called "hot" name with which to work, the performances of the other players are such that word-of-mouth advertising is almost certain to be favorable. Get as many patrons in to see opening performances and their reports should influence many others to see it.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Two Faces

(RKO Radio)

Farce-Comedy

Farce comedy, sandwiched in between sinister drama, this picture, in burlesquing the business of picture making and of star making, provides much audience entertainment and plenty of suggestions that should make for unique selling campaigns. Smartly blending its various elements, it starts out with vivid gangster atmosphere, turns to ridiculous comedy and winds up with a bit of drama quite likely to whirl audiences into a dither of excitement.

In the beginning, Dawson, number one gangster, dreams that if he could only eradicate his past he'd be a great picture star. Submitting to a face lifting operation, he murders the doctor, but forgets about the nurse, Mary, and takes off for Hollywood and screen fame. To forget her experience, Mary also comes to Hollywood and falls in love with a cowboy star, Tex. Crashing Producer Kellar's studio, Dawson is doing pretty well for himself, when Mary, calling on her hubby, recognizes him. She tells the publicity man, Haynes, and that worthy, whose exploits have kept himself, sweetheart (a star, Sheila) and Kellar in hot water, concocts the grand plan of presenting Dawson in a gangster picture and at the moment when the picture cops are going to corral him, have real police come in to make the pinch—an innovation in picture making. But all doesn't go as planned. Getting wise to the plot, Dawson, now Dutro, first using Sheila for a shield and then she and Haynes, stages a wild battle all over the lot until, while he and Haynes battle high up on the catwalks, police toss in gas bombs.

Different from the ordinary picture laid in Hollywood, this picture affords showmen much with which to exercise their exploitation ingenuity. Names, while adequate, are not top line, which puts the selling burden directly on the story elements. If enough of its entertainment character is made known to patrons, it

My New BLUEBOOK

The first copies of my new Sixth Edition of the Bluebook of Projection have just come to my desk and already I have writer's cramp from autographing copies for those who got their orders in early.

It is a beautiful book, substantially bound. There are 714 pages, every one packed with information. It contains a comprehensive indexing system that will enable the reader to turn almost instantly to the answer to any question which arises concerning projection.

I have spent all my life in the study of projection and years in preparation of material for my books. I have worked three years getting out this book and I am proud of the result. It is full of solid, reliable, helpful data and it is thoroughly compiled and edited.

There is a whole section devoted to sound because, since the publication of the last Bluebook, sound has become an all-important factor in projection.

My Bluebook does not contain information in the projection or the sound sections that will get out of date quickly because of major or minor changes in equipment. The book deals with basic, fundamental facts and the man who studies it and absorbs it should be able to handle any projection apparatus, sound or visual, well and efficiently.

This book is dedicated, proudly, to the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Machine Operators of the United States and Canada in the hope that it will aid its members and further improve the efficiency and quality of their work. It is a recognition of the projectionist as a master craftsman. I am happy to say that my dedication to the I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O. has been unanimously approved by the Executive Board of the Alliance.

False Pretenses

(Chesterfield)

Comedy-Drama

This picture concerns the adventures of a jobless girl and a once wealthy socialite. The girl harbors a belief that if she had the clothes and the opportunity to meet rich men she could ensnare one for a husband. The penurious socialite agrees to provide entree to the social world for the girl while at the same time incorporating her and selling shares as a means of financing her during the interim before the prospective victim has succumbed to the girl's charms. Events happen as scheduled until a former boy friend of the girl arrives on the scene and exposes her. In the end things are straightened out and the girl gets her rich husband, and what had started as a business proposition turns out to be a love match.

The picture leaves much to be desired in its story content and especially its dialogue. The direction is good, the acting mediocre with the story tending to weaken the production. The selling angle would seem to be one which emphasizes the fact that the girl offers herself on the matrimonial block to the highest bidder, or marriage as a purely business proposition. In the cast are Irene Ware, Sidney Blackmer, Russell Hopton, Betty Compton and Edward Gargan.

In the story, Irene Ware, a waitress, but with higher aspirations, loses her position through a quarrel precipitated by her boy friend, Edward Gargan, in the restaurant where Miss Ware is a waitress. She encounters Sidney Blackmer, slightly in his cups, on a bridge. Blackmer, once wealthy, is broke. Each believes the other is contemplating suicide. Blackmer invites Miss Ware to his home and while there they hatch their plans to introduce Miss Ware to society. Blackmer, as his part of the bargain, is to receive 20 per cent in the event of a settlement.

Outfitted with new clothes and accompanied by a hired chaperon, Miss Ware appears on the social scene at one of the smart summer hotels. Blackmer contrives to meet her there accidentally and introduces Miss Ware to his friends. Miss Ware, posing as a convent-bred girl, is an instant success. Of the men she meets, she prefers Russell Hopton, who is unknown to Blackmer, but Ernest Wood is the most eligible because of the known size of his bankroll. Wood proposes, but Miss Ware refuses, hoping for a proposal from Hopton. Betty Compson is skeptical of Miss Ware's authenticity, and when she accidentally meets Gargan and learns that he was Miss Ware's former boy friend, Miss Compson brings Gargan to the hotel. He meets Hopton and Miss Ware. He exposes Hopton as a former bootlegger, and Miss Ware as a former waitress.

Miss Ware flees the hotel, but Blackmer, realizing that Hopton and Miss Ware love each other, explains everything to Hopton. He proposes to Miss Ware and is accepted, and at the same time buys up all the shares that Blackmer had sold to his friends in Miss Ware, Incorporated.—Mooney, New York.

KANSAS CITY MAY LOSE PLAYHOUSE

The Shubert Theatre in Kansas City, Mo., will soon be razed to be replaced by a parking station and basement garage if plans are approved by the insurance company that holds a mortgage on the house.

The house was built in 1906 and was long the leading legitimate theatre of the town and practically every road company, when there was still a "road," stopped there at one time or another. The theatre has housed no spectacle for some years now, and if any legitimate productions come to Kansas City in the future the Orpheum probably will be their home.

Guard That Girl

(Columbia)

Mystery

A mystery film of more or less routine character, "Guard That Girl" offers little in the way of unusual material for selling with respect to cast names or treatment, making it necessary for the exhibitor to concentrate on the title and the elements of the mystery. With suspicion falling almost equally upon a number of involved persons the mystery keeps the identity of the perpetrators of the crime sufficiently under cover until the detective by simple deductions makes known the criminal's true character.

The use of arrows instead of the usual gun for the means of destruction, and a police dog, who plays an important part in the capturing of the guilty person, are two points to note. Robert Allen plays the detective who, with a fellow sleuth, Ward Bond, is hired to protect Florence Rice. Others in the cast are Wyrley Birch, Barbara Kent and Arthur Hohl.

In the story Wyrley Birch, a lawyer, hires Robert Allen and Ward Bond to act as bodyguards to Florence Rice, secretary to Bond in his detective agency and hired by Birch to impersonate a client of his, who is due to inherit a large sum of money. The lawyer has reasons to believe that the girl is in danger from five relatives, who stand to benefit from her death. The relatives, who have not seen the girl since she was a baby, demand that the lawyer produce her. The two detectives with the girl and a maid, Barbara Kent, supplied by the lawyer, motor to the family estate of the girl.

A big-game hunting arrow sticking in Miss Rice's bedroom door is the first warning of danger. The maid offers to sleep with Miss Rice and is gladly accepted. A prowler, attacked by Lobo, the police dog, leaves the dog dying. Another arrow, discharged into a boat in which Allen and Miss Rice are rowing, carries a message that the third arrow will not miss. The third arrow is aimed at the maid but does miss when the maid instinctively moves over to protect Miss Rice. Arthur Hohl, the gardener on the estate and a detective in his own right, is killed by an arrow when it appears certain he has discovered the archer. The time arrives for the probating of the will and all concerned are gathered in the library of the house when the lights go out and another attempt is made to kill the maid. The dog, recovered from his previous beating, is brought into the room and snarls at the lawyer. Allen traces the crime to the lawyer, who had been guilty of embezzlement of the family funds. The maid turns out to be the rightful recipient of the money.—Mooney, New York.

The Bride Comes Home

(Paramount)

Comedy-Romance

For primary showmanship purposes, this offers the stars of "The Gilded Lily," Claudette Colbert and Fred MacMurray. Both have subsequently scored further hits, MacMurray particularly, in "Hands Across the Table." They are supported with a well balanced cast.

This is a comedy-romance, the dramatic contrast of which (getting serious in a couple of spots when the lovers endeavor to probe their emotions) serves the purpose of providing fun for audiences watching a pair of battling lovers, menaced by a fellow who would like to marry the girl, try to get along either with or without each other.

Nicely staged, modern in atmosphere, moving with a zip and speed that occasionally becomes a bit intimate in action and dialogue, but never going overboard as far as moral qualities are concerned, it deals in colorful and alluring situations. Jack Bristow, a wealthy young wastrel, decides to publish a magazine although he has no business doing so. He's so earnest in making a success of it that he appoints his erstwhile bodyguard, Cyrus Anderson, whose ignorance of the editing-publishing business would fill a library, as editor. He further hires an old play-day pal, Jeannette, whose family fortunes have melted under depression's blast, as secretary. Starting to squabble immediately, Cyrus and Jeanette fall in love. After on again, off again romance, with Jack dashing in every now and then, old man Desmereau, who after all has an interest in his daughter's present and future, finally convinces Cyrus that the only way to tame the girl is by marrying her. They stop to analyze the matter for a couple of scenes and rush off on a most hectic elopement, with the marrying justice as much a firebrand as the bride and groom. But true to title, the battling husband gets his battling bride home and audiences have no assurance that their battling will not be continued.

Popular stuff, with a laugh almost every minute, this picture calls for a brand of exploitation that, in accentuating the comedy character, convinces patrons that it's on a par with the two stars' most recent success. Names, of course, naturally should predominate, but concise descriptions of story content should not be overlooked.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Wesley Ruggles. Based on story by Elisabeth Sanxay Holding. Screen play by Claude Binyon. Film editor, Paul Weatherwax. Art directors, Hans Dreier and Robert Usher. Photographed by Leo Tovar. P. C. A. Certificate No. 1723. Running time, when seen in Hollywood, 85 minutes. Release date, January 10, 1935 (tentative). General audience classification.

Way Out West

Entertaining

An entertaining short, this production features "The Cabin Kids," a group of five Negro youngsters whose specialty is harmonizing with comedy effects. The youngest of the group, also its leader, has an amusing habit of scratching his bald pate. The setting is laid in a typical dance hall of the Old West. Besides the songs by the Cabin Kids there are the Range Ramblers and dance interpretations.—Running time, 10 minutes.

By Request

(Vitaphone)

Tuneful

A tuneful subject, Claude Hopkins and his orchestra provide the music and Tip, Tap & Toe the dancing. By the terms of a will Hopkins and some friends receive a large box. It is found to contain a large assortment of musical instruments. Appointing himself as manager, one of the group succeeds in booking the newly formed orchestra in various engagements. They wind up a successful orchestra in a Harlem night club, where, with the addition of several acts, they put on a show.– Running time, 10 minutes.

Ladies Love Hats

Amusing

Based on the magazine story "High Hats" and featuring Ernest Truex, this short subject describes the adventures of a husband who unwittingly causes his wife to wear a hat belonging to another woman. Since this woman is regarded as a social leader and the possessor of a vituperative nature, the husband, played by Truex, is admittedly in a tough spot. But Truex turns the tables on the social leader by planting a duplicate hat in her house. In so doing Truex is caught and turned over to the police as a housebreaker, but succeeds in talking himself out of that situation while at the same time convincng his wife that his motive was to locate the duplicate hat. Others in the cast include Mary Jane Barrett, Cora Witherspoon, Raymond Knight and Earle Gilbert.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Trouble in Toyland

(Vitaphone)

Excellent

As fine a group of talented youngsters as ever have been gathered for a short subject perform in this edition of Gus Edwards' "Stars Of Future" series. Dissatisfied with many things, spinach, too many baths, baby talk, etc., a group of youngsters picket Santa Claus and his toy shop. They inform Santa that they would like to entertain in lieu of being entertained. Their wish granted and with Santa Claus and his assistant as the privileged audience, the youngsters go into their act. Joe Benny plays an accordion, Jackie Clune sings "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling," Julie Meyers imitates Aunt Jemima, Johnny Gee sings "Dinah," the McNamara Brothers dance, Jean Parrillo sings "Six Times Six Is Thirty-six," "Sugar," warbles "It's an Old Southern Custom"; Sybil Elaine sings "I Can Sew a Button" and does impersonations; the Hill sisters do an acrobatic specialty; the Catri Kids a stair dance, and Nancy Gonzales does "La Cucaracha" in finale.—Running time, 20 minutes.

The Doormen's Opera

(Vitaphone)

Novel Musical

One of the "Broadway Brevities" musicals, this short is introduced in a novel manner. Four doormen stationed in front of four prominent cafes sing a song, each pointing out the advantages of seeing his particular show. In a tour of the cafes the doormen introduce Evelyn Dall, who sings, followed by the dancing of Kay, Katja and Kay. Thelma Leeds then croons "Zing, Went the Strings of My Heart." A dance sequence is shown with 16 girls dressed in kiddie costume in a take-off of Shirley Temple. They sing "Life Is Just a Bowl of Shirleys." This is followed by another dance number called "When I Hear My Doorbell." Others in the short subject include Charlotte Arren, Johnny Broderick, Ray Heatherton and the Primrose Four.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Frank Gumm, California exhibitor, died in Los Angeles following a brief illness.

Imperial to Have Seven Features Besides Shorts

Imperial Distributing Corporation, of which William Pizor, who has long been prominent in the independent distributing field, is president, has announced it will release seven features and two series of short subjects this season. The program was divulged through an attractive campaigning book outlining the company's plans.

The features:

"Murder by Television," starring Bela Lugosi with June Collyer, Huntley Gordon, George Meeker and Henry Mowbray.

"Manhattan Butterfly," with Dorothy Grainger, William Bakewell, Betty Compson, Kenneth Thomson and Dorothy Burgess.

"Rich Relations," starring Ralph Forbes and Frances Grant.

"High Hat," from Alma Sioux Scarberry's novel.

"Penthouse Love," from the story by Alma Sioux Scarberry.

"Silver Linings."

"Second Choice," by Rob Eden.

The short subjects include thirteen Imperial Color Classics and thirteen Edgar A. Guest Poetic Gems.

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Ajax

WILD MUSTANG: Harry Carey—An average western of its class. Unlike most of the Fox, Paramount and Mascot westerns, "Wild Mustang" will not appeal to a general patronage but only to dyed-in-the-wool action fans who are willing to overlook shoddy production as long as there is wild riding across the prairie and a little Nell to be done right by. Played November 1-2.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

First National

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—The best picture we have had for some time. Full of laughs from beginning to end and pleased our audience. Better than "Alibi Ike." Played November 1-2.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—The best Joe E. Brown to date. But look who he had to help him. It's a dandy show and will please everyone who has brains enough to appreciate clever work. I call it big.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

GOOSE AND THE GANDER: Kay Francis, George Brent—Very acceptable program picture for one day. —D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

GOOSE AND THE GANDER, THE: Kay Francis, George Brent—Kay Francis is quite a favorite with my patrons and this is a lively, fast moving feature that pleased. Running time, 65 minutes. Played October 16-17.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

IN CALIENTE: Dolores Del Rio, Pat O'Brien—A little old but a fine picture.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—What a picture! Boys, it's a knockout from every standpoint. Entertainment every minute of the way It's a moneymaker and will stand anything you can give it.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho General patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—All the boys liked this one from start to finish. A number of them commented on the "true-to-life" background and action. This was the second glimpse we have had at Olivia De Havilland, and believe you me, she is skyrocketing to the top of our list of stars. A few more pictures like this and the boys will forget how to boo! Running time, 80 minutes. Played November 9.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—When I have these two stars it is just like putting a small pox sign in front of the theatre. The picture is great but I just can't get them in.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

SHIPMATES FOREVER: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—Exceptional entertainment for your best days. One of the best 10 in 1935. Lewis Stone gives a wonderful performance. Powell's best picture; Miss Keeler fine. Played October 27-28.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell, Pat O'Brien, Ginger Rogers—As fine a picture as I ever want to play. I played this after "Go Into Your Dance," "Sweet Music," "Gold Diggers," and the other Warner musicals and believe it or not, it out-drew them all!! And you know how old it is! If that isn't saying something for a picture, I don't know why! Ted Fio Rito's band excellent.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

GB Pictures

ALIAS BULLDOG DRUMMOND: J. Hulbert, Fay Wray—A very good action picture. Played on a double bill and gave satisfaction.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

MGM

AFTER OFFICE HOURS: Clark Gable, Constance Bennett—Good program picture. Running time, 71 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

ANNA KARENINA: Greta Garbo, Fredric March—This picture is much overrated and I assure you it will be disappointing at the box office the second nite. "I tank I play no more Garbo." Running time, 95 minutes. Played November 5-7.—L. H. Lano, Cozy Theatre, Long Prairie, Minn. General patronage.

ANNA KARENINA: Greta Garbo, Fredric March—An expensive and glamorous production but not what the small town customers want. Poor business on this one. Played October 19.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

ANNA KARENINA: Greta Garbo, Fredric March—Just another Garbo flop. I suppose it is a wonderful picture—at least my Garbo fans said it was—all THREE of 'em—but it didn't click here. Some wonderful scenes, especially the ball room sequence. May Robson and Freddie Bartholomew are the real stars of this one but unfortunately the producer did not know it. The final fade-out left Fredric March wondering if Greta had forgiven him and me wondering if my patrons would forgive me for inflicting this on them. Running time, 95 minutes. Played November 9-10.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Jack Benny, Eleanor Powell—Excellent. One of the best 10 of the year. Does not drag, no scenes too long, plenty of good comedy, singing and dancing. Miss Powell a wonderful dancer, good singer and actress. Played November 3-4.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

CALM YOURSELF: Madge Evans, Robert Young—One of the best comedy features we have played in some time. Real entertainment all through. Gillingwater, up to his old tricks, almost stole the picture. If you haven't played it, get it, and it will satisfy any audience. Played October 29-30.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

CALM YOURSELF: Madge Evans, Robert Young—This unpretentious little picture received the best audience response of any programmer we have played in weeks. Plenty of action.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Wallace Beery, Jean Harlow—Another of Leo's high powered, super shows with enough stars for half a dozen shows, excellent photography and about everything but good, everyday entertainment. Most of the men liked this one but too rough for the ladies. The typhoon sequence is especially good but why drag in the torture, battle, murder and sudden death? Struck a three days storm and came out in debt, besides running a show on my best dates that did not please. Running time, 89 minutes. Played Oct. 25-27.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

ESCAPADE: William Powell, Luise Rainer, Frank Morgan, Virginia Bruce—A splendid entertaining picture. Stars fine and balance of cast extra good. This is better than the usual program pictures. Story very fine. Gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

HERE COMES THE BAND: Ted Lewis—Very good; beats a lot of the so-called specials. Running time, 87 minutes. Played October 23.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

IT'S IN THE AIR: Jack Benny, Una Merkel—It may be a lot of hokum, but it is just the kind they like. Give Jack Benny plenty of rope and he will do a lot to a sick box office.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

IT'S IN THE AIR: Jack Benny, Una Merkel—This is a mighty good entertaining picture. This man Benny is certainly an entertainer and the whole cast was very good. Healy came near stealing the show. Lots of funny comedy and hokum. Well put over and it gave good satisfaction. Played November 3-4.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

MARK OF THE VAMPIRE: Lionel Barrymore, Bela Lugosi—Poor. Nothing to it. Sixty minutes stolen from the public. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Oct. 23-24.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

MURDER MAN, THE: Virginia Bruce, Spencer Tracy—Very good picture. A few people came to see it again the second night; good story and did good business. Played November 5-6.—W. A. Cassidy, Frolic Theatre, Midland, Mich. General patronage.

MURDER MAN, THE: Spencer Tracy, Virginia Bruce—Disappointing. We expected this to be an above the average programmer, but it turned out to be mediocre. The audience response was only fair.—J. W. Noab, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

NAUGHTY MARIETTA: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—A very fine singing picture. MacDonald and Eddy both very good. We played this rather old, but done a nice business just the same. Running time, 105 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

PUBLIC HERO NO. 1: Chester Morris, Jean Arthur—Better than "Let 'Em Have It" and we considered that feature tops. A swiftly paced film that is at all times convincing. Jean Arthur as the feminine lead is the standout performer in a well balanced cast of experienced players. Miss Arthur is steadily growing in popularity with our patrons, who frequently comment upon her consistently good performances.—J. W. Noab, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

PUBLIC HERO NO. 1: Chester Morris, Jean Arthur—These crime and gangster pictures simply do not bring in our class of fans. We played "G Men" with fair attendance, but did only moderately well with "Public Hero No. 1," and for this reason have cancelled "Let 'Em Have It." Show your patrons what they like. Played October 25-26.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town patronage.

PUBLIC HERO NO. 1: Chester Morris, Jean Arthur, Lionel Barrymore—Splendid. Good entertainment. A fine story. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Nov. 1-2.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

RENDEZVOUS: William Powell—It is a great show, though not on a par with "The Thin Man." The big surprise in this picture is Rosalind Russell. One or two more like this and she will be starred.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

Monogram

DESERT TRAIL: John Wayne, Mary Kornman—Not so hot as westerns go. Guess it's fair, but I have seen this star in lots better. Eddie Chandler was real good in his part. Hope we have him again soon. Wonder why we haven't seen more of him?—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marian Marsh, Ralph Morgan—We did good business with this. A good picture that will satisfy the average country theatre-goers. Played October 11-12.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

HOOSIER SCHOOLMASTER, THE: Norman Foster, Charlotte Henry—This is a dandy. Pleased everybody and brought out an exceptionally good crowd. Had I known how good this was and given it the publicity it deserves, we'd have done a real business. Play it, even if you have to play it late. Played October 27-28.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

RAINBOW VALLEY: John Wayne—The John Wayne westerns at one time spelled box-office for me, but it is impossible for anyone to make several pictures a year and make good ones, and this one is a very weak sister. Not worth playing time.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

Paramount

ACCENT ON YOUTH: Sylvia Sidney, Herbert Marshall—This one is very good, has been gotten up with snappy lines and put over by an excellent cast, and makes good entertainment for fifty per cent of the patrons. The other fifty per cent looked stunned after seeing it. Business average two days middle of week. —W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

ANNAPOLIS FAREWELL: Sir Guy Standing, Tom Brown, Rosalind Keith, Richard Cromwell—You should know before showing this picture just how wonderful it really is. First of all, it is cast perfectly; everyone connected with it turns in an outstanding performance and the picture widens the scope of the film by presenting people unknown that actually make some of the old timers look like they had been wasting their time all these years. Business less than average three days.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

ANNAPOLIS FAREWELL: Sir Guy Standing, Tom Brown—Pleased. Good picture. Sad ending. Running time, 90 minutes. Played October 27.—George E. Hall, Rose Bowl Theatre, Franklin, Neb. Small town and farming patronage.

BIG BROADCAST OF 1936, THE: Burns and Allen, Jack Oakie—Very much overrated. The stars that audience would have liked, were only given a glimpse of, while Willie West and McGinty were shown so often they got on their nerves. Will draw fairly well if played immediately before audiences who have seen it have a chance to spread the word that it isn't any good. Running time, 97 minutes. Played October 27-28.—Carmen M. Roberts, Eagle Hall Theatre, Carlin, Nev. Small town patronage.

DR. JEKYL AND MR. HYDE (Re-Issue): Fredric March, Miriam Hopkins—A very good reissue. Print and sound in top shape. Lost money on this, but no fault of the picture. Too much competition. One night a Halloween dance and next night a high school play. Oh, well, that's all in this business. We have a circus in town today and am showing "The Raven," a pretty good picture, but I know I won't have enough to run to tonight. Might as well not open my doors! Thank goodness they only stay one day.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

EAGLE'S BROOD, THE: William Boyd—Good western. "Hopalong." Not bad. Running time, 60 minutes. Played October 24-26.—George E. Hall, Rose Bowl Theatre, Franklin, Neb. Small town and farming patronage.

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: George Raft, Alice Faye—Sixth straight night of sub-zero weather. Help! I haven't gotten any of the Democrats' billions yet, but will have to if this keeps up. But this picture is a mighty swell picture. It pleased everyone who braved the cold. From an entertainment value, I would class this picture with any produced this year. By all means, play it. I only wish I could have had it in decent weather. Played November 3-4.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

HERE COMES COOKIE: Gracie Allen, George Burns—Many good laughs in this picture; really not much to it in story. Good business. Played October 29-30.—W. A. Cassidy, Frolic Theatre, Midland, Mich. General patronage.

HERE COMES COOKIE: George Burns, Gracie Allen—Not much.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

HOLD 'EM YALE: Patricia Ellis, Cesar Romero—We consider this a crackerjack, but for some reason our business decidedly off. It more than pleased those who did come out. Played October 23-24.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

HOPALONG CASSIDY: William Boyd, Paula Stone —A real he-man story that is well produced and should be played and some extra advertising placed along with it. I hope that the rest of the series are as good.—G. W. Harttmann, Armour Theatre, North Kansas City, Mo. Small town patronage.

LAST OUTPOST, THE: Cary Grant, Gertrude Michael—Good action picture for your week-end. Played November 5.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

PARIS IN SPRING: Tullio Carminati, Mary Ellis—Poor; leave it alone.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

PEOPLE WILL TALK: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—A very delightful comedy with Charles Ruggles and Mary Boland fulfilling all expectations. In spite of this pair's usual drawing power, for some unaccountable reason, our business was very poor. Played November 6-7.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

PRIVATE WORLDS: Claudette Colbert, Charles Boyer, Joan Bennett—Good picture, but it will not please all of Miss Colbert's fans.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town picture.

TWO FISTED: Lee Tracy, Grace Bradley—Played with Louis-Baer fight. Nice combination. Lots of action, laughs. Fast. Pleased. Running time, 57 minutes. Played November 1-2.—George E. Hall, Rose Bowl Theatre, Franklin, Neb. Small town and farming patronage.

TWO FOR TONIGHT: Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett, Mary Boland—Bing is sure slipping here and unless they give him something better to work in, why he will soon be through. A little more acting and story will be better than all those songs, I think. Running time, 61 minutes.—G. W. Harttmann, Armour Theatre, North Kansas City, Mo. Small town patronage.

TWO FOR TONIGHT: Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett —The only part anyone seemed to enjoy was Bing's singing. Not much of a picture to rave about. Fair business. Played November 3-4.—W. A. Cassidy, Frolic Theatre, Midland, Mich. General patronage.

TWO FOR TONIGHT: Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett —Played to very poor Sunday, Monday business. Bing has slipped. Running time, 61 minutes. Played October 20.—George E. Hall, Rose Bowl Theatre, Franklin, Neb. Small town and farming patronage.

VIRGINIA JUDGE, THE: Walter Kelly, Marsha Hunt—Just can't explain why it did not go over, but it didn't. It's small town stuff. Played November 25.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

VIRGINIA JUDGE, THE: Walter C. Kelly, Marsha Hunt—Fair program picture that my patrons enjoyed. —S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

VIRGINIAN, THE (Re-issue): Gary Cooper, Walter Huston, Richard Arlen, Mary Brian—Because of the fact that the recording is so terrible, it should not be played. The recording is six years old.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

VIRGINIAN, THE (Re-issue): Gary Cooper, Walter Huston, Richard Arlen—This is a mighty sweet picture even if it is a re-issue. The weather here was below zero, but the picture drew fairly well in spite of the unseasonable cold. Played November 1-2.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

Republic

FORBIDDEN HEAVEN: Charles Farrell, Charlotte Henry—This picture is strongly suggestive of the Fox film "One More Spring." It is just about as entertaining as the Gaynor-Baxter starred. Fair audience responses.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

SPANISH CAPE MYSTERY, THE: Helen Twelvetrees, Donald Cook—This picture compares favorably with any major company program product. If every Republic film to follow is as well produced as this, the exhibitors who have these pictures signed should congratulate themselves. Unlike most independent pictures, this film has the very best of settings, first-rate photography and sound, and good casting. The dialogue is sprightly and, in the first half of the film, faintly suggests the gayety of "The Thin Man." Donald Cook as Ellery Queen, the detective, has one of his best roles and handles it to perfection. The film never lags and keeps the patrons guessing. A capacity crowd was thoroughly entertained. The National Screen Deluxe trailer was a great asset in selling the picture.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

RKO Radio

ALICE ADAMS: Katharine Hepburn, Fred MacMurray—A very good picture from a production standpoint, but a flop at the box office. This is the first RKO picture that has lost money for us for a long time. Katharine Hepburn just don't go in our town. Running time, 100 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronge.

BECKY SHARP: Miriam Hopkins—I hope that we never have to play any more like this. A terrible flop here. A lot of color, time and money wasted on this one. Running time, 75 minutes.—G. W. Harttmann, Armour Theatre, North Kansas City, Mo. Small town patronage.

BREAK OF HEARTS: Katharine Hepburn, Charles Boyer—A very artistic picture which appealed only to our women patrons. Men hated it. I believe Hepburn is least liked by men than any actress on the screen.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

BREAK OF HEARTS: Katharine Hepburn, Charles Boyer—Not much to this one. Too long. Hepburn a washout here. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Oct. 30-31.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

FRECKLES: Tom Brown, Virginia Weiller, Carol Stone—Good picture that will draw extra business.—

R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

FRECKLES: Tom Brown, Virginia Weidler—Well liked. Drew good midweek business. Running time, 68½ minutes. Played October 22.—George E. Hall, Rose Bowl Theatre, Franklin, Neb. Small town and farming patronage.

GRAND OLD GIRL: May Robson, Mary Carlisle, Fred MacMurray—While this was not May Robson's best production, it was very satisfactory. The Community Chest entertained 600 children for this show on Halloween night. This plus our regular attendance gave us the first S. R. O. of the year. Played October 30-31.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

LADDIE: John Beal, Gloria Stuart—Good program offering to average business. Played October 16.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

HOORAY FOR LOVE: Gene Raymond, Ann Sothern—A mighty good musical picture. Lots of good, clean comedy. Gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

RAINMAKERS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—Very poor attempt at comedy. Would advise playing only one night. Running time, 78 minutes. Played November 3-4.—L. H. Lano, Cozy Theatre, Long Prairie, Minn. General patronage.

TOP HAT: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—Here's a picture anyone may be proud to present, and it will please all types of audiences, as it has plenty of good clean comedy, in addition to the splendid musical numbers. Running time, 100 minutes. Played November 9-10.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

TOP HAT: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Edward Everett Horton—It is a good show and should please 100 per cent where they like music and good dancing. Not a big knockout for me, but it pleased those that came. Running time, 100 minutes.—G. W. Harttmann, Armour Theatre, North Kansas City, Mo. Small town patronage.
